The way to sell this one is to play up the oriental atmosphere and the glamor of the "Legion." Put Lachman's name in bigger type than those of the other players, who don't mean much to the American fan any way. There is, too, a chance for a line on "Can a half-caste be trusted?"—Charman, London.

Speak Easily

(MGM)

Comedy

The story of "Speak Easily" provides an excellent vehicle for the forte of the sober-faced Buster Keaton, and he drives it home with a characterization that is faithful to the last shot. The more obvious humor of Jimmy Durante also has its opportunity in the role of the tank-town stock producer suddenly boosted to Broadway by Professor Buster's mythical inheritance. The two present a continuous tickle to the risibilities.

A word concerning the story will reveal more as to showmanship clues than a string of adjectives. Professor Post, mildewed by years in the confines of his college study, decides to see the world after a letter advises him of a $750,000 inheritance. Thrown in with a company of ham troupers, he calmly suggests he'll put them all on Broadway. His grammatical correction of a player's reference to a speak-easy provides the title for the show, and the professor's innocent ambling about the stage during the premiere makes the show a scream. It has been revealed that the inheritance letter was a hoax, but the writ of attachment loses all its potence when the show succeeds.

The humor of the situations is climaxed when the professor becomes enmeshed in some ropes and is twirled about the cyclorama, and again when he loses his hold in the flies and swings across the stage. In Keaton's expert hands these situations did not require newness to be good.

A bedroom and drinking scene and a bit of apartment dialogue take the picture out of the diet for juveniles, but for adults the showman can promise a production crammed with laughs.

Names are of course the first line of attack in the campaign. Both Keaton and Durante live up to their capacities for fun-provoking. With the names should be tied up sufficient of the story to rivet attention to the fact that the comedians have roles that cannot be anything but "naturals."—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Author, Clarence Budington Kelland. Dialogue and continuity by Ralph Spence and Laurence E. Johnson. Photographed by Harold Wenstrom. Film editor, William Levanway. Release date, August 13, 1932. Running time, 82 minutes.

Thark

(British & Dominions)

Farce

The names of Tom Walls and Ralph Lynn are Britain's biggest box office bets, and after seeing their latest film frolic it's easy to understand. Their humor is so essentially unforced and they fit so perfectly into the parts that Ben Travers writes for them that their pronunciations go at a rollicking pace to the last fade-out. And in "Thark" they have produced a farce as good as, if not better than, any they have made since they were first teamed by B. & D.

Thark Manor is supposed to be haunted, and the tenant won't be satisfied until the folk she bought it from come down and spend a night there. Ralph Lynn and Tom Walls are placed in the haunted room, after the atmosphere has been worked up to a spooky pitch. A series of extraordinary (though explicable) events do occur, and the pair spend a hectic night. There's a fair but flighty damsel involved, who spends half the night running into other people's rooms in the flimsiest of wear, a man hunt by Walls, complete with gun, and a hilarious sequence. To bind it together there's a wealth of witty (and saucy) dialogue, spoken as only Walls knows how.

You needn't be afraid of the English accent. Lynn and Claude Hulbert are the only players who suffer in this respect, and as they are both playing silly fool parts the "vice" becomes a virtue in this case. Walls, on the other hand, has a melodious Irish brogue, and he does a lot of the talking. The girls are swell lookers.

Sell chiefly on the story and the spook atmosphere. The comedy situations will also tell, as will the dialogue, which is spicy without going beyond that adjective.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by British & Dominions at Elstree, England. Story by Ben Travers. Directed by Tom Walls. Photography by F. A. Young. Running time, 77 minutes.

House of Death

(Amkino)

Drama

Frankly propaganda, this production is cemented in a mould of preachment on socialism and deviations therefrom. Yet for all the heavy curtain of drama and philosophical dialogue that hangs upon the action, there are elements of surprise, fresh touches of photography, and bits of tragi-comedy that give temporary buoyancy to the picture.

A scene of consequence, somewhat overdrawn but thoroughly Russian in its essence, concerns the massing of the political prisoners to hear the reading of their sentence. A stammerer is chosen for the task—a whim of the Czar, deliberate word-torturing of the doomed—and his struggle to speak the words is particularly prolonged as he reaches the climax—the sentence to death. After this mental agonizing, another officer announces that Nicholas has changed his mind—another premeditated move—and has ordered them to Siberia. There's food for exploitation here, a moving example of bitter-cold cruelty.

The theme, from the Dostoievski novel of the same name, is tragedy in itself; it is the story of a sincere conviction that socialism is the only system that will save the world, a conviction that is broken down by torture of mind and body by insidious intrigue and physical punishment, and death as the reward.

Music plays an important role in describing shadings of action and thought. As Nicholas eats his breakfast, a storm roars outside while a caged bird warbles a song of summer inside. And as a further touch, the young royal son toot-toots across the palace floor in the cab of a miniature railway engine.

To those who know their Russia there is a note in the fact that a player of the Moscow Art theatre—N. P. Chmelioff—takes the role of the nobleman-novelist-socialist, and two other players carry the title of "merited artist of the republic."—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced in soviet Russia by Mejrabpomfilm and distributed by Amkino. Directed by V. F. Federov. Cameraman, V. M. Pronin. Music composed by V. I. Krigkov. Scenario based upon Dostoievski's novel, "The House of Death." Adapted by Vitor Schklowski. Release date, August 12, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

Melodrama and Scenic

Superimposed upon a pictorial description of the Isle of Bali, east of Java, in the Dutch East Indies, is a story of a passion powder (whence the title of the production), a betrayal, and two murders.

The camera record and story are by Andre Roosevelt, cousin of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, and Armand Denis, of Eastman Kodak Company. Mr. Roosevelt also gives the narrative.

The exhibitor may well promise his patrons a picture of an island noted for its scenic beauty, and of its native life. Most of the action takes place within the walls of the village and temples and homes and in the streets, but the scene of a high point of the melodrama itself is one of the beauty spots of the production.

Emphasis should be placed upon the scenic phase, coupled with an attention-arresting word or two regarding the tragedy that lurks in a love that attempts to break through the caste system of centuries of tradition.

But to the community outside the large cities any dwelling upon the meaning of the title might bring down the wrath of self-anointed-censorial gods. And if they thereafter witnessed the picture and noted the camera's confirmation of the narrator's words to the effect that nudity above the waist is the native mode, except for ceremonials, they might consider their objections well-grounded, even if unjustifiably so. Prudishness seems to draw a line of distinction between newsreel and other content, which is just another of the vagaries, though it is true of course that newsreels also have met with senseless restrictions.

All of which is mentioned to explain why it appears that the exhibitor would do well to emphasize the scenic and travel aspects of the production, and the native music and dance, adding a word regarding a story of native romance and duplicity.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

A melodrama of the Isle of Bali, created by Andre Roosevelt and Armand Denis and distributed by Principal Pictures. Symphonic score by M. M. Kross Hartmann and Marcel Devaux, assisted by the Royal Balinese Gamelan Gong Orchestra of Belaloean. Original Balinese dances by the Legong Dancing Girls. Narrative by Andre Roosevelt. Likable Sennett Product

A new radio personality, Don Novis, is really introduced to picture fans in his own right, although he has received credit in several features. Take it as a quiet tip-off, here is a boy who is going to give Bing Crosby a run for popularity. The story is about a young radio singer, who clicks over the air after the company's baritone star gets temperamental. There's a lot of funny comedy contributed by Gribbon, and the dialogue and expression of Vince Barnett and Jesse DeVorska, as the two producers, should keep your audiences in an uproar. The big hit is Novis' singing. He sings "Sweet and Lovely," "Star Dust," "Charmaine" and "Sylvia." Use those song titles in your lobby advertising and publicity. Running time, 18 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Get That Lion

(Principal)

Excellent

Thoroughly enjoyable, primarily for the scenic background as well as for the action itself is this picture of Arizona and the tracking of the cougar by Floyd Pyle, lion hunter. The simple story is sufficient for its purpose, a frank study of the trailing of the lone killer into his mountain fastnesses. The drama of the hunt is subservient to the ever-changing setting, but the photographing of the lion's slinking but resourceful retreat and the final lassoing after he has been treed by the dogs makes the production decidedly likable. A lecture accompanies the unfolding of the action.—Running time, 29 minutes.

Lively, Interesting

An excellent short, this combines fan interest with a lively horse show. Pictured is the famed annual cowboy rodeo on the western ranch of Hoot Gibson, with all the hard riding, steer wrestling and fancy riding included. The roving camera picks up shots of various well known screen stars in the stands at the rodeo, in unconventional pose and enjoying themselves to the full.—Runing time, 9 minutes.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Local exhibitors got their first idea of what they may expect in the new season's pictures last week. What these films may do at the box offices becomes a doubly important question right now since many theatres have resolved to throw the double feature policy overboard.

McVickers theatre, reopened in new dress, launched the first of Paramount's new product, "Horse Feathers," starring the Marx brothers. And what an opening it was. Crowds just like in the days of '28 and '29, to put it in the words of Barney Balaban.

State street merchants, the folk who run Mandel Brothers, The Fair, Marshall Field, Boston Store and other notable establishments, were so elated over having the McVickers lights flashing again that they were all on hand for the first performance.

Warner Brothers also gave the exhibitors a look at their new product in a series of trade shows which are part of a national exhibit staged by the company. The Warner films were shown at the Dearborn theatre and at the Stevens hotel.

And along the same line Dave Dubin invited exhibitors to a special preview of the Educational-World Wide feature, "The Last Mile," also at the Stevens.

In addition to McVickers, Balaban & Katz reopens the United Artists theatre August 26. "White Zombie," United Artists, was the initial attraction. B. & K.'s Paradise is also understood to be slated for an early return to action.

And if the foregoing doesn't indicate that things are beginning to pop, here are a couple of more things to consider:

The ultra modern appearance and arrangement of the Columbia office has been achieved under the direction of Bill Brumberg. It's worth inspecting.

Educational is stepping out, determined to do things in a bigger and better way by adding two new names to its sales force. They are Frank Flaherty, who will cover the Southside, and Oscar Florine, who will look after southern Illinois.

Over at Security Pictures Harry Lorch, the new associate and general sales manager, is pitching into his new duties with a vengeance.

Chicago's fame as a summer resort brought Julius Lamm of the Variety theatre, Cleveland, here with his family to spend their vacation.

Sol Best, former exhibitor, has joined Capitol Film Corporation as city salesman.

Courshon and Solomon has opened the Portage Park theatre with a policy of double features, having completely remodeled the house and equipped it with many unusual features.

J. R. McPherson, local branch manager of National Screen Service, is teasing the muskies up around the Eagle River country.

Ennis Marks 21st Year in Industry

Bert Ennis, veteran motion picture publicist, celebrated his 21st year in the industry last week, August 17, to be exact.

Ennis entered the industry in August, 1911, as assistant publicity man for Vitagraph, where he originated the idea of supplying music cue sheets for exhibitor use. Next he became director of publicity for Keystone and Broncho, handling the first publicity and advertising issued on Charles Chaplin, Mabel Normand, Tom Ince, Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling, Charles Ray, Roscoe Arbuckle and other early-day stars. In 1914, he assumed charge of publicity and advertising for Eclair Films.

From then on he engaged in production, distribution and theatre management. He managed and publicized Fox's Japanese Gardens, first de luxe theatre on upper Broadway, introduced Barbara La Marr via an international campaign, and handled publicity and advertising from the inception of the Roxy in 1925, by Herbert Lubin, until the house opened in 1927.

He resigned as director of exploitation, publicity and advertising for Columbia Pictures early in 1932 and a short time afterwards was engaged by the Kosch interests to direct similar activities for the Roxy, resigning last week.

Concurrent with his motion picture activities, Mr. Ennis has been responsible for various magazine articles and syndicated features, including a Broadway column called "Manhattan Mutterings."

JENKINS' COLYUM

Decatur, Ill.

Dear Herald:

When we called at the Woodbine theatre in Carthage, Ill., we found Justus Garard stripped for action. All he had on was a pair of pants and an undershirt (the Illinois statutes require that much) and he impressed us as a working scoundrel, and if he doesn't fix it as the "woodbine twineth" around the Woodbine then there's no twineth-inner.

Justus says he can't understand how any theatreman can operate a theatre without Motion Picture Herald. That boy's noodle is working 100 per cent.

Last night at the Lincoln Square theatre we saw Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in "The First Year." Janet cried in the picture as easy and natural as she used to when her mother spanked her. It has always been our belief that her mother spanked her many times when there was no good reason for it. You know they can spank a kid too often.

Keokuk, Iowa

Keokuk has 17,000 people and two theatres. We couldn't find the manager, but we met the man who does the chores around there and his report of the business was not such as would incline us to want to build a third one, although some concerns might, and in many spots much less promising they have. Here is where they built that big dam across the Mississippi . . . and where power is generated to light about all the dark spots in Illinois, Missouri and Iowa. Below this dam there are catfish as long as a hoehandle and if Keokuk asks for anything more she is asking too much.

Iowa City, Iowa

There are four theatres here. Two too many. The Blank Enterprises own two of them and the other two are independently owned and operated.

One of the Blank houses was recently destroyed by fire and they are now rebuilding it and expect to have it ready to open by October.

Albert Davis is the local manager of these two houses and he impressed us as having a knowledge of what it's all about.

Punch Dunkle is the operator of the Pastime, one of the independent houses. Punch said we ought to be ashamed of ourself for not calling on him before. We wouldn't want to say that Punch is fat, that wouldn't be nice, but when they weigh him he has to get on the hay scales. Punch is a good-natured guy and for that reason he is very popular with Iowa City people. Iowa City is a beautiful town of about 20,000 and she has a college and a lot of nice looking girls, but most of the men wear seersucker clothes, the same as they do in Decatur.

Grinnell, Iowa

This is the town where they had that terrible tornado some years ago.

There are two theatres here, both of them closed when we called, but there is probably a reason for that. There is a factory here that makes the balls used in playing "kitten ball," and here is where "kitten ball" originated. This is a game that is played at night by electric lights and it draws like a mustard plaster when it once gets started. The game is on tonight and there are at least five hundred men, women and kids seated around the field yelling for their favorite team. When this kitten ball craze hits a town the business houses, especially the theatres, might just as well close up, for it is worse than smallpox and diphtheria. Besides that, there is a dramatic stock company playing here under canvas at 10 cents, and that's competition that no theatre can buck.

Iowa seems to be the mecca for tent shows. It seems that just about every rag opera heads for Iowa as soon as the ground thaws out in the spring, and they stay until the snows drive them out in the fall, and every theatre in the state has this competition to meet some time during the season, and some of them two or three times.

Never in their history have Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska raised such a corn crop as they have this year. If you want to see a sight for sore eyes drive anywhere through the corn belt.

The question is, what will they do with it? The two Dakotas are proposing a year's vacation and not plant anything, but by gosh we're agin that, for that would send all their grasshoppers over into Nebraska to get something to eat, and we've got troubles of our own. If we lived in either of those states we'd favor that plan, for both states border right on Minnesota and that's where all those lakes are that are just crammed with bass and walleyed pike, and if we were a farmer a year's vacation would suit us.

Anyhow, don't let Susie chew her finger nails, nor Willie eat any green apples, and be sure to put the cats out at night.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man

Society Woman Runs Theatre

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, internationally known society woman, has leased the motion picture theatre at Middleburg, Va., remodeled it, installing a cooling system and sound equipment, and brought P. E. Banks from New York as manager, according to the Universal Service, news agency.

Rathner Opens Boston Exchange

Harry Rathner has acquired the New England franchise of Principal Pictures and has opened an exchange in Boston, with another in New Haven contemplated. Principal plans 12 adventure features for the season.

Goldberg Warner Exploitation Chief

Lou Goldberg, who has been in charge of exploitation at Warners' Broadway theatres, has been promoted to the newly created post of exploitation manager of all Warner-First National pictures, by S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of advertising and publicity.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

WANTED: REAL SHOWMEN!

IT IS NOT OUR INTENTION to holler "We told you so," or any other stereotyped remark, because the subject is much too serious to be trifled with. But we cannot refrain from emphasizing the fact that for the last two years we have been sounding warnings that a terrible mistake was being made when the national circuits started to drop their better managers who were getting fairly high salaries and cutting the rest of them down to the bone and then a little more.

Circuit arguments, notwithstanding, the house manager is the most important part of any theatre. You can hire the finest brain-power in the universe to sit in the home office and wax efficient or otherwise, but unless the manager on the job is the right man for the job your expensive brain-power is wasted.

There is no denying the fact that a good, competent manager is worth lots more than an inexperienced though well-meaning chap who might be willing to work for half the money. He can only be worth the little he is paid up to a certain point. When you pass that certain point he is nothing more than an elevated head usher.

Running a theatre calls for a wide range of activities. A good manager must be a good advertising man, a good mixer, an outstanding promoter, a diplomat, a driver, a planner, and a hundred and one other "good" things, all in addition to being a darned fine showman.

No man can be expected to become efficient at so many things overnight. He gets that way through the hard school of knocks and experience. He makes his mistakes count for improvement as he goes along. He knows, understands and, above all, loves his job. Failing such qualifications, he cannot be rated as a good investment for any theatre.

Showbusiness boasted of many men like this. But so-called circuit efficiency threw them or drove them out of the business. Now we need them—and need them badly.

NOW WE COME TO THE GOOD NEWS: It is highly significant that the heads of one of the largest circuits have just decided to bring back the men who operated their theatres so profitably and efficiently a few years back. They have come to the sensible conclusion that if prosperity and good business is to be a reality they must once again depend upon good, capable managers to accomplish it.

But they have overlooked one point, apparently, in their plans. They seem to have lost sight of the fact that they have on their payrolls at this time quite a few of the best showmen in the country—men who have made unusual records for accomplishments in the past but who are lacking in pep and ambition now because they are no longer actual managers of the houses they are running or getting salaries sufficient to live on.

Careful weeding out will be necessary if the circuits are honest in their desire to start getting back to showbusiness via showmen. They must pick the good men from the "clucks" and investigate the past history of every man now with the company to determine whether that man can lay claim to being one of the real showmen needed.

Elevated doormen, unseasoned assistants and relatives having been tried and found to be sadly wanting in many ways, we now turn to the men who have made theatre management a life's work and understand it from every angle. Give them a free hand to run their individual situations as they did previous to 1930 B.C. (before cuts) and they will deliver the goods. Eliminate the needless red tape from the home office. Stop hounding the men for foolish reports and long-drawn-out statements. Emphasize the fact that each man will be responsible for the success of his own operation and must stand or fall by what the weekly statement shows. Then see what happens.

But don't spoil the effect and again break down the morale of the entire organization by wholesale salary cutting, spying, picking and countless other evils. Construct, don't destroy. Encourage, don't discourage. And, above all, pay them a living wage so that they are not constantly worrying about the rent, and with the opportunity to put aside a dollar or two every week so that they can really feel that they are getting somewhere.

What a joy it should be to find, once again, a mass of real showmen battling loyally to keep in the black and stay there; to visit and listen to cheerful optimism rather than present-day pessimism; to know that showbusiness is presenting a solid front of real showmen who can run their theatres profitably and efficiently so long as they are permitted to do so.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

We might caption this a lesson in discipline, but then there must be some managers who have a better title for it. Be that as it may, it behooves us to put the lowly help in their place and demand the amount of respect due us. These ushers must learn once and for all just who the boss really is. (That is, if we know ourselves.)

CHET MILLER'S BIG OLYMPIC STUNT WAS GOOD FOR BOX-OFFICE

A report on the Olympic Contest held by Chet Miller, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo., is in and his idea certainly went over in great shape. All the contestants were satisfied, merchants reaped fine results and everyone was happy.

One of the highlights of the deal was the running of a full page cooperative ad each week, in addition to a big double truck and small ads in between. A front page story broke nearly every day.

Each Friday Miller had the contestants on the stage and gave the one who received the most applause 50,000 votes. The first night was called "Introduction Night," and second Friday night was billed as "Hidden Identity Night," with all girls masked for the occasion. The third Friday night was run in connection with the picture "Million Dollar Legs" and a real old fashioned leg contest featured the show. During finals the girls receiving the most applause were given a million votes to add to their totals, an incentive for all to work hard until the last night, when awards of the free vacation trips were made.

Full details of Chet Miller's big, free vacation trip stunt were carried in the July 23 issue of this publication and the above is just to let his fellow Round Tablers know that it was successful as a business builder. It was a corking piece of promotional work on the part of Miller and he is to be congratulated for his enterprise.

BRENNER IS USING UNIQUE METHOD TO KEEP DOWN BUDGET

Considerable ingenuity in the matter of getting around expense attached to engraving and die-cutting for novelty throwaways, doorhangers, etc., has been displayed by Ray Brenner and his staff at the Princess Theatre, Newcastle, Ind.

He has solved his engraving problem by using a unique cut; that is, a block of one-quarter inch linoleum for the carving of the design in reverse and then mounting it high on a wooden block. This is used the same as type in the printing press. Sometimes, a second substitute is used, as in the case of a Will Rogers standee we have at hand. An exchange mat was used for the Rogers illustration and a linoleum tint block made for the second color.

Instead of die-cutting he has the printer take especial care to secure an accurate register on the press. Then the printed cards are tacked down on top of the work bench, in stacks of about 30 sheets, and cut with the cut-awl. This is not nearly as difficult as it sounds, Brenner tells us, as the average standee or doorknob hanger can be cut this way at the rate of about 1,000 per hour.

He has also employed another successful substitute for engraving, as in the case of a card we have of George O'Brien and his horse. It's a gag for the kiddies, with cut of horse on one side and cut of rider on the other. It's attached to a pencil-shaped stick that, when revolved slowly between the palms of hands, produces an effect of a rider on a bucking broncho. When preparing this one he used a chemical called engrave-ink. When this is applied to enameled blotter stock with a drawing pen, then left to dry and placed in a casting box, it can be used as a mat for making cuts or type.

This process is more difficult to use, but if carefully done, brings very satisfactory results at low cost. The hot metal in the casting box causes a chemical reaction to take place, swelling the ink to many times its original proportions, and pushing the hot metal back in the shape of the drawing. Its success depends entirely on temperature of the metal in the casting.

We have a few snapshots of fronts made for the Princess and while these are too faint for clear reproduction, we'll go on record in stating that it's a good example of what can be accomplished without the aid of a regular artist. Brenner and his doorman, with the help of a toy lantern projector, a cut-awl and a penchant for exotic color schemes, generally manage to create effects that catch the natives' eyes and sell them some extra tickets.

We'd also like to reproduce a one-sheet made by the linoleum cut process explained in an above paragraph, but this, too, is in colors and would not justify reproduction. However, it's a darned good looking piece of work and well illustrates the possibilities of the process. The picture it plugged was played before the lithos were turned out for distribution, hence the special job.

Without a doubt Brenner, his aides and that good old cut-awl, plus a sheet of linoleum, form an ingenious combination, and we know his suggestions will be appreciated by many other managers similarly situated. If we haven't explained his stunts to full satisfaction, we feel sure that a line to him will bring detailed information.

MADDEN PUT OVER A FINE CAMPAIGN; SENDS US POSTER

Following is a resume of the campaign made on "Alice In Wonderland" by J. J. Madden, manager of the Granby Theatre, Norfolk, Va., and a reproduction of a hand drawn poster he used on "Million Dollar Legs."

Work on "Alice" included the sending of a representative to a nearby beach where 500 children were picknicking; contact made with all public school teachers through school board executive; promotion of paid ads and readers in two newspapers, cost of which was absorbed by a local club; installation of booths on two main streets, from which club members sold tickets for show; two announcements daily by local broadcasting station; posting of eight 8-sheets, one hundred 1-sheets; use of a marquee banner and lobby cutout; house to house distribution of 5,000 heralds in all sections of city; trailer on screen two weeks in advance; tie-ups with two newspapers for classified page, netting 123¾ inches, and a selling talk on picture to 300 graduates of the High School.

The above was a no-expense and no-pass campaign as far as the theatre was concerned and typical of Madden's work at the Granby. Without a doubt he had a whole lot of influential citizens and clubs working for him. As to his poster, it looks just like the words that spell the title of the picture it was made for and we're sure it will be of interest to many other members of this organization. Keep up the good work, J-J, and let us hear from you as often as you can find time.

Some realistic atmosphere was employed to exploit "Scarface" by Mac Krim, manager of the Lasky Theatre, Detroit, Mich., as the accompanying photo will bear out.

To provide a proper setting for the three tough looking yeggs you see in the picture he placed a pile of rocks on the right hand side of the box office and a prison cot in the corner. Then he gave each of the boys a sledge hammer and instructed them in the art of "making little ones out of big ones." A guard, with a billie in one hand and a rifle in the other, kept his eyes glued on the prison-uniformed trio. At other times they'd knock off with the sledges and shoot dice, play cards or otherwise amuse the passing crowds of people. In the afternoon the trio and guard took to the streets, sometimes running loose with the guard chasing them and shooting blanks. This continued until the entire neighborhood was covered. Brass knucks, machine guns, billies and other articles were displayed in the theatre lobby. A special beaver-board front also lent to the general scheme.

The above sure was bringing atmosphere to the lobby and without a doubt it must have created a mild sensation in the Lasky's neighborhood. Thanks to Mac Krim for remembering that he's a Round Tabler. We'll hope to hear from him again.

STERNBERG AND WINSTANLEY, TOO!

There were so many district managers responsible for the fine showing made by Walsh's Publix Division during Sam Katz Week that when we originally reported some of the activities from that group we stated that we could hardly hope to find enough space to take in every one of them.

However, there is no question but that special mention is due Bert Winstanley of the Scranton District and R. M. Sternberg of Wilkes Barre District for the important part they played in the success of this unusually fine campaign.

Team work always counts in such campaigns and these two men, as well as others too numerous to mention, can well be proud of the showing they made individually and collectively.

RADIO'S SMASH CONTEST!

RKO Backs Up "Phantom of Crestwood" With Nationwide Air Hook-Up and Exploitation!

EXPLOITATION plans which make campaigns of the past seem trivial have been completed for the Radio Broadcast Special which RKO Radio Pictures is about to launch. The plans have been condensed in brief detail for your information.

The largest single factor will be, of course, the utilization of the facilities of the National Broadcasting Company in placing before literally countless millions of persons the radio story which has been adapted from Radio Pictures' "The Phantom of Crestwood." Beginning August 26, and continuing weekly until just prior to the national release date of the "Phantom," a radio dramatization of the story will be presented in six weekly instalments ending September 30th. The episodes will be broadcast over fifty-eight NBC Red Network stations.

Final Episode Withheld!

The story will not be given in its entirety over the air. The final episode will be withheld, and 100 cash prizes, totaling $6,000, and led off with a first prize of $1,500, will be awarded to the listeners who, after hearing the dramatization, submit the best original endings for the story. These prize endings will have for obvious reasons, no bearing on the ending as it will be seen in the picturization of "The Phantom of Crestwood," inasmuch as the picture will be released coincidentally with the completion of the contest, which will close October 10. The release date has been set at October 14, for the key cities in the United States and Canada.

The ramifications of the campaign will be tremendous. Radio set owners, motion picture fans, newspaper readers, fan magazine readers—and, inevitable, all persons with whom these vast potential audiences come in contact, will learn about the picture well in advance.

Story Is Well Known!

The story of "The Phantom of Crestwood" is an original screen story, written exclusively and especially for Radio Pictures by Bartlett Cormack. It is a thrilling mystery story, replete with new and novel situations, which finally permit of several possible, consistent solutions. It readily lent itself to adaptation for radio continuity, prepared by Finis Farr, one of the foremost script authors of NBC. The radio cast, for the presentation over the air only, has been hand-picked after a series of secret tests. The radio series will be presented up to a tense, climactic point, leaving the listeners, whether or not they enter the contest, curious to see the picture to learn the ending. To facilitate entering the contest and to stimulate interest among persons who miss the early chapters, a brief, but complete, synopsis of story previously broadcast will be given at the opening of each broadcast.

Get full details, rules and other data regarding the contest from your local RKO exchange or write direct to their home office in New York where Leon Bamberger is looking after all the contest material.

The names of the winners will be announced on Thanksgiving Day, November 24, 1932, and arrangements are being made to have them broadcast. The entire 100 prize checks will be given to the winners at the earliest possible moment after the selection of the winners, and awards are expected to be made on the stage of the theatres which the winners patronize.

Fan Mag. Tie-Up!

Meanwhile the fan magazines for September—which are on the stands in August—will feature the radio dramatization and cash prize contest, to be followed by advertisements in the October and November issues designed to attract the public into the theatres to see the finished picture. The total circulation to be reached by these advertisements is 5,260,002 persons. Figuring on a basis of three readers to a copy (the standard ratio), more than 15,780,000 persons will have seen the full page advertisements.

In addition, three different advertisements will be taken in key city dailies which have a total guaranteed circulation of 18,130,811, or, multiplied by three, more than 54,000,000 readers per issue. The first two ads will be 100 lines each, and the third, 50 lines, and will be displayed on radio program pages, playing up the radio dramatization and cash prize contest.

Many Free Accessories!

A 100-foot free advance trailer has been prepared, and 1,000 prints will be distributed by National Screen Service throughout the United States and will contain contest data, broadcast dates, etc. Free contest information heralds will also be distributed. These free information heralds are aimed for distribution at the theatres, and will be available to radio listeners and readers at all RKO theatres, all theatres which sign "The Phantom of Crestwood," any RKO Distributing Corporation branch office, the home office of RKO Distributing Corporation, and the Radio Pictures Studio in Los Angeles.

Free advance one-sheets, playing up the broadcasting and contest, will be sent out early in August to all theatres contracted for the picture. A special exploitation manual will be sent out in addition to the regular press sheet, more elaborate than on the ordinary picture, and containing an unusual wealth of ad, publicity, and exploitation material.

This outline has only sketched roughly the prodigious campaign which has been mapped out for "The Phantom of Crestwood."

Notice to Members:
PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.—THANK YOU.

A. P. KAUFMAN DEAD

Albert P. Kaufman, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., and one of the best known showmen in upper New York State, died recently at a local hospital. He was associated with the M. E. Comerford interests, at one time managed the Great Lakes Theatre at Buffalo and was an enthusiastic member of the Round Table Club.

MAX MELINCOFF MADE FINE LOBBY DISPLAY FOR AFRICAN PICTURE

The accompanying photo shows a special lobby arranged one week in advance of "Congorilla" by Max Melincoff, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., a display which turned out to be one of the best he ever used in showbusiness.

All the props you see in the picture, including crocodile, palm trees, shields and spears, were borrowed for a few passes. Two colored boys, one small and the other a husky specimen of his race, and a white hunter, lent further color to the general scheme. Joseph Quinn, Warner artist, was responsible for the placing of six large paintings depicting African jungle life on the four walls of the lobby.

Melincoff's work at the Palace, often described in this department, is always interesting and we're glad to hear that his attractive lobby helped put the picture over. This film is current at this writing and maybe some other Club members will find an opportunity to promote material for a similar display. In the meantime, we'll be watching for further reports from Max.

EVIDENCE THAT JAKE ROSENTHAL IS STILL ON JOB IN WATERLOO

Not to be outdone in the matter of getting out little novelties for the exploitation of pictures, Jake Rosenthal (The Great Jake), manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, issued a card a short time ago on "Two Seconds" that carried a metal replica of a small watch in the upper right hand corner. The caption read "Watch Out For the Greatest Picture Of All Time" (cute, eh?). Balance of copy consisted of data on Robinson and picture and a thumbnail cut.

The above card blew in with the morning's mail a short time ago without any further information from Showman Rosenthal or members of his staff on what's taking place at the Iowa. Next time we report on this enterprising Club member maybe we'll have a lot more to tell about his activities.

This Business of TRAILERS!

To supply trailers regularly to theatres requires forethought, planning, ORGANIZATION. This is not a hit-or-miss matter, not a side line incidental to some other business. THIS IS A BUSINESS IN ITSELF—a highly improved cog in the machinery of purveying amusements to the public.

Our trailer business did not spring into being full-grown. Its inception is rooted in the beginnings of the motion picture, and its development has kept pace—through alternating periods of hardship and success—with the growth of the industry.

Today our trailers are supplied to Exhibitors through a highly organized service which is the result of years of experience in meeting the needs of theatres of all classes in all parts of the country. The requirements of these theatres have built that great SERVICE INSTITUTION in the motion picture business which is known as

A BRIEF ON LAYOUT!

R. D. Long, Art Director for RKO in Salt Lake City, Offers Some Interesting Ad Slants!

IN expressing my ideas on the principles of designing layouts for theatrical newspaper advertising, I find them rather difficult to set forth in an article as short as this. Some of these principles may seem a bit obscure as space will not permit thorough or detailed explanation.

Opinions on the proper manner of design are seldom uniform among advertising and layout men. Each one has his individual ideas of construction—the result of varied sources of experience as well as training. However, the accompanying illustration contains a layout technique which I have reason to believe will become useful and very popular in the future. It is decidedly a new departure for theatre advertising. Although it does not provide that common theatrical atmosphere that so many strive for, a little study of the cut proves that it has other advantages which in my opinion are of more value.

Points to Consider

As to the technical points of a layout the first thing to consider is the selection of an individually distinctive arrangement that indicates close relationship with the idea it contains. A design flexible enough to allow changes in each ad that will hold a continuity of appearance. Family resemblance should always exist in the ads during the run of one attraction.

All units entering into an ad should be arranged into interesting sections. The most interesting sections are always unequal in size. It is this inequality that makes a layout attractively conspicuous. Along with this division comes the necessity of locating important units strategically for the purpose of holding the reader's attention.

When possible, place the first word of the catch-line at the focal point which is 3/5 up from the bottom of the ad and 2/5 over from the left side, theoretically.

The layout man must place the emphasis where the manager wants it of course and then arrange the rest of the units accordingly to make a pleasingly attractive design. It is this eye-pleasing phase of appearance along with the use of white space that attracts and in a measure helps to hold favorable attention.

To keep out any awkwardness in the design have the units so arranged that the small black sections will balance the larger grey sections of type in the general structure.

Copy Must Fit

Copy should always be written to fit a layout. Many catch lines can be changed, yet still convey the original thought intended.

The layout should be worked out and the illustration shaped to fit into a complete design. The picture should emphasize the copy and be tied in with it. To isolate the picture would tend to loosen the whole design and weaken the effect. Personally, I favor the use of photos rather than pen sketches. A photo conveys more emotion, expression and realism.

Borders are sometimes needed for small one-column ads. With two-column ads borders are seldom required. Why waste space with thick, black borders when all other ads on the page are usually masses of black . . . all yelling for prominence with questionable success? If other theatres go in for the same style, then the black ads offer advantages, but it will be a long time before they all change to lighter design.

When a border is used do not surround the complete ad, have breaks . . . openings to let the eye in and also to make your border serve another purpose. A border can direct the eye-flow as well as carry atmosphere and still be a border. The eye flows or travels similar to the manner of water and sometimes it will go around a dark spot or border rather than over it. That is why even small panels in the layout . . . panels constructed with a hairline should have an opening.

The "eye-flow" is very important and should be watched carefully so that it automatically travels throughout the entire layout . . . reading all the copy it should when it should!

With the Club pages devoting so much space to newspaper ad construction through the use of exchange mats we must not lose sight of the important person known as an ad artist, or art director if that title pleases you (or them) better.

Hand drawn ads are of great importance. That point we want to get across right away. Just because we are emphasizing the possibilities of ads made up with exchange mats and rule must not give birth to the thought that we are not aware of the effectiveness or necessity of the hand drawn material.

Here is an article by R. D. Long (no relation of Ken Long's) art director of the RKO Orpheum Theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah. We read it through and liked it, so here it is for your perusal and possibly for a good chance to absorb some fundamental facts about advertising which you may not have appreciated in the past or understood as well as you should.

Many of the points brought out in Mr. Long's article can also be applied to those making up their own ads without the aid of an ad artist, which makes it all the more valuable.

We hope R. D. Long will be a regular contributor to these pages as his knowledge of newspaper advertising is wide enough to warrant lending him your ear whenever he is gracious enough to address us through our Club pages. "CHICK"

Pointing devices are also good and careful thought to this angle often reveals ways in which photos can be retouched to give them pointing power.

The lettering should be as legible as possible and of the styles closely related to type faces the public is accustomed to reading, such as Bodoni, Caslon and Century. Vogue is a good style for distinctiveness, feminine appeal and modernism. The title should be atmosphere of the thought it contains.

Use One Style Type

An ad should contain only one series of type, including the title if an appropriate alphabet cannot be found for title expression.

Plenty of white space around the catch line induces reading.

The first letter or the word of the first paragraph should be heavier or larger, enlisting a two-line initial letter or all-caps for the entire word. This darker spot induces reading. . . . It attracts. . . . It is inviting! Indent all following paragraphs. Make your paragraphs short or they will scare the reader away by their heavy or monotonous appearances.

Rules of construction as other regulations are made to be broken when the occasion warrants. Common sense must govern the use of this construction formula as well as all others.

Organizing Mickey Clubs

Harry E. Nichols, former field representative of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is out in the field for the Disney Studios doing organization work on Mickey Mouse Clubs. Under a new plan, in which he has discarded the use of badge and button, he has already established 190 clubs in Oklahoma and Texas territory. His success is based on impressing club sponsors with the civic angle. Perhaps Nichols will send full details of his plan to this department.

Many of our members have organized these clubs and they'll be interested in new ideas.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Just one of those things that make life so sweet——?

HERE'S A BALLYHOO USED BY CARROLL TO SELL BACHELOR FILM

Among stunts recently used by Glenn Carroll, manager of the Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kansas, was a novelty ballyhoo on "Bachelor's Affairs," as the accompanying photo will illustrate. The muscular young lady at the helm of the baby buggy is not a lady at all, but a member of the ballyhoo team. His full-grown pal in the buggy is dressed in costume to take the part and is smoking a cigar.

Carroll also used a little advertising card on "Winner Take All" which helped him out considerably on that picture. It was made up in the form of an admission ticket to a fight for the world's lightweight championship between James Cagney and Killer Driscoll and stated that "this ticket was good for plenty of excitement." We hear that a number of phone calls were made to find out if the card was good for a pass to the theatre.

It's good to hear from Round Tabler Carroll again and to know that he's still plugging away at the job of selling shows. We'll be on the lookout for further communications from this member.

POLITICAL JOUST USED BY H. WILTON TO SPUR BUSINESS

The occasion of a Mayoralty contest in his city was seized upon by H. E. Wilton, manager of the Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, as a means for the promotion of a big give-away night during the summer months.

Fully two dozen merchants participated in the deal and ballots were printed with space for votes for the candidates. These special tickets were deposited in a ballot box in the theatre lobby, in the usual give-away fashion.

A Theatre Fish Story!

Bob Hampton, manager of the Publix house at Gulfport, and Monte Hance, manager of a sister theatre in Biloxi, Miss., have contributed to the season's crop of fish stories. Recently the two went fishing and hooked into a big gar. After a tremendous struggle they boated the fish, which immediately displayed its big jaws and sharp teeth. The story goes that both Hampton and Hance went over the side.

PETE EGAN VICTIM OF "FOUL PLAY"; IS ALWAYS A SHOWMAN

The show-selling activities of Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, are always interesting and among his recent exploits we note that he grabbed off a story with a two-column head on the first page of the second section of a leading newspaper. It read, "Theatre Manager Escapes Grim Fate, etc."

Just some more proof that Round Tabler Pete knows how to keep himself and theatre in the limelight. When the city was host to a "Stampede" he framed a deal among the cowpunchers to bind, gag and kidnap him from his office in the Palace Theatre Building, to all appearances to be hung for portrayal on the screen of a plot that did away with a pal of the cowpunchers. Get an eyeful of the crowd that littered the pavement in front of the theatre, if Pete's not-too-clear photo will show up.

We note also that he has been putting over his usual space-grabbing tie-ups with local merchants for cooperative ads, the Palace and its attractions getting a large share of the display. Another deal he put over a short time ago, whereby youngsters were admitted free on presentation of a bread wrapper, brought approximately 2,000 kiddies to the theatre and was the means of securing a corking write-up in the paper.

All of which is typical of Egan's brand of showmanship and one of the reasons why he's one of the best known theatre managers in Western Canada. We'll be looking forward to hearing from him again in the near future.

ADVERTISING IS NO STRONGER THAN THE STORY IT TELLS

Advertisers frequently blame mediums themselves for lack of results, when the blame is really due to such factors as: unconvincing copy, a feeble theme, failure to emphasize the most important "reason why," not enough appeal to the sense the product appeals to most strongly, lack of style in package or product, not enough copy aimed at the sex which does the most buying, etc. In a great many cases insufficient space and lack of repetition are principal causes of failure.

As far as mediums are concerned, all that any medium has to offer an advertiser is the opportunity to place his selling message before a given number of potential readers each day, each week, or each month, as the case may be. The medium's responsibilities do not extend beyond the furnishing of circulation and white space.

An advertisement is nothing more than a salesman. If it has a strong story . . . a good selling argument . . . it will win business. If its "sales talk" is impotent and unconvincing, it has little chance for success.

In every case it is what the advertiser says in the space he buys that counts.

FILM DAILY

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, AUGUST 5, 1932

CRITICS' FORUM

QUESTION No. 4

Is present-day theater advertising too inclined to exaggerate?

HOW THE CRITICS ANSWERED:

Yes——88.6% No——11.4%

Although a few of the country's outstanding motion picture critics defend flamboyant theater advertising on the ground that the public expects it, just like in the case of the circus, 88.6 per cent of the several hundred scribes responding to THE FILM DAILY'S questionnaire are emphatic in their declaration that the big run of ads are entirely too exaggerated. "By comparison, Barnum was a piker," says A. S. Kany of the Dayton, O., "Journal."

The fallacy of such advertising, it is pointed out, lies in the fact that the public has become wise to it and will no longer respond to mere adjectives. Consequently, advertising that magnifies or colors to the point of distortion and misrepresentation, not only is an evil, but it defeats its purpose in the long run.

Trailers are cited as among the biggest offenders, and their monotonously similar attempts to shock, electrify and astound the fans in advance, no matter what the type of the picture may be, is particularly criticized. As Frank Aston of the Cincinnati "Post" puts it, there is entirely too much "lure," but no guiding data.

More informative facts, intelligently presented, are urged. The name of the star and other principal players and a few sane words about the type of story will do more to arouse interest in the attraction than a lot of jazzed up superlatives which in many cases actually drown out the very things that the fans most want to know; the critics say.

ANOTHER EFFECTIVE CAMPAIGN PUT OVER BY JAMES H. McKOY

Highlights of an excellent campaign made on "Crowd Roars" by James H. McKoy, of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla., consisted of a number of productive tie-ups with local merchants and a radio station, promotion of a page and one-half of ads through a classified tie-up, an attractive lobby and front, an interesting street bally and numerous other activities. Selling angles centered on action of picture, the love interest, leading players, a tie-in with the Indianapolis race, and real race scenes in picture.

The accompanying illustrations will show the "regulation" checkered flag effect in the lobby and a shot of a racing car in the inner lobby. The latter was secured through a tie-up made with a local garage concern and was the cause of much interesting comment. A small card displayed in frame with a credit obtained the loan of the car and various accessories.

Included in the campaign were special newspaper stories with photos of Indianapolis races; burgees and large banner outside theatre; two large checker flags under marquee selling title; fifteen more checker flags on poles in front of downtown stores; miniature racing car on street with title of picture painted on hood; a tie-up with a chain store for a window display; announcement of names over radio for guest tickets (names taken from special list on file at station); the distribution of 1,000 novelty throwaways; a tie-up with a men's shop for a display of Cagney shirts; a tie-up with a gas company for display of 15-inch discs in all service stations, and another tie-up with a distributor of rubber tires for a parade on opening day. Twenty trucks from the tire company and fifteen more from the gas firm took part in the parade, led by the Paramount sound train.

McKoy is always putting over interesting campaigns down in Miami and his is a familiar name among Club exploitation stories. We want to hear what else he and his associates are doing to boost trade in Miami during the slack season, and hope he will see that other accounts of his activities reach this department.

LABOR DAY

Thoughts of grosses over Labor Day are already in the minds of many of our members. It's a three to four day session this year and a whole flock of good customers will take advantage of the opportunity to go places and do things. Counter attractions must be offered.

However, there are a lot of folk who will stay in town and they've got to be amused. Maybe some outstanding entertainment at their favorite theatres would also tempt the economical-minded ones to remain at home. What about local celebrations? If there are any scheduled it might be a good idea to break out the movie camera and take some shots of anything interesting in the way of sporting events, etc.

PERRY SPENCER BUSY PROMOTING ALL SORTS OF STUNTS IN PHILLY

Guest Week was one of the several occasions engineered recently by Perry Spencer, manager of the Lindy Theatre, Philadelphia, as a means of boosting summer trade.

As readers will at once grasp, the Guest idea is based on the award of a number of guest tickets each day. This was done in the usual fashion via the medium of programs printed especially for the occasion and a bulletin board in the lobby to list the names of patrons who were awarded the free entertainment.

On opening day of the Week a large parade, headed by a gayly decorated sound truck, announced the event to the neighborhood. A special tie-up was made with a beverage company and ginger ale was served every patron. Cakes and candy were also given away. Each night give-aways amounting to thirty dollars, all promoted without cost to theatre, were handed out. This was in addition to Country Store, which is a regular Wednesday night feature and quite a sensation in West Philadelphia, since forty dollars worth of groceries go home in the arms of ten worthy residents every week.

On Friday nights the "Barrel of Fun" stunt is staged and gifts to the value of three dollars each are given away. On Saturdays and Sundays the kiddies come in for their share of special gifts and novelties when attending matinees set aside for their special amusement. Games, pie-eating contests, etc., with special awards, are featured.

It begins to look as though Perry Spencer will soon be called the Santa Claus of West Philly, if he keeps up this promotion work. However, we're glad to hear that he is getting along so well down there, even though promoting suitable articles of merchandise is no cinch these days. We also hear he has the theatre front all dressed up with vines, flowers and lattice work to provide a summery atmosphere. He also promoted those accessories. More power to this Club member. By this time he has a lot more tricks up his sleeve and we'll be looking for them.

ORLOVE CONTINUES TO USE MANY GAGS TO BUILD BUSINESS

Various and sundry happenings have been taking place at the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, where Louis Orlove holds forth as manager, which, of course, is not anything in the way of news to those who have been following the business-getting activities of this member of our Club. He appears to be forever on the job of building trade for his house and if there are any tricks in show business he hasn't tried out, we'd like to hear about them.

Some time ago we published an account of the bird house building contest he ran for the younger element, for which he enlisted the aid of Laurence Hautz, a member of the Wisconsin State Commission. Plans easy to follow were printed up for the kiddies and some remarkable pieces of work were turned out. We are pleased to report through Orlove that the stunt was a huge success and if there are any Round Tablers who failed to note the printed instructions and want to try this gag out, we'll be glad to refer them to the number in which it appeared.

Other activities include the promotion of programs absolutely free of charge to theatre for the privilege of a cake shop ad on the back cover; a tie-up with a restaurant for the presentation of "free Hamburgers" to kiddies; a give-away of suites and articles of furniture from time to time, handled in the usual way; a tie-up with a local auto dealer for free heralds in return for ad on second page of folder; a tie-up with a chain ice cream store firm for the introduction of free "kups" of a new confection, and the extra attraction on a recent occasion of a Girl Revue and Stage Band show.

A photo shows a section of the Uptown lobby that was used to display several pieces of furniture and other displays of coming attractions. The one on "Emma" could be used right now to very good effect by doing away with the sketch of Mr. Mellon, who has since been made Ambassador to England and presumably is not worrying over the problems that used to confront him at the Capitol. Anyway, the top of the display carried the three cut out paintings of Messrs. Hoover, Mellon and Curtis and the line below admonished them to "stop worrying"—that "Emma" was coming soon. Members can change the political figures to suit their own choice. Incidentally, while Orlove was holding one of his many furniture giveaways he had a man in the lobby who demonstrated how reed furniture was made.

We have mentioned many a time that Orlove has made the Uptown a neighborhood institution of much weight through constant hammering away at different stunts that enlist interest from the kiddies and as far as we can observe there has been no let up in this phase of his work. "Hot Dog" matinees and numerous other parties are always taking place, with Orlove waist-deep in a horde of clamoring youngsters. His position as vice-president of the North Avenue Advancement Association has also helped him over many a tough spot.

As we conclude this account of Orlove's recent activities at a house where for many years he has been a factor in its success, word reaches us that he has been transferred to the Tivoli, another neighborhood theatre. Good luck, Louis, and let's hear all about it.

SARGENT GOING IN FOR EXPLOITATION ON HEAVIER SCALE

An ice cake stunt, street bally and numerous other activities were used in the selling campaign made on "Doomed Battalion" by Frank Sargent, manager of the Bay Shore Theatre, Bayshore, L. I., N. Y.

His tie-up for the ice cakes was made with the Knickerbocker Company and six of the regular size cakes, with one-sheet cutouts frozen inside, were distributed to stores in Bayshore and vicinity. The guest ticket idea was tied-in with a card that invited patrons to exercise their skill in determining how long it would take for the cake to melt.

The street bally consisted of a man dressed in an Austrian uniform. During actual showing of the picture he marched up and down in front of the theatre with a rifle on his shoulder.

Other efforts included the distribution, among 15 towns, of 5,000 combination heralds on the picture and stage appearance of Baby Rose Marie, and a two-week advance ad campaign of thumbnail catchlines in all papers. Teaser cards were also placed in the lobby for the same length of time. Note also the accompanying photo, which shows usherettes and staff, with their natty uniforms, standing beside the lobby display.

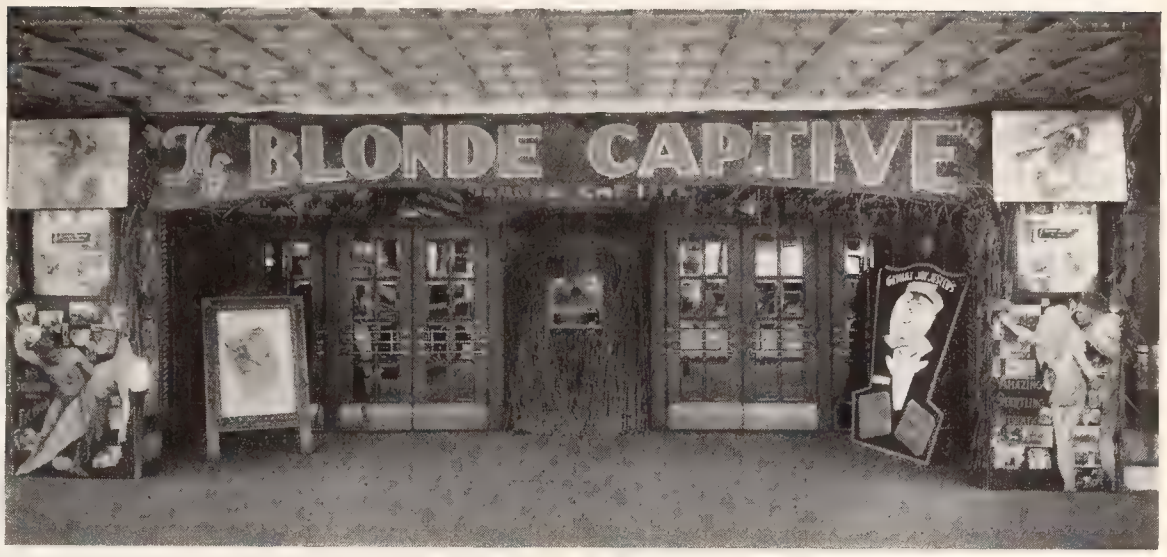
We take it that the above exploitation was a little out of the ordinary as far as regular routine at the Bayshore is concerned, for reason that Frank tells us he intends to go in for more of this sort of stuff in the future on account of the gratifying results that followed. We will look forward to hearing about what he does along these lines.



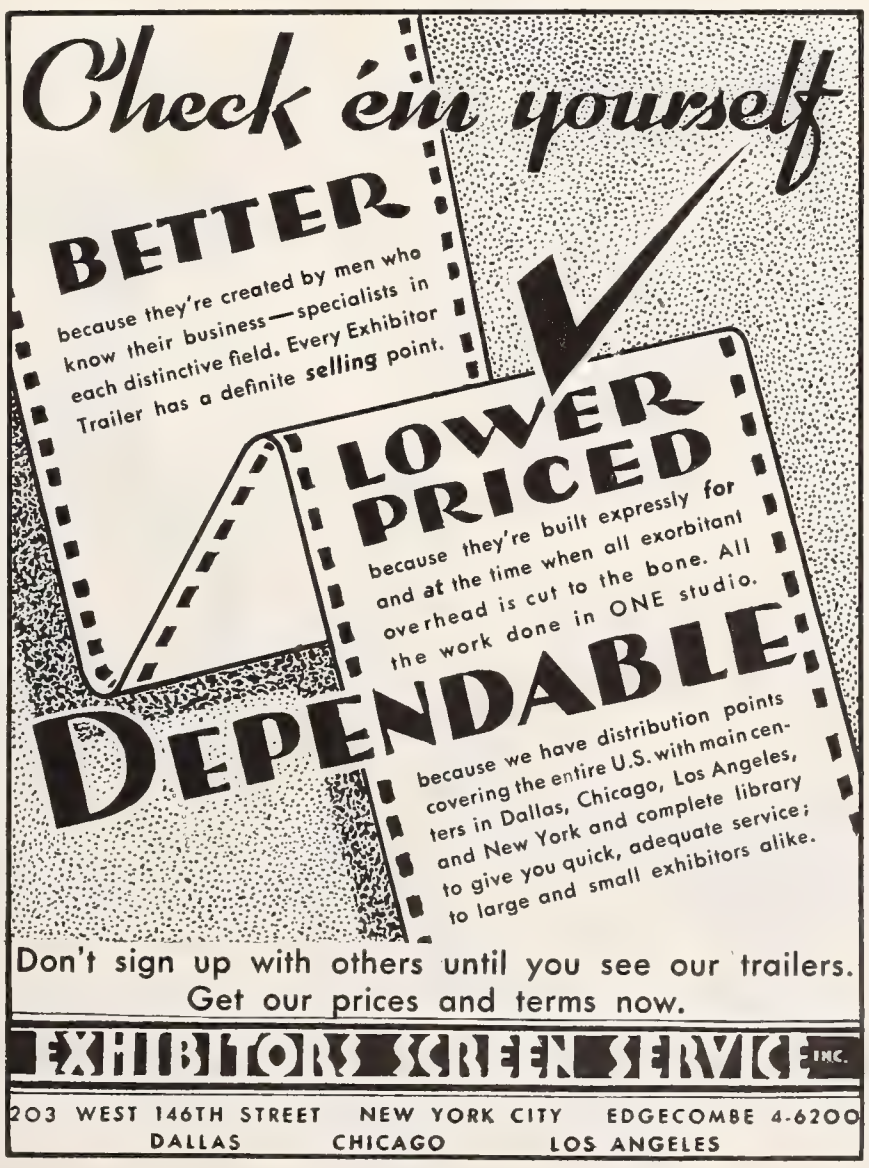
WEINBERG PUT OVER FULL PAGE CO-OP. ON NEW COOLING PLANT

Another of this Club's enterprising contributors to seize upon an installation of new equipment in a theatre as an occasion to go out and promote a full page co-operative ad, was Henry Weinberg, owner manager of Henry's Theatre, Hagerstown, Md.

This time it was a new air-conditioning plant and Weinberg's slogan for the page was "Keep Cool With Henry." A large center ad for the theatre, free of cost to the promoter, was flanked with ads from local merchants. It was also arranged to have the Mayor make an address from the stage to inaugurate the new system. The newspaper carried a story of the affair the next day in the news section.

Just a further example of what an aggressive theatre man can accomplish in the matter of capitalizing on such a thing as a new piece of equipment.

KEEFE'S EXPLOITATION ON "BLONDE!"



CONSIDERABLE special exploitation work in addition to regular newspaper ads, lobby displays, trailers, etc., was done on "Blonde Captive" by J. C. Keefe, city manager for Warner Brothers in Sandusky, Ohio, who also has direct supervision of the State Theatre. Incidentally, we take pleasure in introducing Showman Keefe as one of the Club's recently elected members.

The campaign included the building of a special front at no extra expense, using only material in stock and grass taken from nearby marshes; the placing of two large, special cutouts in lobby two weeks in advance and later, during showing of picture, in two prominent downtown windows; the placing of window cards in prominent downtown stores and in all prominent places in towns within radius of 25 miles of city, and the distribution of 5,000 tab heralds house to house in city and in five neighboring towns.

Since Manager's Pledge Week was in force at the time, telephone calls were made daily to all homes in the city, advising the nature of the occasion—its great attractions—and asking support so that the local manager could win honors. Two hundred cards on the Week were displayed by all stores and prominent windows in the city and many other effective tie-ups were made.

The accompanying photograph shows the grass-enclosed box-office and other attractive displays advertising the picture.

NEWSPAPER AD CONSTRUCTION!

Eddie Hitchcock To Handle New Series On Advertising Make-Up With Exchange Mats!

NEXT to holding a paper napkin on your lap the most difficult thing in the world is to follow somebody who is much more clever than you. For that reason, finishing the job that Ken Long started is a large order and if we come anywhere near making sense out of the task we have tackled then we will consider ourselves lucky.

The series of ad layouts that Ken Long started and handled magnificently was something in which the industry was sorely in need. When you come right down to it the success of the business depends upon intelligent use of the press sheet material placed at your disposal. Making good pictures comes first; merchandising them properly comes next, and that's all there is—there isn't any more. When those two objectives have been accomplished most of us won't have to contend much with salary slashes.

Suggestions Welcome!

In continuing this series we beg your indulgence and welcome your suggestions. It must be remembered, however, that this series is intended as a guide to those theatres who cannot stand the expense of an ad artist. The layouts offered from time to time are not to be considered as any criterion for the key run houses. Those theatres usually have their own ad artist to work with the manager or publicity head. This series is conducted solely for the best interests of the manager who has to use a pair of shears and a jar of paste. In that respect both of us start from scratch because we do not happen to be an artist. The biggest surprise we have had in a long time was to see the page opposite shape up as neatly as it did. Heretofore we have been just like you. We worked like you do. We sat down and pasted up the material and when it went off to the composing room it looked like the scratch pad on your own desk when you get through telephoning.

So we only have one thing in common—we can both draw lines. We have never taken any lessons in lettering and these layouts will prove it. But for that matter, neither have you. And if you have, what good does it do you?

The only thing we have in our favor is the fact that we have been all through the mill. We have managed and publicized every type of theatre from one changing three times a week in the sticks up to and including a Broadway show palace where all you have to do is tell the advertising agency the name of the picture coming in next week.

Out of that experience we have had the pleasure of writing all the press sheet advertising copy on last year's United Artists' product and the added consolation of seeing that copy come back in from theatres all over the country without the change of a comma. We are merely emphasizing these particulars to gain your confidence for this new association and in the hope that it will help you visualize the fact that one who has done your work might eventually be of assistance to you.

Eddie Hitchcock's background since entering show business certainly qualifies him to handle an ad series of this kind. He has been connected with theatres of all sizes and in both large and small cities.

In addition to managing theatres, he has been publicity and advertising director for several others. His most recent connection has been on press book ad make-up which is most important of all for this type of work.

Eddie knows show selling and above all appreciates the value of newspaper advertising as a direct means of attracting business to the box office. Every ad he suggests is exactly what he would turn out if he were handling a theatre without the aid of an ad artist.

So much for that. And now to get down to a discussion of what we have decided as the best course to pursue in the future.

Use Your Own Judgment

The designation of the particular style of type to be used in certain ad layouts will be dispensed with immediately. It is our contention that what you need most is simplicity, and that you have to rely anyway on whatever style of type your particular newspaper carries. We have found from our own experience that even in the big composing rooms you never get what you request. Printers are just as temperamental as prima donnas and just as stubborn as actors. They assume the attitude that handling type is their business and that they know better than you do what kind of type will be more readable in the particular ad you want to use. In most cases we agree with them. After all, they are just as interested as you are in your success and unless you have an outright careless plant to deal with you can depend upon their judgment. When you get your proof back you know what looks good to you and what doesn't and you act accordingly.

We are going to make it easier for you in another way, also. In these layouts we will designate, wherever possible, the number of the matrix from which different parts have been selected. This information will be marked on the layout in the belief that it will save you time and serve more efficiently when the time comes for the use of any layout suggestions.

Where space permits, effort will be made to analyze each production; the reason for certain suggested changes and any slants in exploitation ideas that might be of value will be offered.

The reaction to the original Ken Long series left no room for doubt about the necessity for material of this type, and when Chick Lewis asked me to tackle this stuff he had only to show me some of the several hundred letters to convince me that the men in the field want and need it.

Improving the Series!

We have made some elaborate plans for this series. After getting off on the right foot with several groups of ad suggestions we intend to take you still further into the many angles of smart ad construction, but only so far as we feel our own past experiences warrant. We have no intention whatsoever of setting ourself up as a world-beater or expert. God knows, the industry is full of these muggs as it is. Our sole reason for devoting our time and effort to contributing this material is for the good it can do you managers all over the country who must depend on your own ability and ingenuity for advertising your theatre's attractions.

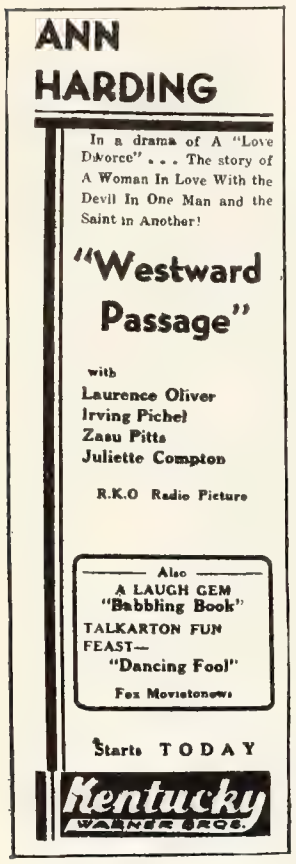
To these ends we dedicate this, the first of a series which we hope will help you over the rough spots and eventually establish you as a man capable of working out seat-selling newspaper ads for your theatre. We are wide open for suggestions or criticisms and if there is some particular style of ad that you would like to see included in the series, just drop a line to Chick Lewis and he'll check with me on it.

ADS ON OPPOSITE PAGE

"Congorilla" (Fox)

Here is an ideal picture for theatre managers with which to play havoc with the public's imagination. The press sheet abounds with material suitable for any and all purposes, although it's a pity it went to press before the big gorilla head used in the New York ads could be included. This head could have been utilized to a fare-thee-well for poster work and ad layouts with much effect. As emphasized in ads "A", "E" and "F", one of your big sales points is the fact that "Congorilla" is all-talking and brings the heart of the jungle up to the back door of your patrons.

"Jewel Robbery" (Warner)



Don't overlook the fact that William Powell and Kay Francis are brought together again after an absence as a team for a good many months. They have proved good box office in the past and ought to be just as good now. In addition, you have a story that is packed with whimsical action, saucy patter and spicy romance. It goes without saying that both stars ought to be sold above the title, and your copy should stress the romantic "boudoir bandit" angle—without getting too far out on the limb. "He Nicked Them for Necklaces—Then Necked Them and Fled" is a catchline that tells the whole story with a sock.

"White Zombie" (United Artists)

Another picture offering untold possibilities via the medium of newspaper advertising. So much so that we are devoting a full page of ad suggestions in next week's issue to this picture. In the meantime we are including one ad suggestion in this layout.

EXCELLENT RESULTS OBTAINED BY PICKLE WITH MERCHANT TIES

A variety of merchant tieups featured recent show-selling activities of Leon Pickle, manager of the Kentucky Theatre, a Warner house down in Henderson, Ky. We are also reproducing an ad idea he took from a press book and transformed into an effective display for a single column.

He sold eight downtown drug stores the idea on entering a cooperative tieup whereby ice cream, soda drinks and other five cent articles of merchandise could be obtained free of charge by theatre patrons and store customers. This was handled in the usual give-away fashion by the posting of special bulletins in the stores. Special tickets made for the stunt are passed out to the kiddies during Saturday matinees and an announcement is made at the end of the first show as to what stores they may go for their awards on the following Saturday. The only cost to the theatre was for the special tickets and these were left over from another stunt. Cooperating with eight stores, the tieup lasts for one month, working two different stores each week. It has proven a profitable deal for both theatre and stores.

Another tieup was made with a merchant on the occasion of showing Warner Baxter in "Man About Town." The merchant ran an ad carrying a star head cut, with lines that plugged the picture and his merchandise for two days in advance and on first play-date. A drug store proprietor also took advantage of the opportunity to tie-in for an ad for Max Factor's make-up on Greta Garbo in "As You Desire Me."

It's a cinch to see that Pickle has been stepping out in his usual hard-working way to secure cooperation from local merchants and the above is proof that he lined them up. We like his single column ad and feel sure that other members will also agree that it is an effective display for the amount of space used. We'll be on the lookout for further evidence of this member's activities.

Reprints NOT Available

No reprints on either the Ken Long or Eddie Hitchcock series will be available. Those wishing to keep a complete file of such material will have to depend upon the regular issues of Motion Picture Herald.

It is not advisable to clip or tear these articles and ad pages from the book. Better to keep your complete file of Heralds on a shelf in the order of publication so that you can lay your hands on any issue any time you require it. Tearing or mutilating the copies will only tend to misplace the various items.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here are two contributions from Arthur Halliwell, poster artist for the Warner Theatres in Torrington, Conn., and two splendid examples of what can be accomplished in this interesting line of work.

The letters on the Constance Bennett poster were of vermilion with metallics on deep brown panel. Picture title was pale blue on deep brown background. Face, blended chalk in natural colors on light brown background.

Cagney poster; Title in straw color. Gray background. Circle, three shades of green. Prize ring, natural colors. Head, different shades of red. Star name, cut out card letters, white with metallics.

BEING DIFFERENT IS POLICY OF NED PEDIGO, OF GARBER

Twenty years an exhibitor and during that time always trying to be different than his exhibitor neighbor—that's the policy of Ned Pedigo, operator of the De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla.

We've seen Ned's ads before and we note that a sample at hand bears all the earmarks of being "different." Whatever he may be apparently his policy is to get on an intimate footing with the public, so that he can inject this different angle in his ads. For instance, read over the following, which appeared as a footnote to a generously spaced two-column ad:

NOTICE: "Don't you folks know the old picture show man should take in enough money to enable him to eat at least once a week. How can you expect him to be frisky and full of pep when he is only full of hot air. Not only that—'pretty soon old winter will be coming on, and we want to be able to ditch our B. V. D.'s, straw hat and sear-sucker clothes by that time.' We are getting so thin and poor that our abdomen rattles against our backbone like a paper sack in a June Gale.

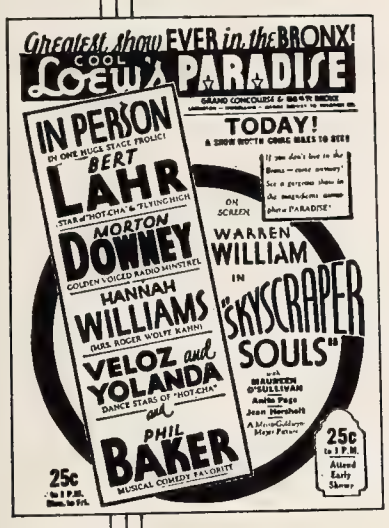
"It sure is a crime to starve a man to death in a land of plenty. Drag is on down here to the show. This picture I know will strike the key note, ring your bell of satisfaction, tickle your fancy, and satisfy your curiosity. If you fail to see it you should be arrested and soaked three times with a cool wet sponge.

"Tell mother you went to the De Luxe—that should satisfy her and be plenty. The pictures are great and no matter how big—the prices are just ten and twenty."

We note also that he conducts a column in the local newspaper headed, "A Few Words By Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Manager." He sifts out interesting current topics and then just turns on the steam, mixing wisecracks and sidelights on the subject into conversational chatter. Good stuff and material that readers like, and, we venture to state, the kind that the local editor is glad to have to pep-up regular run of stuff.

Working along these lines, sooner or later a theatre manager is bound to assume a personality among newspaper readers and theatregoers and we heartily commend Pedigo's efforts and system. True, his style can be employed only in certain communities, but there are thousands of towns in the states just like Garber and it may pay others to take a leaf from his book—and be "different."

FRANK BOUCHER IS STILL EXTRACTING SPACE FROM CO-OPS.



We note that Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre down in Winchester, Va., is still promoting co-op ads that yield about seventy-five or eighty per cent display space to his theatre. It's an old Boucher custom.

This time a drug store was the subject Frank chose for promotion and a nationally advertised soap the commodity picked out for special sale. Guest tickets were included in the offer. The balance of the ad plugged current and coming attractions and announced the auction of a used Ford car on a future date.

MAURICE STRELETSKY is holding down the job of assistant manager of the Allston Theatre, Allston, Mass., a house managed by J. O'Connell, and we're glad to include his name among the many assistant managers already listed on the Club roster. He has been on his present assignment about one month and was promoted to the post from a chief usher's post at the Capitol Theatre, another Allston house. He started as a page boy at that house and rose to his present position through hard work. Manager O'Connell tells us Streletsky is promising timber for showbusiness and we'll watch his career with interest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD ROSS is the assistant manager of the Regent Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, and his application for membership in this Club is sponsored by his boss, Ben H. Wallerstein. We're also mighty glad to have the opportunity of introducing Ross to his many fellow Club members and will be on watch for the time when he will be eligible to receive a manager's certificate of membership. Hop to it, Harold, and let us know when that day rolls around. In the meantime, remind Boss Ben to keep us posted on what's going on at the Regent.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MICHAEL CHAKERES is another assistant manager to join our Club and he's also a member of the Regent-State Corporation, the Springfield, Ohio, circuit directed by Phil Chakeres. Michael puts in his time at the State Theatre, a local house, and we want him to know that we're also interested in his career in showbusiness. Without a doubt he'll soon be at the helm of a theatre. However, in the meantime we'll remind him to see that show-selling news from the State reaches Club headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LARRY MORRIS manages the St. George, Staten Island, N. Y., and we're glad to report that he, too, has become a member of the Round Table Club. Many a good show-selling tip has come out of Stapleton and other points in the Borough of Richmond and we'll hope that Morris will put St. George on the Club Map. Let's hear all about what you are doing for show-business, Larry, at the first opportunity that comes along.

C. W. WHEELER believes (to use his own words) he is the only "animal" of his kind in showbusiness today, so if any of our members want to dispute his claim let the man speak. Not only does he manage the Tokay Theatre in South Bend, Wash., but he does the booking, handles advertising and bill posting, looks after sound and electrical equipment and operates the projection machines. In other words, does everything but sign contracts, keep books, sell tickets and sweep out the house. The Tokay is owned by four local business men, and during the evening shows one or two show up to watch the floor, which accounts for Wheeler's presence at that time in the projection room. Okay, Wheeler, we're glad to have you with us. Keep in touch with Club headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

VINTON H. SHOLL manages the Kirby Theatre down in Houston, Texas, and we're taking this opportunity to let all his friends and fellow Round Tablers know that his application for membership has also been received at Club headquarters. He's another Publix man and as most everyone in showbusiness knows that the boys on that circuit are noted for their aggressive work in selling shows, we think we can count on Sholl to do his bit for this department.

H. C. WINHAM hails from down south in Alexandria, La., where he manages the Paramount Theatre, and he's another Publix man to send along an application for membership in this Club. Many times we've mentioned that there's a host of live Publix men in this organization and since Winham's also one, we'll count on him to keep up the standard set by others on his circuit. We will look forward to hearing from him in the near future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. F. HONNAKER is the manager of the Down's Theatre down South in Louisville, Ky., home of many well known showmen and members of this Club. We also have his application at hand and want him to know we re glad he has joined our outfit. Now that he's one of the gang we hope he'll do his share to keep up the good work. A resume of his show-selling activities from time to time will fill the bill. How about this, Honnaker?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EARL ST. JOHN is another one of William Smalley's lieutenants to join our organization and he's in charge of the Smalley Theatre at Walton, N. Y. We've often had the pleasure of listing the activities of various managers on this circuit and their work has always been featured by many interesting slants on showmanship. We will look forward with interest to what St. John is doing to sell his Waltonians.

J. A. PIKE has charge of the Rialto Theatre, a Publix house at Winslow, Ariz., and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to this ever-increasing army of showmen. Pull up your chair, Pike, and join the gang; then tell 'em what you are doing to coax coins from tin boxes of the good citizens of Winslow. You may rest assured that they'll be interested to hear about whatever slant you have on the business of selling the public.

D. B. FOLLETT is the owner-manager of the Del-Lu Theatre out in Gibsonburg, Ohio, and a cordial invitation is also extended this new member to become an active contributor to this department. He tells us he has been an exhibitor for 22 years and then naively inquires if we have any good plans to "get trade." Far be it from our purpose to advise a veteran of Follett's experience what to do to revive his box office; however, we can point out that the cream of this industry's theatre managers are contributing ideas to the Round Table Club and that faithful reading of these pages week to week is bound to be productive. We hope he will keep in touch with us.

H. ASH is the manager of the Independent Film Exchange, Exchange of China, in Shanghai, and we're taking this opportunity to extend him a cordial welcome to the ranks of the Round Table Club. If the opposing factions over in his section of the world don't start another fracas in the near future we believe we can promise readers insight on picture exploitation methods employed there. We have a number of Club representatives throughout principal Chinese cities and it's always interesting to hear from them.

CLEMENT PERRY holds forth at the helm of the Mt. Eden Theatre, a house located in the Bronx section of New York City. He's one of many in the neighborhood sections of the big town to realize that sound methods of exploitation can be used to good results, despite the fact that a few of the local boys look upon it as a lost art. He reads the Club pages and finds many helpful hints; now he wants to do his share to keep the ball rolling along. Okay, Clement, and we'll be keeping an eye on your card.

RALPH C. FRETZ is the assistant manager of the Granada Theatre in Olyphant, Pa., and Manager Edward M. Dowling sponsors his application for membership in this organization. Fretz is 21 years of age and has been with the Olyphant for about two years. He won his present position through promotion from a chief usher's job. Manager Dowling tells us that his assistant is always on the job and very dependable. We shall watch his career with interest and, in the meantime, ask him to remind his boss to keep the Club posted on what both are doing to put over their shows.

PAUL S. WHITE is located down South in Ashland, Ky., where he manages the Paramount Theatre. He's another Publix man to join up with the fastest-stepping army of showmen in the wide world and we're glad to include his name among the many Publix men already members of this organization. He and his buddies all have the reputation of being able to produce results at the box office. We hope he will share his show-selling recipes with his fellow Club members.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM G. COLLINS is located 'way out in the city of Honolulu, Hawaii, where he has charge of the Princess Theatre. His application for membership in the Round Table Club again indicates the international scope of this organization and we're glad, indeed, to list his name on the Club roster. We hope Collins will find the necessary time to let us know about methods he's using to sell shows in his country. We're sure his letters will prove interesting to his fellow members.

LYKES HAS TRAILER STUNT THAT SHAPES UP LIKE A WINNER

It looks to us as though J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, got in on the ground floor of a mighty good gag to plug pictures or most anything else from the screen, so we'll have to broadcast the news to his fellow Club members.

How would you like to run a talking trailer of yourself, talking to your audience and personally recommending some forthcoming attraction? That's just what Lykes is experimenting with these days, all through the courtesy of a firm that wanted to introduce the idea through the medium of the Park Theatre; hence, our worthy Round Tabler was able to avail himself of the opportunity at no cost.

We'll all agree he received a break in that respect; however, there's no reason why others should not make use of this screen innovation if the price fits their expense accounts. It is estimated that a trailer of this kind could be made for about $25, and it looks like a corking way to emphasize some outstanding attraction. As Lykes suggests, it could be worked out in many different ways, such as securing an endorsement from some newspaper critic or leading citizen and having either appear in the trailer. It is spotted directly after regular trailer.

Here's the talk that Lykes gave on his first appearance on the screen: "Ladies and Gentlemen. . . . It is seldom that I have occasion as manager of this theatre to come before you. This is the first opportunity I have had to speak to you from the screen. You have witnessed an advance description of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's biggest screen hit, "Washington Masquerade," starring the world's greatest actor, Lionel Barrymore, and that beautiful siren of the screen, Karen Morley. Until you have seen this picture for yourself, you cannot know what a big treat is in store for you. In all the years of silent pictures, in all the years of talking pictures, there has been nothing to equal it. I have been in the motion picture business for many years, have seen hundreds of pictures, but never has any picture impressed me as has "Washington Masquerade." It is truly a great picture and I do not hesitate to give it my personal recommendation. I emphatically urge you to see it. . . . Thank you."

So there you are fellows—take and use the idea if you like it and thank Round Tabler Lykes for passing along the information. We also have on file the name of the firm that made this trailer if you desire it. We also feel sure that Manager Lykes will gladly supply additional information if interested parties will drop him a line. Surely, the gag is a big improvement on the old "mike" hook-up from the manager's office, although this is as good a time as any to remind readers that that method of talking to an audience is still popular.

Gill Assumes New Duties

Homer Gill has assumed his new duties as division manager for Fox West Coast houses in the Puget Sound district, which includes theatres in Bellingham, Bremerton and Tacoma, Wash. He was formerly northwest division manager for RKO, prior to abolishment of that district. He will make his headquarters at Seattle.

Apparently, Bill Danzinger left a competent man behind him when he left Cincinnati for a Publix post in New York. The above ad was clipped from a recent Cincinnati daily and is typical of the swell advertising coming from that key city.

We particularly liked the fine send-off they are giving the RKO Greater Show Season plug at the top of the ad. Every theatre in the country ought to be doing likewise because this IS our year and we hope it will be the forerunner of the good old S R O days.

CAROLINA BRUNSON IS SELLING SHOWS 'WAY OUT IN YUMA

Out in Yuma, Ariz., where the frogs never have learned to swim, Newton "Carolina" Brunson carries on with the job of selling shows for the Yuma Theatre. Some data at hand discloses that he has been doing what every other enterprising manager has been engaged with the past year or so—that of promoting free space for his theatres and attractions and obtaining free give-aways to lure the good old customers to the box office.

One piece of evidence of his work we have at hand is a full page co-op he promoted on strength of the slogan, "Back To The Good Old Days"—a great slogan for any business man to get behind, anyone will admit. A generous slice of the page was devoted to space for the theatre.

Another stunt he pulled a short time ago was promotion of a new Ford auto for a give-away attraction for a tie-up with a prominent local club's revue at his theatre. This was billed as a"Midnite Matinee" and included the preview of "Million Dollar Legs," a title that inspired "Carolina" to determine by contest the most charming pair of feminine legs in the city of Yuma. The combination of a brand new Ford and the legs made this a knockout attraction.

When he isn't working out selling plans for some coming attraction and praying for rain, "Carolina" does his bit for the local newspaper by way of a column headed "Dry Heat." It's an excellent example, it seems to us, of cooperation between paper and theatre man. Brunson intersperses his movie chatter with other pertinent paragraphs concerning doings of merchants, etc., and the result is a corking column, and one that gives him a fine opportunity to get across not even subtle hints to attend his theatre. He has been at this for over a year.

Yuma may be a long way from Columbus Circle and a still longer distance away from a section in Carolina where a certain showman could once point out with pride the native verdure of his state; however, it's only seven miles from Mexico and honest beer, and that's something to intrigue other members of this outfit. Here's hoping you have some rain, Newt, and that the frogs don't drown. Let's hear from you.

PONY GAG PRAISED BY LAWRENCE AS A GREAT TRADE BOOST

The good old reliable pony give-away gag proved to be a corking business-getter a few weeks ago for H. L. Lawrence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn.

He ran his campaigns for four weeks and only displayed the pony on the streets on Saturdays, a sign on each side of the animal announcing "This Pony To Be Given Away Free at the Capitol," on the date set. He also promoted good store windows in different sections of the town for day or two-day exhibition of the pony during the campaign.

Lawrence has unlimited faith in the pony stunt as a costless means of building interest in a theatre and for packing the house on give-away night. About seventeen or twenty merchants at $5 per copy pays for the pony and all advertising expenses. Cost of the herald advertising the occasion was taken care of by a listing of the participating merchants.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS SEE BUSY YEAR WITH SONGS USED MORE IN FILMS

Melodies Will Be Worked in as Definite Aid in Staging Pictures Instead of Violent Injections of Two Years Ago

Music publishers are looking to motion pictures once more for an important source of revenue, as the new season's production schedules call for a significant amount of song material after an interlude of almost two years during which few pictures utilized songs and virtually no "musicals" were produced.

Production schedules for the 1932-33 season are replete with pictures which, although not belonging to the classification of "musicals," will employ popular song material. In utilizing songs this season, those productions which call for them will employ the material in a natural, appropriate manner, either as part of a characterization or as a definite aid to staging. A typical example of the use to which song material will be put this season is afforded by the Warner-First National production, "Crooner." The story involves the career of an orchestra director who introduces "crooning" to radio audiences. Two popular songs, "Sweethearts Forever" and "Three's a Crowd," are introduced in this picture, the young orchestra leader singing them to his audiences as an essential part of the characterization.

In the same manner, songs will be introduced for definite and constructive purposes in such productions as Paramount's "The Great Broadcast," Monogram's "Girl From Calgary," with Fifi D'Orsay; Warners' "Radio Girl," with Bebe Daniels; "The Crash," with Ruth Chatterton, and "Blessed Event."

The flood of musicals which descended upon theatres 18 months to two years ago so sated the public with this type of production that for two seasons scarcely a producer ventured to turn out a musical picture. The manner in which sequences and action were interrupted in other productions to introduce songs, quickly brought adverse criticism and audience disfavor upon song material in pictures. In consequence, producers tended toward the other extreme and used practically no song material for almost two years. With the advent of the new season's product, they again are seeking new picture uses for songs, and it appears that the uses being found are fitting to action and characterization and will be introduced naturally.

With these developments in production in view, music publishers are expecting vastly increased popularity for songs introduced in pic-

SONG AND DANCE

Fiesta of Mexico (4)

Baltimore Hippodrome

Senor Paul and Senoritas Paquita, Naja and Nenita present a fast stepping singing and dancing act. The turn is introduced by a girl singing and dancing with Paul. There follow various dances with the girls—acrobatic, East Indian nautch, castinet. Among the songs are "Cuban Love Song" and "I'm a Hot Tamale." An entertaining act that drew good applause.

Lyons and Snyder

Detroit Michigan

In this batter of song, dance and comedy are the ingredients of good entertainment, but little of worth is evidenced. All the merit of the act is crowded into its final two or three minutes, so that the audience forgets the ancient opening quips and inane gags and serves a generous round of applause. The girl has a nasal, twangy sort of voice that fits the numbers she uses. The boy would do better if he could play the guitar he brandishes while she dances.

Nina Olivette

Milwaukee Wisconsin

It is quite possible that Miss Olivette would fall a trifle flat if it weren't for her unceasing effervescence. All her antics, including her singing and dancing, are offered as comedy, and her efforts do succeed in raising heavy laughs from time to time.

King Brothers and Cully (3)

Detroit Fisher

This trio of knockabout dancers opens with barber shop harmony on "Wabash Moon." They offer a number of clever impressions in dance, and one lad does a worthy piano solo. Prolonged applause followed the close.

PLAYLETS

Jack Dempsey

Denver Orpheum

Jack Dempsey and company (4) put on a clever skit "The Roadside Razz," that makes Jack more popular than ever with his Denver friends. The scene is the Lemon Grove filling station, run by Asa Skinner, who is also sporting editor of the Lemon Grove Gazette. He interviews Jack as to his past fights and his future plans. There is just enough comedy to set it off. His act is introduced by Harry Huffman, managing director of the Orpheum.

New York Roxy's Opening Program

Frank Cambria, managing director of the Roxy, New York, proves his full knowledge of the technicalities of stagecraft in his first program at the reopened "Cathedral."

The stage show is sent off to a good start with a speech of welcome, conveyed by an unseen individual through the public address system. Then comes a spectacular hello in the "Greeting Bouquet," by the Roxyettes, Ballet Corps, Vivian Fay, Beatrice Berenson and the Singing Ensemble.

David Ross, directing the orchestra in Rimsky-Korsakov's overture, "Scheherezade," followed the "Greeting Bouquet."

(Review on Overture page.)

News of the World, in the form of Fox Movietone Newsreel, was placed between the overture and the next divertisement, "Mefistofele," in which Arturo Imparato sang the lead, the Singing Ensemble accompanying him.

The Roxyettes are featured in "New Angles," a novelty devised and staged by Russell E. Markert.

Walter Disney's latest "Mickey Mouse" cartoon, entitled "Trader Mickey," proved mirth-provoking.

The final scene is entitled "The Bicentennial Fantasy," and is built around a Colonial setting. Featured in this spectacle are Fortunello and Cirrilino, famous Italian clowns, Vivian Fay, premier ballerina, Joseph Griffin and Beatrice Berenson, singers, Ellsworth Woods, The Singing Ensemble, the Ballet Corps and the Roxyettes.

The featured picture is "The First Year," in which Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell are starred.

St. Louis House Goes Legitimate

Traveling stage shows visiting St. Louis next season are to play the American theatre at Seventh and Market Streets. Attractions will be provided by the new United Booking Office, a consolidation of Shubert & Erlanger interests out of New York City. Paul Beisman continues as manager of the American.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Busy Year for The Publishers

tures, and are laying plans for elaborate exploitation tieups designed to benefit both the feature picture containing music and the sale of sheet music. In addition, publishers are giving thought to the problem of when sheet music featured in pictures can be released most advantageously. Experience has demonstrated to them that too early release of the music is likely to hurt both the sale of the music and the picture's drawing power, for it gives an implication of "age" to an otherwise new production. On the other hand, a late release of the music impairs its sale, for the timeliness and full force of the advertising benefit contributed by the picture is spent. Some publishers are now of the opinion that music featured in new pictures should not be placed on sale or used on the stage or over the radio earlier than three weeks prior to the picture's opening or closer than two weeks to the opening.

The exploitation plans of the music publishers tying up with picture releases are of such scope that their influence must be felt advantageously in theatre results. They will involve tieups with large numbers of retail music stores featuring titles of both pictures and songs in window displays of special design, and will provide exhibitors with leaflets and cards bearing the theatres' announcement together with eight bars of the featured songs. Other exploitation, supplementary to the special campaigns conducted by the advertising and publicity departments of the producer-distributors, include special tieup posters, streamers, title pages, radio station tieups, slide displays for theatres, circularization of all music dealers, and professional cooperation in spotting the song numbers with singers, bands, and national network programs, all of which will receive orchestrations and professional copies of the songs.

A campaign of this type already has been prepared for Warner Brothers' "Crooner" and the songs featured in the picture. Under the direction of Sam Serwer, of the Warner Brothers' music publishing subsidiary, M. Witmark & Sons, in the "Crooner" campaign Warner branches will be utilized as territory headquarters for material on the production's music, with Witmark's several branches also acting as professional department district headquarters. In addition, the 80 stores in the Music Sales Corporation chain, a subsidiary of the Warner music publishing companies, will plug both song and picture in window and counter displays, along the same lines to be followed by independent retail dealers.

Ten Popular Songs In Far West Listed

At the request of music directors of San Francisco showhouses, James L. Haley, of the sheet music department at Sherman, Clay & Co., compiled a list of ten best selling songs in the Far West. The list follows: "Masquerade," "Night Was Made for Love," "Lovely Melody," "Three On a Match," "Try to Forget," "In a Shanty in Old Shanty Town," "Since You Went Away," "Strange Interlude," "I'll Never Be the Same" and "It Was So Beautiful."

"Pop" Blair Back On Job

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

Owen Moore

Baltimore Century

Moore comes on in full dress and has some chatter about not talking about Hollywood and comedy about a jew's harp. Then he goes into a specialty act with Rockcliffe Fellowes and Patricia O'Brien appearing in a talking picture act with him, as if Moore is walking into the picture from the stage and off again. He was received well.

Jack and Kay Spangler

New Orleans Orpheum

This act opens as a comic playlet, goes into dance and song routines, brings in a stunt man who is a good comic and a nimble pianist and practically has everything on the piano but the kitchen stove. Spangler is a good comedian and dances nicely but he is only fair, crooning through a megaphone. Miss Spangler billed as from a New York show, does not display any marked ability, though her dancing is graceful and effectively performed.

INSTRUMENTAL

Fred Waring and His Pennsylvanians (30)

Brooklyn Albee

Waring has the same musical aggregation that was featured at the Roxy but with the addition of his brother, Tom, and the Lane Sisters, who offer specialties of solo and harmony singing, of their own. The act opens with a novelty number, called "sing," which is first played by the orchestra and then is offered with vocal gesticulations. The next number, "So Beautiful," was presented as a Glee Club would sing it and was followed by the Lane Sisters, who harmonize two popular songs. Tom Waring then vocalizes and receives a tremendous reception for his efforts. The outstanding part of the entire performance is the rendition "Ave Maria," in which Stuart Churchill sings the tenor part.

This first opens with a trio rendition of 'The Voice in the Old Village Choir," with Fred Waring and the Lane Sisters doing the harmonizing. At the finish of the number the baby spot that lighted their faces is turned on Churchill, who leads in the singing of "Ave Maria," with the orchestra boys taking the choir part. The lighted faces of the men, together with a church window background, offer an extremely impressive picture. The accompaniment for this was played by Miss Verye Mills, the harpist. This one particular bit is worth the price of admission. It is followed by another novelty, equally entertaining, but in a different way. This was built around the song, "Dancing Dominos," which was first played instrumentally and then offered with lighted dominos which danced as pianists played. This last number was used as the finale, but applause was so insistent and prolonged that the orchestra encored with a "drink" song, which was also outstanding.

Of all the big orchestras to play in and around New York. Fred Waring's group stands in the top rank.—E. D.

Horace Heidt and Band

San Francisco Golden Gate

This attraction, held over another week, meets with even greater favor. During the act the fifteen musicians play 75 instruments by actual count. Their presentation of "My Silent Love" proves especially effective.

Al Tucker Orchestra (8)

Brooklyn Metropolitan

Though Tucker and his aggregation feature comedy and novelty, they prove themselves versatile musicians. The entire group is dressed as tramps and work in a "saloon" set throughout the turn. Nearly all of them are soloists, and many of them do individual specialties, such as singing and dancing. The act runs 18 minutes and is entertaining throughout.

Ben Bernie and Orchestra

New York Capitol

Opening with "I Beg Your Pardon, Mademoiselle," with a vocal by the "old maestro" himself, the band goes into "Shanty in Old Shantytown," with Pat Kennedy vocalizing. Frank Prince then offers "Wrong Number," followed by several satirical renditions by others in the band. A hot rendition of "Limehouse Blues" is followed by a musical tribute to Ziefigeld in which a medley of associated hits is played by the band. The act goes over but due to lack of novelties, it is below Bernie par.—H. P.

COMEDY

Eddie Dowling and Freddie Coots

New York Capitol

Eddie, upon being introduced by Ben Bernie, received a hearty welcome by an audience who remembered his work in "Honeymoon Lane." Acting as master of ceremonies, Dowling kept up a running fire of gags and stories for laughs, his ace being a recitation, "Tenth Avenue," in which he is accompanied at the piano by Freddie Coots, popular composer, who followed with a medly of his original compositions. At the finale, Dowling's tribute to the late Florenz Ziegfeld was appreciated by the audience for its sincerity.—H. P.

Harry Savoy with Mae Behan

Baltimore Hippodrome

Here is a general hokum comedy act of the "ad lib" type with a novelty impersonation of John Barrymore as "Richard III," and comedy dialogue with Miss Behan that keeps them laughing.

Olsen and Johnson

New York Palace

With a troupe of about 50, which included jugglers, pony circus, dancers and stooges, Olsen and Johnson offer a nutty revue, and succeed in keeping the audience in laughter throughout the entire show. The blackouts prove very funny while the wild antics of the stooges, planted all over the house, created plenty of laughter. The two principals cover themselves with glory and receive an ovation at the finale. At the finish two youngsters are given a chance to offer specialties, little Jimmy Holtz doing a clever acrobatic drunk novelty which clicks, while Gloria McNamara also proves a capable dancer. This act is one solid hour of entertainment.—H. P.

Ray Dooley

New York Capitol

Due to a long show, Miss Dooley, musical comedy star, appeared in but one scene, in which her comical antics were duly rewarded. Dowling was her "straight" man and aided considerably in her success. Her rendition of "River Stay Way from my Door" was funny, and good.—H. P.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Willie West and McGinty (4)
Denver Orpheum

One of the few acts with not a word said but entertaining from start to finish. The back drop shows the Empire State Building in construction, and props used are builders' tools, scaffolding and the like. Numerous "mistakes" are executed with lightning-like rapidity and sureness of execution. The men try to eat their lunch but swallow plaster instead or have the food snatched out of their mouths by some fast-moving article.

Mitchell and Durant
New York Paramount

This pair of comedians offer a very funny bit of slap-bang comedy, followed by a round of clever acrobatic tap dancing. In answer to enthusiastic applause, they favor with double acrobatic time flips. They're skilled entertainers.—H. P.

Ross and Edwards
Detroit Fisher

This pair opens with a "Swanee" song, and slips into patter and dance. An especially good bit of comedy is the goof face and gestures of one of the two at the other's deliberate mispronunciation of simple words. The smooth way the two handle their "purple" lines makes them nonetheless coarse. This audience rumbled for them.

Marjorie White
New York Paramount

This vivacious little blonde is brimful of personality and proves an able comedienne. After a vocal of "I'm On a Diet of Love," Miss White clowns with Ed Lowry, the pay-off, her impersonation of the dummy of a ventriloquist bit. The audience liked her immensely.—H. P.

Burns and Kissen
Baltimore Hippodrome

These two opened with their usual type of jokes and then went into song with a parody of popular hits, using bars and titles with comical effect. Burns then sang "When a Pal Bids a Pal Goodbye," with both doing a comedy parody on "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" and following with another parody on "I'm Following You." For encore they had a parody on "Oh, That Kiss."

Chic Sale
San Francisco Warfield

Here is a comedian who understands audience psychology and gets the most out of the little touches in characterization work. In quick succession Chic portrays the "wise guy," the boy recitationist, the country minister and the old Grand Army man "who knew Lincoln." He gets laughs galore and applause with a meaning.

Three Songs for Screencraft Film

Three compositions have been completed for "Hotel Variety," the Screen craft production now in work at New York Fox Studio. The numbers are "I Gave the Right Kind of Love to the Wrong Kind of Man," "All Wrapped Up in Nothing at All" and "Rhythm of New York." They were composed by Lon Herscher, Paul Vincent, Allan Tambe, Ben Gordon and Al Ropell. The dances are being rehearsed by Ned Wayburn with a chorus of Wayburn girls.

DANCERS

Four Queens
New York State

This team of rhythmical dancers is surpassed by no other like team in the business. Their work is done in an entertaining and showmanly manner and the girls are beauteous. They feature split beat, unison and challenge tapping, all of which gets good and prolonged applause.

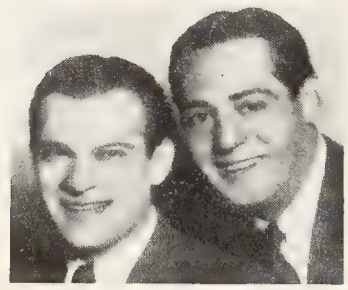
Conchita Montenegro
Cincinnati Albee

This Latin film personality opens in a Spanish dance with appropriate costume and accessories. Then, with change of costume, she goes into a pantomime of moods illustrative of her work on the screen, particularly "The Cisco Kid," winding up with an interpretative dance which is the epitome of grace and precision. As a finale she goes to the other extreme by doing a modern American dance to a "hot" jazz accompaniment. Her announcements are difficult to understand due to her decided foreign accent, but she makes up for that in action.

The DeMarcos (2)
New York Capitol

This boy and girl, formerly featured in "Hot-Cha," offer a graceful dance duet followed by a hot novelty dance which pleased.—H. P.

Lee Twins and Harriman
Detroit Fisher



The Lee Twins are red headed girls whose best work is rhythmical unison acrobatics. Harriman is a clever acrobatic dancer, but his work looks like that of an individual act, for it's not in any way tied in with the twins. Fair entertainment.

Carla Torney Group
San Francisco Fox

These talented girls are presented in Leonidoff's revue, "Stitch in Time," and offer several unusual dance creations. In one they appear out of a great sewing box and dance in the guise of scissors, spools and sewing tape. They show to special advantage in a distinctive ballet.

Gary and Dixon
New York Paramount

This boy and girl team possesses youth, personality and dance ability. Their specialty, a hotcha-cha tap dance, earned them a nice hand. —H. P.

WEEK OF AUGUST 19

HEADLINING

PARAMOUNT, NEW YORK

DIRECTION—WM. MORRIS

SINGERS

Art Jarrett
New York Capitol

Accompanied by a pianist, this radio star via a "mike" opens with "Sheltered by the Stars," following with "Sweet Sue," during which he also strums a guitar. He finales with "You Can Make My Life A Bed of Roses," which he sang in "Hot-Cha," and later in the show joins in the tribute to his late employer Ziegfeld, by singing "Sally, Won't You Come Back." A good voice but Jarrett should vary his act with a few radio anecdotes.—H. P.

Sylvia Froos
Philadelphia Fox

The radio and stage star sings "Just Whistle Your Blues Away," "If It Ain't Love," "Happy Go Lucky" and "Broken Hearted Me." She has a winning manner and the audience gave her a good hand.

Bernice Claire (2)
Baltimore Century

Miss Claire offers a cycle of songs with a man accompanying her at the piano. She receives a receptive hand. She sang two numbers and then a few bars from the songs heard in her various pictures. She went over very big.

Donald Novis
New York Paramount

This latest radio luminary opened with "The Thrill is Gone," then went into Joyce Kilmer's famous "Trees" and "The Night When Love Was Born." His efforts were enthusiastically received and he encored with 'The Daughter."

Don Galvan
New Orleans Orpheum

This singing guitarist dressed as a caballero, has a pleasant light voice and an agreeable personality. He sings a Spanish ballad, some popular songs and encores with request numbers which brought in "Mardi Gras," "The Peanut Vendor," and "Tiger Rag."

NOVELTY

George Prentice
New York Capitol

This act is a slap-stick "Punch and Judy" show which surprises by actually entertaining the grown folk just as much as the children. The speed of the action stamps Prentice as one of the cleverest manipulators in the business.—H. P.

James Evans (2)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Difficult and intricate juggling drew applause throughout this turn and proved appealing to the audience. Evans starts with one large ball, then increases to two, then three. Next he juggled a heavy wooden table, a heavy metal bed and a varicolored maltese cross.

Steve Savage
Cincinnati Albee

Presenting a take-off on Joe E. Brown, screen comedian, this lad, who possesses a mouth equal in size to that of the screen star, gives an excellent all-around imitation, plus considerable additional comedy in eccentric dancing, bodily and facial contortions and general hokum. The act went over big.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

LOUIS WEIR (Boston Loew's State) recently presented an organ solo entitled "The Grab Bag," and played it on the "World's Tiniest Console." The console is on the stage and, though it is exceptionally small, it is claimed to have the stops and combinations of a large organ. Mr. Weir offered the following numbers, each taken from the "grab bag": "Night Shall Be Filled with Music," "Evening in Caroline," "Frivolous Sal" and a laughable tongue-twister, written with the letter "S," predominating.

As an offset to the comedy incorporated, Weir closed with a solo, played in concert style, of "Snuggled on Your Shoulder." The entire solo was nicely presented and received a good reception from the comparatively few people in the house. Possibly "staid" Boston calls for "swallowtails" even with a comedy solo, but in this reviewer's opinion, a summery suit would have been far more appropriate.

MERLE CLARK (Detroit Michigan) has expressed a determination to teach this audience community singing. He does not believe that the idea can be conveyed with any enthusiasm merely through slides, consequently his solos are characterized by generous use of the microphone. He opens this week by telling the audience that he is challenging their wits with a musical crossword puzzle, and asks for a three letter word meaning wordless vocalizing. The answer is "hum," and the song accompanying it is "I'm Hummin' To Myself." The stunt is followed through with "My Silent Love," "Down By The Old Mill Stream" (with a rebus lyric), "One Hour With You" and "In My Hideaway." Clark, in very good voice, sings "It Was So Beautiful." He is winning his way here and probably will overcome all of the audience's singing reluctance.

WEST MASTERS (Denver Orpheum) called his solo for the week "Who Knows," and introducd a song by a local composer, Blanch M. Tice. A few lines on the screen asked the question "Who Knows?" followed by lines on the life of the composer. The words were flashed on the screen as he played and a rich baritone voice sang the words. Masters is locally known, having played at a number of Denver houses. He has a large following and his organ numbers are uniformly popular and favorably commented.

RUSSEL BICE (Detroit RKO Downtown) brushed the dust off the console, which has been silent for a number of weeks. His opening performance seems weak on selections, but with the assistance of Schwab and Wiegand, banjo and accordion players, Bice gets fair response and applause. The program, entitled "Song-it-is," consists of "Dream Sweetheart," "Whispering," "I'm Happy When You're Happy," "Somebody Loves You" and "Please Handle With Care." The best of the banjo and accordion numbers is "Light Cavalry."

ARMIN FRANZ (Detroit Fox) lends his artistry to an advertising tieup with a local amusement park here. The theatre's dancing school is slated for an excursion at the park, and Franz's solo, "A Trip to Jefferson Beach," serves to impress the idea. His numbers parade the features of the park. The Ferris wheel song is "You're My Everything." The merry-go-round revolves to the tune of "My Mom." "My Silent Love" rides on the scenic railway and the roller coaster is labeled "Home." Response and applause were very good despite the exploitation.

SLICES OF MELLIN

Cliff Edwards' definition of a nerve specialist is a man who tries to borrow money from him.

And here are a couple of fish stories. The Boswell girls have been visiting the Poughkeepsie estate of Justice White, one of their most ardent listeners. The chief recreation is fishing, and Connie excelled in this sport, bringing back a string of seven perch. Martha didn't have the necessary patience and went swimming instead.

Not to be outdone by their fellow radio performers, Peggy Keenan and Sandra Philips, Columbia's redheaded piano players, went trout fishing over the week end. They boast of having snared half a dozen legal sized fish.

George Olsen, who conducts his music over an NBC network during the Canada Dry program, made his mark in New York as leader of the "Good News" musical comedy orchestra. Olsen was just out of college and the show he took part in was a college football comedy.

Frank Luther, NBC tenor, writes song lyrics for his own amusement and many times for his own profit. His latest venture in the field was the creating of new verses, in English, for the old Russian folk song, "Dark Eyes."

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy) directed, as his inaugural overture, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherezade." The appearance of 77 musicians in the pit at one time was a welcome sight and called for prolonged applause. Ross amply proves his capability in directing the "World's Largest Orchestra" and, besides his fine conducting, gives the audience a touch of showmanship that undoubtedly will assist in making this aggregation even more famous.

TED MACK (Denver Denver) former master of ceremonies, is now music director. For his first offering he led the band in a twenty-minute overture and presentation. Easily the most popular m.c. Denver ever had, the applause at entrance and finale was bounteous. Ted opened with a talk about being glad to be back. Then he sings about the band, praising them collectively and individually, and all sing of "Georgia." Ted plays the clarinet and introduces Lillian Russell, a blues singer with an excellent voice. For her close she sings a verse of "Was That the Human Thing to Do" and Ted follows with a few rhymes of his own on the same idea. Ted then sings a popular number, "Lullaby of the Leaves" and follows with a request, "Madame." He closes with "Minnie the Moocher," and while the lobsterscope gives the impression of a storm he uses fifty colored children who pick up the tune. This homecoming of Ted's has been just like the others, a complete success.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) conducted his "Southern Rhapsody" overture with Robert Mack as the guest soloist. This was a well played overture. Mack sang two numbers, "Chloe" and "Swanee River," in the orchestra pit standing beside Schrader, and received big applause.

WALTER ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra, aided by the Vocal Ensemble, offer a program made up entirely of selections from the works of Karl Hoscha. Three selections are sung by the Ensemble, including the famous "Every Little Movement," and three girls of the group warble "Yama Yama Man." The numbers are largely from "Madame Sherry" and "Three Twins." The overture brought out numbers not often heard and was heartily enjoyed, judging by the applause.

Durant in Paramount Test

Jack Durant of the comedy team of Mitchell and Durant, has made tests at the Paramount studios for a possible lead in a forthcoming South Sea story. Durant, if selected, will find his partner, Frank Mitchell, cast with him. They have appeared in several Paramount shorts and are currently featured on the stage at the New York Paramount.

Sophie Tucker for Capitol

Sophie Tucker starts an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, on September 1, following five weeks at Dell's Cafe, Chicago. From the Capitol she goes to the Paradise, New York.

Powell Song Published by Witmark

"Making Hay in the Moonlight," the song sung by Dick Powell in "Blessed Event," Warner picture, will be published by M. Witmark & Sons.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

Filling the House!

In scores of better theatres, Mohawk's Scotia carpeting has proved its ability to stand up under the hardest wear. It is available in more than 20 figured patterns and in a variety of plain colors. Special designs can be made to order promptly.

Box office receipts involve something more than good programs. Good equipment helps.

Don't neglect your carpets. They play a real part in the impression made by your theatre on your patrons.

Inspect your carpets now. Do they help or hinder your business? Are they contributing to the charm, luxury and quietness of your theatre? Or are they shabby, threadbare and dangerous to walk on?

Why not re-carpet now—and in doing so, investigate Mohawk's complete lines? You'll find a Mohawk carpet that meets your needs exactly—specially created for theatre use, in the right quality, correct pattern and color, at the best price—and woven of selected, sheared virgin wools that make the carpet wear longer.

Prominent theatres everywhere are finding lasting beauty and service in Mohawk's theatre carpets. Let Mohawk's carpet specialists help you solve your floor covering problems with maximum satisfaction at minimum cost.

"ACTODECTORS"

20/40 to 100/200 Ampere 2-Bearing Actodector

ACTODECTOR CONTROL PANEL

Cushion Isolator Now Available

Century pioneers again! The 2-bearing Multiple Arc Type Actodector is now available with the new Cushioned Isolator for installations where unusual requirements must be met . . . In this mounting the Actodector is suspended in rubber, specially selected for its cushioning effects and resistance to oil and moisture. All contacts between Actodector and foundation are through rubber, thus damping out vibration . . . The sub-base is of steel—strong and rigid—requires no additional floor space or special foundation. It can be applied to Actodectors now in service.

Actodectors are furnished in both 2- and 4-bearing types. Sizes range from 20 to 600 amperes. Any number of arcs can be carried within their ampere ratings.

A CARBON CONTACT: BEING A CASE IN POINT

an editorial

IT IS now quite some time since we brought forward on this page the tragedy of a Sprocket Wheel. The occasion then was a little different. But the moral was the same. Only now, in the sad case of a Carbon Contact, so vividly related in space adjoining, the moral gains emphasis by virtue of the times.

The case of the Carbon Contact was brought to our attention by the ever alert F. H. Richardson, with the earnest comment that "it would seem that at least during these times the officials of great theatre chains would avoid waste in any form." Our zealous confrere's experience was this:

He had tried to take measurements of screen illumination in one of the theatres of a leading circuit. Finding the light to be so very unsteady that no satisfactory measurements could be taken, he quite characteristically went up to the projection room to investigate. Conscientious young men, the projectionists endeavored to explain, and one of the things brought forward was our Carbon Contact.

The parts selected were from a box containing many in a condition almost as bad. But believing the principle involved as well illustrated by one, F. H. had the parts photographed in an enlargement of twice their actual size, an exaggeration that we believe well justified, for this is by no means the only recent occasion on which laxity in projection—just now thought dictated by "economy"—has come to notice.

It seems the projectionists were asked why new parts could not be obtained. "It looks," said one, "like a case of passing the buck. Someone seems to want to get a reputation for low-cost operation. We are supposed to get all our supplies from the district office, but they don't pay any attention to requisitions, and if we write headquarters in New York, we are told that we must get supplies through the regular channels. The result is that we cannot get anything until we are in the very last ditch."

That analysis, plus the picture, is probably expressing the idea eloquently enough. We thought it timely to display the incident prominently, for the industry is about to embark on a new season of greater, finer pictures. The public will judge them in large measure by the projection of them, for no picture is anything more than the theatre's machinery can make it.

ROCKEFELLER CENTER TODAY

The Rockefeller Center project as seen from the East, nearing completion of several of the main buildings. In the immediate foreground is shown the excavation for the sunken plaza, which is to form a central feature of the development, and the foundation of the British Empire and French Republic buildings. At center, in the middle ground, is the RCA office building, a 70-story structure to house general offices of RCA and its subsidiaries. The Radio City Cinema, or RKO photoplay theatre, appears in the left background, while International Music Hall is located in the right middle ground. In the right background is shown the 31-story RKO building. The old, low structures will be shortly demolished to make room for a number of other edifices.

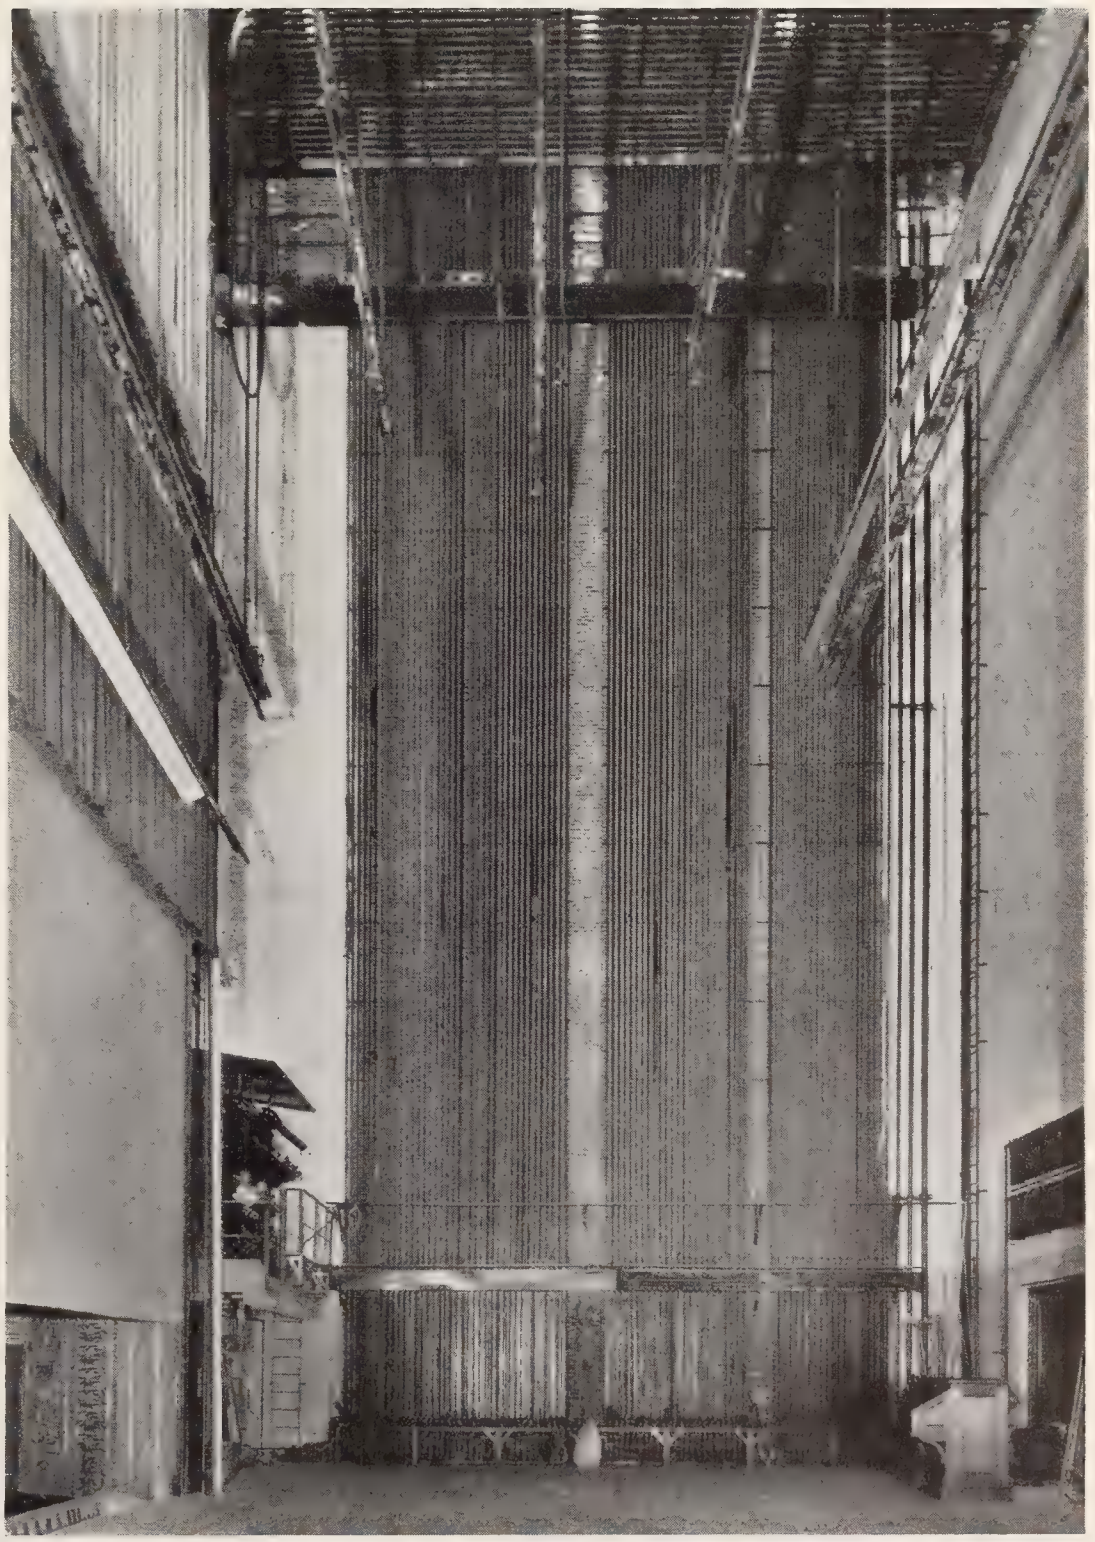
MECHANIZING THE MODERN STAGE

By ARTHUR E. CLARK

An exposition of the equipment and other provisions of the Radio City Cinema

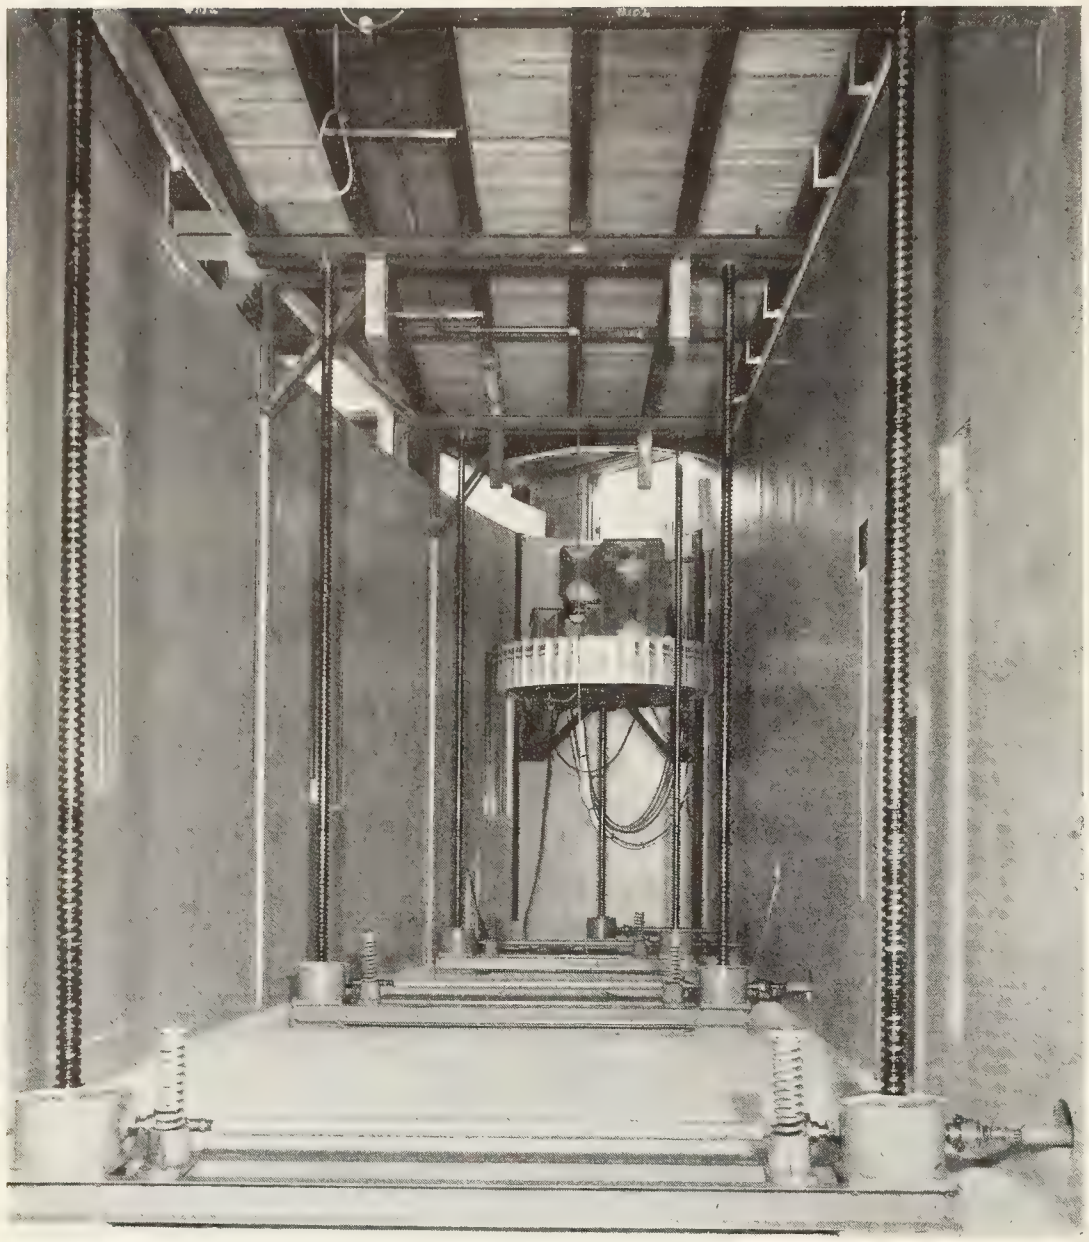
THE DESIGN and equipment of a stage for the rapid, economical and smooth-running presentation of a production is at once a science and an art, far more complex than it appears to the architect who is not experienced in this work. As in many other fields of endeavor, the stage equipment engineer is a specialist and has a specialist's intimate knowledge of the various problems likely to be encountered and most practical and economical means of solving them.

When designing the stage equipment for the Radio City Cinema, special effort was made by Peter Clark, Inc., the designers and builders of all of the stage equipment for the Cinema and the International Music Hall in Rockefeller Center, to provide innovations which would appeal not only to the patron but at the same time would result in the finest, most modern stage in any motion picture theatre. To this end, all equipment is of the most modern type, designed and constructed especially for this theatre.



The stage of the Cinema is 110 feet wide by 43 feet deep. The proscenium opening is 60 feet wide by 39 feet high.

There will be a protective asbestos fire curtain separating the stage from the auditorium. This curtain will be constructed of a structural steel frame weighing eight tons. Both the auditorium and stage side of this frame will be covered with wire-woven asbestos cloth. This curtain will be rigged so as to automatically drop in case of an emergency, such as a fire backstage.



The act curtain will be of contour type operated by nine machines located in the gridiron. These nine machines will operate nine lifting lines, which can be operated singly or together, to give any size of curtain opening or drape effect desired. This curtain will be operated by remote control. The stage manager, by pushing the proper buttons controlling each machine, can open the curtain to any size or shape desired.

THIS THEATRE will be equipped with a picture sheet frame of a size capable of screening the largest wide film production, such as Spoor, Grandeur or Magnascope. This picture sheet frame is equipped with an automatic screen adjuster with motor-operated maskings capable of masking the screen to four different picture sizes. This is accomplished by running the side maskings in or out, and the top border up or down, until the proper size of screen opening has been obtained. It is an easy matter for the projection crew to set the limit switches on the masking mechanism and lock them in place, thus predetermining the size of opening which will be obtained at that setting. When this is done, the projectionist in his booth has but to press an electric control button, marked for the size of picture he desires to project, and the maskings automatically move out and stop at the proper screen size. With this advanced type of screen adjuster, it will be possible to keep in step with all the latest developments and with any future improvements in wide picture projection.

There will be an especially designed motorized mechanism for running the speaker horns off stage when not in use, and for flying them.

The Cinema, in addition to its motion picture equipment, will have the most elaborate stage equipment of any deluxe motion picture house for presentations, vaudeville, etc. The stage will be equipped with a number of fast-working counterweight sets, light bridges of the most advanced design and construction, and a permanent cyclorama.

This cyclorama is constructed of a steel frame to which is attached a composition board and canvas covering. The cyclorama is provided with an electric hoisting machine which will lift it out of the way when not in use. Set in the stage floor just in front of the cyclorama, there is a special lighting trough—for lighting the cyclorama. This light trough is provided with motor-operated covers with remote control. The operation of lowering and lighting the cyclorama can thus be accomplished by push button control from the stage manager's board without manual effort on his part other than the pressing of the proper control buttons.

ONE OF THE newest innovations in stage equipment in the Cinema is the stage elevators. There are three adjacent elevators covering a space on the stage 50 feet long by 28 feet wide, occupying almost the entire working space of the stage. Built into the top of the stage elevators is a revolving stage electrically operated by remote control. This revolving stage is made in three sections and can only be operated when all three elevators are at the same level. An automatic locking device has been provided so that the sections of the turntable will stop in their respective positions when the current is shut off. The electric drive which operates this turntable in either direction is located in the center elevator. It is operated by remote control from the stage manager's board.

The three stage elevators can be operated separately or together. When operated up or down as one unit they are locked together by an ingenious electrical device so there can be no variation between them. When the elevators are locked together in a level position, the revolving stage will turn in either direction while the three elevators are traveling in either the up or down direction.

These elevators can also be locked in step formation and will travel either up or down without any variation in speed. The elevators are all operated by remote control by the stage manager. They have automatic stops at the top and bottom of their travel and are self-leveling at the stage.

Built into the center elevator is an elaborate arrangement of revolving contacts from which the various light pockets situated in the revolving stage floor are fed. This center mechanism also includes the large roller and thrust bearing assembly, which sustains the weight of the center operation of the revolving stage. An intricate electrical mechanism interlocked with the elevator control circuit, locks the three sections of the revolving stage together when turning.

The travel of the stage elevators is from a distance of 14 feet below stage, the trap room level, to 10 feet above the stage.

The Cinema Theatre is also equipped with an orchestra and console elevator, which travel a distance of 14 feet, from the trap room level to the stage level. The organ console elevator is built into the center of the orchestra elevator and is so interlocked electrically that when the organ console is removed, the console and orchestra elevators will travel together as one unit. This is accomplished by interlocking electrical connections in the control circuits of these elevators operated by remote control. Sliding doors have been provided in the back wall of the pit so the console can be moved into the trap room.

When the orchestra and organ console are removed from the elevator, this elevator can be raised to stage level and used as a stage apron thereby greatly enlarging the stage. When the orchestra elevator is used for this purpose the orchestra will be brought up on one of the stage elevators.

IN ORDER to fully utilize the possibilities of this equipment in line with present day production practice, footlights of the disappearing type have been installed. These footlights have motor-operated covers which can be automatically closed flush with the stage, thereby presenting an absolutely smoothly working space up to the edge of the orchestra pit rail. In their open or lighting position, the footlights present the conventional appearance. They are operated by remote control.

The amount of lighting that will be used

OTHER phases of the equipment in the Radio City Cinema, and so far as pertinent, in International Music Hall, will be described as rapidly as complete data become available. Unless further developmental work prevents, Radio City sound reproduction and projection will be discussed comprehensively in the September 24th issue of BETTER THEATRES.

LAW FOR THEATRE MANAGERS

By LEO T. PARKER

Recent decisions of the higher courts in cases involving theatres, analyzed for the theatre operator by an attorney

PICKETING has reference to a strike, boycott or some other industrial dispute. A boycott is of somewhat doubtful origin, but the courts have defined it as being a combination of many persons to cause loss to some other person, natural or corporate, by coercing others, against their will, to withhold from said person, natural or corporate, their business or trade.

It is well settled law that theatre employes have a right to combine and fix the amount of their daily wage. It is also true that when not under contract they may quit the services of their employer at any time they desire. It is alike true that theatre owners have the right to determine the daily wage they are willing to pay and whom they will employ. Moreover, members of a labor organization may without liability peacefully persuade their confederates not to work except on payment of an established wage. However, the employe may not without liability use threats, force, violence, coercion, or intimidation, nor will employes be permitted to present, urge, or advertise their cause by false statements, libelous attack, insulting language, derogatory implications, or by other means calculated to become a nuisance, obstruct traffic, or in any way to impede or hinder the orderly course of business or other relations.

In other words, a labor organization, or its employes, who perform any of the latter mentioned tactics may be enjoined by a court from continuation of such practices. On the other hand, if picketing is peacefully accomplished without threats, force, violence, false statements, insulting language, obstruction of traffic, or the like, a theatre owner cannot ordinarily prevent the picketing.

For instance, in Paramount Enterprises vs. Mitchell (140 So. 328), it was shown that certain persons picketed the space in front of a theatre and displayed signs so worded as to convey to the theatre-going public the impression that the theatre owner had refused to employ union operators in its theatre business. The wording on the placards worn by the pickets was intended to injure the good will which the theatre owner had built up. In no instance was coercion, force, or intimidation resorted to. The pickets did not enter the lobby of the theatre.

The owner of the theatre filed suit and asked the court to grant an injunction restraining members of the labor organization from picketing the theatre. However, the higher court refused to grant the injunction, and said:

"One's business is recognized as property. . . . To congregate about the entrance of one's place of business and there use force, malice, or coercion to drive away its patronage or discredit its business is not free competition and is a form of malevolence that may be legally repressed. . . . The law recognizes the right of the trades, crafts, guilds, and arts, whether composed of skilled or unskilled workmen, to organize and invite others to join them. When organized, they may use the organization to promote their social, civic, and economic betterment, among other things, that of securing as much as they can for their labor."

Municipal Lease of Auditorium

CONSIDERABLE controversy has arisen from time to time whether or not a municipality may be compelled to lease its auditorium to all persons who apply, particularly if a law exists which merely grants authority to named officials to lease the property. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of White vs. City of Cleveland (181 N. E. 24).

In this case it was shown that the city of Cleveland, Ohio, had constructed an auditorium from funds derived from bond issues authorized by vote of the citizens.

The city council adopted an ordinance which gave the commissioner of the city authority, as follows: "He shall have power from time to time to enter into contracts with persons desiring to lease such Cleveland Auditorium . . . or parts of either, under such rules as may be established by the board of control."

The operator of a theatre applied to the commissioner for a lease on the auditorium for a stated period for the purpose of exhibiting a theatrical performance. The commissioner refused to sign the lease and the theatre operator filed suit contending that the commissioner was compelled to lease the auditorium to whomsoever may apply, since his failure to do so resulted in Cleveland and its citizens suffering loss of revenue. However, the higher court held the commissioner not compelled to lease the building, saying:

"This public music hall is devoted to no governmental purpose, and is not employed in carrying on or maintaining any governmental function. . . . Relator (theatre operator) seems to construe this provision as a requirement on the part of the commissioner to lease such auditorium or any part of it to whomsoever may apply. It clearly appears from the agreed statement of facts that a policy with reference to the leasing of this public music hall has been adopted which precludes the leasing thereof for theatrical performances such as are usually provided for by privately owned theatres in the city of Cleveland, and that is the basis of the refusal to permit the relator to have the use of the public music hall. In our opinion there can be no question that the rental, use, and occupancy of the auditorium, and any part thereof, are within the power and control of the municipality, acting through its public officers to whom such duties and powers have been duly delegated."

Duties of Executive Explained

IT IS IMPORTANT to know the exact legal duties of an executive of a theatre corporation. Generally speaking, the courts have held that the duties of an executive relate to active participation in the control, supervision, and management of the business. Doing routine menial labor is not acting in an executive capacity.

On the other hand, the legal duties of an executive may be expressly defined in a contract between the executive and the corporation. In construing contracts of this nature it is a fundamental rule that the courts may look not only to the language employed, but to the subject-matter and the surrounding circumstances, and may avail themselves of the same interpretation which the parties possessed when the contract was made. The latest higher court case involving these points of the law is Arkansas Amusement Corporation vs. Kempner, (57 F. [2d] 466).

The facts of this case are that a man named Kempner owned certain motion picture theatres. It was decided to put these theatres owned by Kempner and another theatre into a new corporation known as the Arkansas Enterprises, Incorporated. Kempner was employed under a contract at a specified sum per year. A clause in this contract provided that the corporation agreed to employ Kempner "either as Vice-President or, at its option, in other executive capacity, for the period between the date of this contract and November 1, 1939, and Kempner agrees to accept said employment and to give to Little Rock and its affairs such of his time, attention and services as it requests of him. Little Rock agrees to pay to Kempner in return for said services salary at the rate of Eight Thousand ($8,000) Dollars a year from the date hereof to November 1, 1939, and said salary to be paid in weekly installments of One Hundred Fifty-Three Dollars and Eighty-Five Cents ($153.85) each."

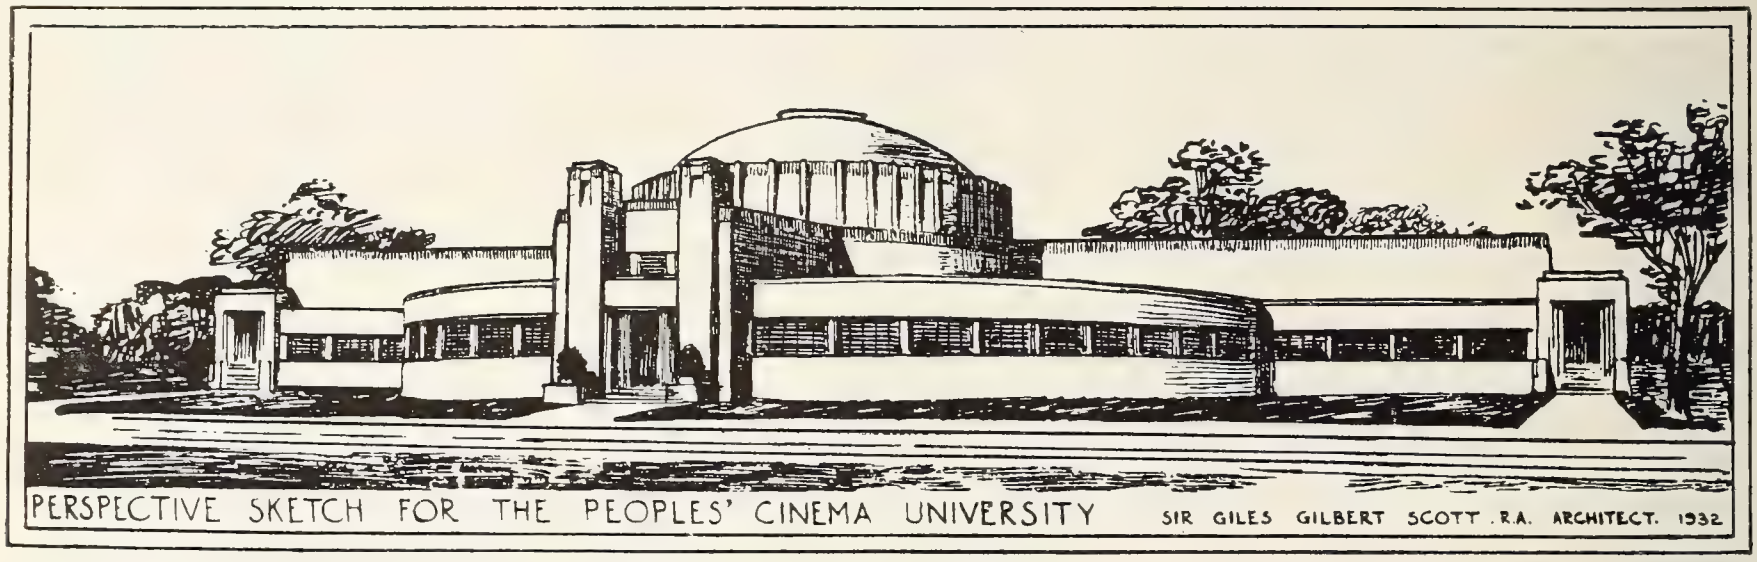
Discussion arose whether or not Kempner should be compelled to attend all executive meetings. A corporation official wrote a letter to Kempner stating that his services and presence was required at an executive meeting at a stated time. Kempner replied that in accordance with the terms of his contract he was not required to attend such meetings, but that he would be very glad to attend this meeting and render any assistance possible.

Soon afterward one of the corporation's officials wrote notifying Kempner that since he had stated that he had no employment contract with the company no further payments would be made on the salary account. Kempner filed suit to recover the agreed salary and to compel enforcement of the contract. The counsel for the corporation contended that the contract was void because it was ambiguous. However, the court held the contract not ambiguous, and stated the following important law:

"It is our conclusion that Kempner bound himself under the contract in suit to serve the Little Rock Company as vice-president or 'in other executive capacity,' and that he was compelled in carrying out his contract to perform such reasonable services in that capacity as the company required of him in connection with the picture theatre business of appellant, and that under the contract it cannot be said that these duties were merely nominal. In instructing the jury that this contract was ambiguous, we think the learned trial court erred, and that appellant was entitled to an instruction that the contract was not ambiguous. . . . If Kempner purchased a 'soft position,' as he evidently considered he did, nevertheless he obligated himself to do certain things. If he had been elected to the vice-presidency of the company, he would have had many duties to perform. He could not have determined arbitrarily what he would do. He is obligated to do what he contracted to do, whether the position be soft or hard, and regardless of what he paid for it."

Lease Automatically Cancelled



ORDINARILY the obligations of a valid theatre lease contract must be fulfilled by the contracting parties, otherwise the person who breaches the contract is liable in damages. However, if for any reason, not within the control of the contracting parties, it becomes impossible to fulfill the terms of a lease, then all parties are relieved from liability and the lease contract is automatically cancelled.

For example, in Alpert (3 P. [2d] 61), it was shown that a company leased a building before its construction in contemplation that the owner of a lot would construct the building thereon. After the lease contract was signed city ordinances were enacted authorizing widening the narrow street abutting the property with the result that the size of the contemplated building was considerably decreased.

Litigation developed over the question whether the company was automatically relieved from liability on the lease. In holding the lease to be automatically cancelled, the court said:

"It was proof that the subject-matter of the lease, which the parties agreed to enter into, never came into existence, and hence the parties were excused from carrying out their agreement to enter into a lease. . . . It is . . . well settled that, where performance depends upon the existence of a given thing, and such existence was as-

A UNIVERSITY OF THEATRES

A VENTURE that has for its purpose the establishment of what is called the "People's Cinema University," has been inaugurated in England. The announced object of such an institution would be to create a cultural center for the practical application, study and development of cinematography in all its branches, for general educational purposes. Sir Oswald Stoll and Sir James Marchant are named as the guiding spirits in the effort.

Reproduced here are a perspective and a schematic plan of the interior of the building already proposed as the home of the school. In the grouping of a number of small theatres around a pivotal area (in this case to be employed as a planetarium), the design is reminiscent of various schemes by which architects have sought to effect amusement centers of both community and commercial type. The London film university has been designed by the British architect, Sir Giles Gilbert Scott.

Besides teaching a wide range of subjects in the arts and sciences, entirely by means of films, the school will conduct broadcasts, and also serve as a disseminating bureau for other establishments having use for its educational equipment.

The planetarium occupying the central area (shown in schematic plan) will be similar to those in several cities of Germany, in Rome, in Chicago, and elsewhere. This chamber contains electro-mechanical equipment for the realistic study of astronomy, without recourse to the heavens themselves. Each of the theatres will be fully equipped for the projection of sound pictures, the screen being, in fact, the lecturer's only rostrum, and the speakers his only voice.

A MODERN SMALL-CITY THEATRE

Describing the new Paramount theatre in Amarillo, Tex., designed in a contemporary pattern by F. Scott Dunne

WHILE THE large theatre will always have that impressive appeal which is derived from sheer magnitude, it has probably been the smaller among the newer houses which have invited the architect's most specialized talents. This may be due to the very demands of the smaller theatre. When space and money are limited, ingenuity must be the greater. But perhaps a factor as active as anything else is that the simple economy of the slighter design eliminates those superfluities and excesses which divert the attention from the essential purpose of the structure.

The increased interest in the smaller theatre—houses of 900 seats are now receiving the same amount of highly trained attention as was given only the 3,000-to-4,000 seat theatre a few years ago—has brought about an establishment of values that otherwise might still be pretty indefinite. Not so long ago foyers ran rampantly all over the super-theatre, while theatres even as large as 1,500 seats were likely to be quite cramped in their auxiliary chambers. Allocation of lounges economically, refashioning of the balcony and mezzanines, has been the means of making the smaller theatre quite as spacious as the vast one, and in many instances, better adapted to its business.

Foyer space in the new Paramount theatre in Amarillo, Tex., is notably ample, and in many respects this house offers brilliant comment on the advances of theatre design with respect to the smaller and medium-sized house. The Paramount seats 1,500.

The Paramount, erected by the Amarillo Theatre Company, is operated under a lease by Paramount Publix. The building is adapted to both theatrical and commercial uses, with overall dimensions 180 x 140 feet. It is of fireproof construction, faced with granite and terra cotta. The theatre represents an investment of $150,000, exclusive of land and equipment. Equipment and furnishings cost about $50,000. Amarillo is a city of 50,000.

The Paramount is a two-floor house, but the balcony is very shallow, seating only 300. The 1,200 seats on the main floor are arranged in 33 rows. There are eight rows in the balcony. All seats are full-upholstered, and are by Heywood-Wakefield.

The projection room measures 12x30½ feet. All auxiliary rooms, except the motor-generator room (which is located in the basement), adjoin the projection room. The latter is painted an olive green.

Three views of the Paramount in Amarillo. Those of the auditorium show both the forward and rear portions. In the top picture the pattern of the paneled murals may be discerned—these are painted on canvas. The shallowness of the balcony is well indicated in the other view. There are but eight rows on this upper level, which is more like a mezzanine loge section than a true balcony. The view of the facade indicates its treatment in granite and terra cotta Projection equipment includes two Simplex projectors, Western Electric sound system, two spots and one effect machine. The maximum screen size possible is 20x35 feet. The distance of the screen from the first row of seats is 22 feet. The angle of projection is 10°.

Air conditioning, including heating and cooling, is effected through a plenum system, Carrier-Kroeschel refrigeration. Except for the stage area, the entire theatre is air-conditioned. Both oil and gas are used for fuel in the heating system.

Acoustic correction consists in the use of "Sabinite" and sound-absorbing fabrics at the walls and ceilings.

Special illumination facilities are provided for in three color effect equipment in the auditorium operated on a motor-driven dimmer system by Major; and also in flood-lighting at the facade.

The Paramount is equipped with a full-rigged stage (apparatus by Peter Clark). The proscenium measures 94x24 feet.

The entire theatre is of modern pattern in general, with vivid ornamentation. The main lobby is full-carpeted in brightly colored patterns, while above a marble base, are walls ornamented with murals.

The main floor foyer, located at the rear of the auditorium, is reached through wide doorways beneath the stairway to the balcony level. This foyer is full-carpeted in the same pattern as found in the lobby. Walls are of plaster with only incidental ornamentation, while the ceiling is decorated over canvas. All lounge areas follow the same pattern.

The auditorium has a panel scheme at the walls, each panel bearing a delicate fantastic mural done on canvas. The ceiling has a radial pattern, with a medium-sized lighting fixture as a center piece. Toward the proscenium, the ceiling steps downward to meet the square arch. This portion is rich ornamented in scrolled bands done in paint and leaf.

WIDE RANGE SOUND: WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT MEANS TO THE THEATRE

By H. G. KNOX

A non-technical discussion of the latest climactic step in the electro-mechanical progress of the talking motion picture

MUCH HAS BEEN written concerning the newly developed Wide Range Sound; most of this, however, has been for the technical man and little is available to explain to the theatre man what it is and why it was developed. The following is written in an attempt to make clear some of the elementary technical phases of it in a non-technical way.

In making comparisons it is essential that some sort of standard be adopted—a yardstick by means of which performance can be measured. The standard in the reproduction of sound is the only obvious one available; namely, the original sound; and the progress of the art has been steadily aimed at the goal of perfection. Advances have been steady for the most part, with occasional developments resulting in a large gain at a single attack.

From the old time "tinny" phonograph and battery-operated radio with its metal horn we have progressed steadily, until modern sound reproduction, if not within sight of the ultimate goal, is at least approaching it. Obviously, however, the nearer the goal is approached, the more difficult and more costly further improvements become.

Unless the comparison is made directly between present day sound reproduction and the original sound, it is often difficult to appreciate how far short of the goal we are. Having become accustomed to artificially reproduced sounds, our ears and brains function automatically to a degree to supply the missing sound so that we frequently are unaware of its absence.

Next time an opportunity presents itself, notice carefully some characteristic sounds from the screen, such as the clapping of hands, the operation of a typewriter, rustling of paper, or the ringing of an alarm clock. You recognize the sound without difficulty because you see the alarm clock ringing vigorously, or the typist at work at her machine. It would not be so easy, however, were there no picture, to tell whether the bell is an alarm clock, a telephone or a door bell.

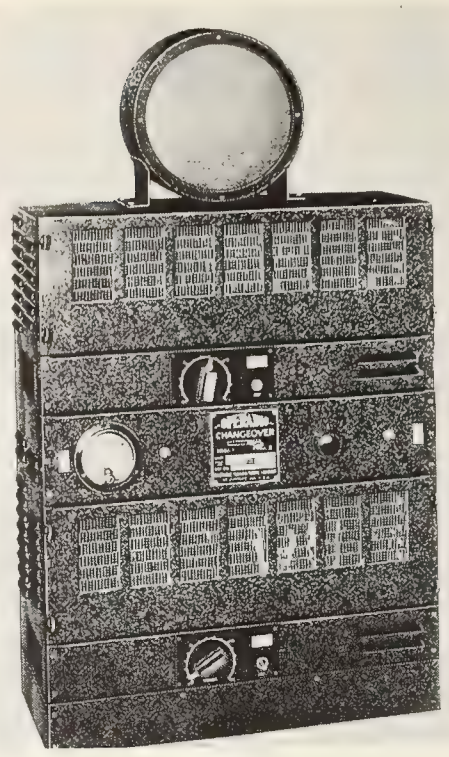
Why is one sound natural and barely distinguishable from the original, while another may be so different from the original that it is scarcely recognized?

TO ANSWER this, we must understand clearly that sound has two fundamental properties or characteristics: one is pitch, or frequency, the other is intensity or volume. Pitch or frequency ranges from the low notes of the long organ pipes which shake the building when operated at their full power, to the shrill notes produced by the squeaking of a door hinge or the chirp of crickets. Intensity, or volume, covers the range from the faintest sounds which can be detected, such as the rustling of leaves in summer, to the loudest sounds which the ear can stand, such as artillery gun-fire, for example. Perfection in sound reproduction must necessarily encompass the entire range in both respects.

All of this of course doesn't explain the what and why of Wide Range reproduction, but simply furnishes a background of fact which will facilitate such an explanation.

Perhaps the clearest way to visualize what Wide Range accomplishes in extending the pitch range which can be reproduced, is through reference to the standard 88-note piano keyboard. The Western Electric Sound System of today is capable of reproducing all the notes on the keyboard except a few at the lower end. Wide Range effectively extends this more than a full octave on each end, and it is this added range which greatly improves the naturalness of speech and music. Leopold Stowkowski, director of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, in his recent experiments in co-operation with the Bell Telephone Laboratories, has shown that for full effect, the upper frequency range for most musical instruments is at least one octave, and in some cases nearly two octaves, above the highest note on the standard piano keyboard. Particularly is this true of the percussion type instruments, such as cymbals, tympano, triangle, xylophone and snare drum.

The early sound pictures required the exercise of considerable imagination to actually feel the actor's presence on the screen before you. There was, for one thing, the ever-present noise in the background to remind one that the reproduction was mechanical. In 1930 Western Electric announced Noiseless Recording, which at one step eliminated these undesired noises from the sound-on-film record. But still there remained an unnaturalness of quality in some sounds: the sound of the actor's cane striking the marble floor didn't sound just right, a telephone bell appeared muffled, the rippling brook didn't quite ripple. Since most of such sounds depend upon the higher frequencies for their naturalness, the upward extension of the frequency range in Wide Range has provided for them what they lacked. When witnessing a Wide Range picture, one can shut one's eyes and have no difficulty in identifying the sound of the individual instruments.



MANY PERSONS listening to Wide Range reproduction have expressed themselves as having the feeling that the actors are actually present in person. They seem to stand out in bolder relief and one is not continually aware that it is only a picture.

Although Wide Range involves primarily the extension of the frequency range which can be reproduced, the volume range is also materially extended to insure that the full effect can be obtained. In the past it has been customary in recording studios to "condense" the volume so that as extremely loud passages are approached in recording, they are cut down, and extremely soft passages are increased. With the greater volume range made available by Wide Range, music can be reproduced in such a way as to greatly enhance the emotional effect so necessary to good music, especially orchestra music.

Theatre managers will naturally be interested in what equipment alterations are necessary to permit the use of Wide Range. Each theatre will require careful individual treatment for best results. The added equipment needed depends on the individual characteristics of the particular theatre.

Loud speakers of a new design including separate high frequency units are among the principal items. Also there will be special connecting networks, or filters, to separate the low from the high frequencies, since these are reproduced by different types of loud speakers. Various other changes and adjustments to the equipment, including additional amplification facilities to handle the increased volume range, will complete the conversion.

The dual sound-on-film amplifier recently brought out by the Operadio Manufacturing Company of St. Charles, Ill. A single switch permit change from one system to the other. Capacity is suitable to a theatre of a little over 1,000 seats.

Each forward step taken in the art of sound reproduction has been attended by certain difficulties, a condition which is true in the present instance. Thus, through the introduction of Wide Range reproduction, it becomes necessary to exercise considerable care to make sure that the equipment is in excellent operating condition and that undesired noises do not enter the system. It also becomes far more important that close attention be paid to the acoustics of the auditorium. Sound, which is to all practical purposes perfect at the mouth of the loud speaker, may be ruined by unfavorable acoustic conditions in the auditorium by the time it reaches the ears of the audience.

As is usually the case with improvements in sound reproduction, the recording and reproducing improvements go hand in hand. Wide Range involves both recording and reproducing, and although the conversion of theatre equipment to Wide Range will result in a marked improvement even with present day recordings, the full benefit of the new development can not be realized until the studios are equipped to record by the improved process. The first recording installation has been made in the United Artists Studio, and their first Wide Range production, "Rain," is booked to open in the near future at Grauman's Chinese theatre in Hollywood, which has been especially equipped for the purpose.

Wide Range results in an increased faithfulness of reproduction and increased intelligibility of dialogue, which gives the listener a sensation of realism that grows upon him gradually.

As one very successful exhibitor expressed himself to me recently after having heard Wide Range, "I think this development will start an entirely new cycle of public interest in talking motion picture entertainment."

"WE WANT HIGHER SCREEN BRILLIANCE!"

THE PROJECTIONIST'S DEMAND THAT MADE THE SUPER CINEPHOR SYSTEM

"Improve our projection lenses" you said, "that's the best way to give us higher screen brilliance and better projection."

Like all good craftsmen we like a challenge. So we went to work for several years and built the Super Cinephor. The formula is the secret of the world's leading optical scientists. The glass is all made in the B & L plant and the performance of the new Super Cinephor is a revelation.

Ask the man who has used one! Ask your National Theatre Supply Man too . . . he's got complete information.

Your request will bring an interesting booklet on Super Cinephor, the big new aid to superior projection. Better write us today.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

AN IMPORTANT LESSON TAUGHT BY THE TIMES

SURELY the economic conditions should teach projectionists a lesson. During the years following the World war, humanity to a considerable extent went just plain crazy. We of older age who had experienced similar conditions before, knew as well as one could know through things learned in the great school of life, that we were drifting rapidly toward a depression, for the simple reason that we were rather steadily overdoing just about everything that could be overdone. It is, however, not my purpose to discuss this phase of the matter. I only want to point out to my readers the fact that in the present situation lies a lesson which should be very apparent.

Even the most powerful organizations have been forced to give way in two directions; first, to make presumably temporary concessions in the matter of lower wages; second, to work only a portion of the time. Adding these two together, it is found, in a very large percentage of cases, that while officially wages have not always been cut, except temporarily, as a matter of fact, the individual wages have been very largely sliced, and if any of you have the idea that the very same conditions of the past few years are coming back and things are again going to be just as they were, you had better, in my opinion, revise your ideas.

The second, and to me the real, point in this whole matter is that a very large percentage of projectionists are either entirely out of work, or are working part-time at the expense of those men who should be working full-time. That, too, is something that cannot continue for ever. It follows that if in the end a number of men are dropped, the men who are dropped are not going to be those who have studied their business, treating it with proper respect, and by so doing winning the respect of their employers.

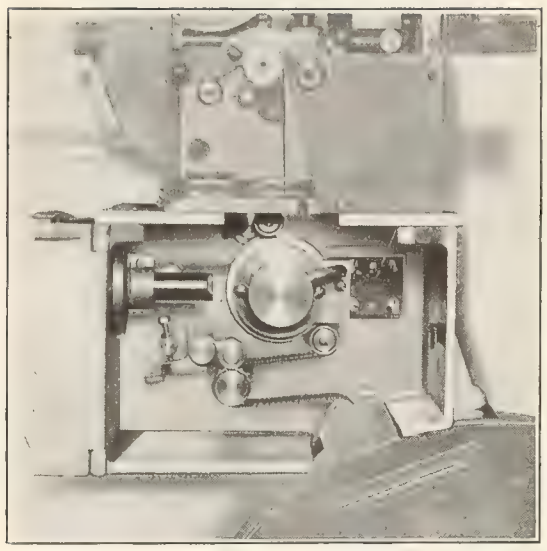
I have declared at times without number that eventually something of this kind was going to happen. If exhibitors are wise, they will insist upon retaining the real projectionists, remembering that, as I have many times said, a large amount of the entertainment value of the motion picture depends directly upon the care and skill with which the picture is projected. Also, to a very large extent, the overhead attached to projection is dependent upon the knowledge, care and skill of the projectionist.

If unions are wise they will recognize the fact that things are changing. Exhibitors and the motion picture industry as a whole are at last coming to recognize the importance attached to both practical and technical knowledge in the reproduction of both sound and picture. I therefore respectfully suggest to unions, particularly the more powerful ones, that they take careful note of the lesson the present situation should teach, and so govern their future course that the industry be assured always of the services of the more capable and ambitious projectionists.

CONDENSER TROUBLES

JOHN L. PERDUNE of Mobile, Ala., has had trouble, which he sets forth as follows, asking advice: "Recently I had the sound equipment in two theatres I own not far from here, overhauled by supposed-to-be competent men. Since then several condensers have blown out, causing a lot of trouble. In one instance it was necessary to shut down the show and refund more than $65. Can you suggest any reason why those condensers blow out? I would appreciate it if you can. The repair man told me they had replaced several condensers with new ones."

No, I cannot say with certainty, unless you forward one of the blown condensers for examination. However, I can make a guess. You say the repair men replaced several condensers with new ones. It is possible they did either one of two things; namely, (a) made the replacements with condensers designed to work on a voltage lower than that of the circuits they were installed on, or (b) that they used condensers in which the insulation was too light, both of which items really amount to the same thing, though they are a bit different the way I mean it.



Commercial condensers are usually made of tin foil and paper. The foil is wound in layers, with insulating paper between each layer. Then alternate layers are connected in multiple (parallel) and form one side of the condenser. That is to say, layers 1, 3, 5, etc., form one side of the condenser, and layers 2, 4, 6, etc., are similarly connected to form the other side.

With such a set-up it may readily be understood that unless the paper insulation used be able to withstand the voltage, trouble will ensue. Also, another factor enters, for it is exceedingly important that the insulation be as thin as practicable. The thinner it is the greater the capacitance of the condenser, hence the more compact it will be and (probably) the lower its cost of manufacture.

Reputable sound equipment manufacturers design their condensers with great care, knowing that faulty condensers will cause their sound equipment to function unsatisfactorily, and that they will have a flock of trouble pronto. However, just as there are manufacturers who make "dupe" projector parts which seldom function perfectly, there also are manufacturers who make condensers whose only virtue is that they are low in first cost. Now, Friend Perdune, I don't know whether or not your repair men "saved" any thing in purchase price by installing "cheap" condensers, but that is my guess. If that be true, unless you stipulated that only condensers supplied by the manufacturer of your sound equipment, or recommended by them, be installed, nothing can be done about it.

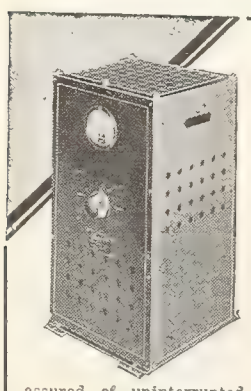
I would most emphatically recommend to exhibitors, managers and projectionists having equipment, either picture or sound, overhauled or repaired, that they make it a definite part of the agreement with the one doing the repairing, that only parts made by or approved by the equipment manufacturer be installed. And before the bill is paid, make sure that that stipulation has been rigidly adhered to.

It may be freely granted that "duped" parts (by "duped" parts I mean any parts designed to be used in any standard picture or sound equipment which are not made or approved by the equipment manufac-

Quality Now Demanded

SYNCROFILM

The Answer



Showgoers are growing particular. They'll turn out in 1929 style for a four-star picture, as you well know. The problem is to get them lined up for run-of-studio stuff. Here's the answer:

Get all the quality there is in ordinary films. They have plenty of it, but only Syncrofilm seems to get all of it out. Just using Syncrofilm moves a flop into the two-star class. The box-office proves this.

Nowadays actors are putting across the drama with voice more than with action. When one says, "Darlig, Ah gluff hew," there's no thrill for the stenographer in the sixth row, and no resale. But watch her come back when the words are clear and passionate! Syncrofilm delivers the passion . . . and resales.

turer) manufacturers may be able to, and may actually make parts, just as good as those made or supplied by the equipment manufacturer himself. Maybe he can, but in any case care must be taken to assure proper adaptation and installation.

The manufacturer of equipment such as, for example, a motion picture projector, has his business reputation staked upon the satisfactory performance of that projector. He well knows that the improper installation of a single part may cause the whole mechanism to give unsatisfactory results, hence if he has any intelligence at all, he will supply only high grade replacement parts, properly fashioned for his projector.

STEADYING THE GLASS IN STUDYING SCREEN

IN ORDER to see the screen from a distance sufficiently well to detect travel ghost and other faults accurately, it is necessary that the projectionist be supplied with a field glass of sufficient power to bring the screen within 25 feet of his eyes. It is also essential that this glass be held perfectly steady, and that is quite some job for the hands to perform, when it is considered that the wavering of the glass by so much as one sixty-fourth of an inch would make the whole screen dance up and down or sidewise a considerable distance.

The Practical Projection Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has had this matter up with the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, who are now designing a clamp suitable to hold the glass in position, perfectly steady and all ready for use. However, the need is urgent, and for temporary use by projectionists, until this finished device arrives, I reprint an article from the August, 1926, issue of the American Projectionist, as follows:

"Charlie Travis of Schenectady dropped in on us at a moment when we were trying to hold a pair of heavy field glasses steady with one hand while we endeavored to eradicate (that's a good one) a suspicion of travel ghost on the screen some 200 feet distant. He saw our difficulty and told us of a scheme used by Brother Townshend at the Eastman theatre, which we pass on for your information.

"A piece of gas pipe is fastened to the front wall with a flange, at one side of the observation port. The length depends on the distance the projector is away from the front wall. Probably a foot in length will do in the majority of cases. A hack saw cut is then made half way through the pipe one inch from the outer end, and another cut is made from the end to join the cross cut. Now you have a pipe with a one-inch lip on the outer end. Next get a length of smaller pipe, one that will slide easily into the first one. Drill a small hole about 8 inches from one end and insert a pin. Now make a right angle bend and fasten to the other end a large size battery clamp.

"Your field glasses are held by this clamp. When you need them, swing the rod over and your glasses are held right in front of the port by the pin resting on one side of the lip on the pipe. When you have finished with them, swing them over so that the pin rests on the other side of the lip, and they are out of your way, but ready for instant use when you do need them. Both hands are left free and the glasses are perfectly steady when in use."

LIFE OF FILM CEMENT

JOHN GLENCADDY of Houston, Tex., wants to know what is the useful life of film cement. He says, "Does film cement deteriorate rapidly. I have been told cement I have had on hand unopened for four months is unfit for use. A Houston projectionist told me this and I don't believe it. Will you please set me right?"

Presumably cement which is kept tightly corked in bottles will not deteriorate in the time you name. As a matter of fact, however, I would not myself use cement, no matter how kept, after four months of storage. I would regard freshly made cement as distinctly better.

As a matter of fact, cement which has once been uncorked deteriorates rapidly, especially if exposed to the air. I long ago recommended the use of the film cement container. It is exceedingly important that cement be kept at all times free from contact with the air, especially in damp climates or during wet weather. Cement absorbs moisture from the air very rapidly, and after such absorbtion it is no longer really good cement. True, you may not be able to see any material difference in its action when you make a splice. Were it possible to watch that splice, however, you would find it to be a weak sister. It would in all human probability soon loosen up, later pulling apart.

Regardless of how the cement be kept, I would advise every projectionist to heave out all old cement once in 30 days, replacing it with fresh stock.

WHAT IS MEANT BY THE TERM "OPAQUE"

RECENTLY a projectionist in New York City sent in a rather severe criticism of the following, contained in a projection school correspondence course:

"Substances through which light can not pass are said to be opaque; that is, this class of substances blocks light rays, and we are not able to see through them. A block of wood or a piece of bakelite are said to be opaque. If we hold them up to the light, we cannot see objects through them. All substances absorb light in varying degrees, but in the case of opaque substances all of it is absorbed."

The correspondent took issue with this. He said it was wrong and that wrong statements should not be included in any school course. My view is that if a substance absorbed all color, it would be totally invisible, except as black, appearing to the eye exactly as things appear at the bottom of a coal mine with all lights out.

I wrote an article naming the course and setting the matter forth, sending the sponsor of the course a copy of the article, inviting prepublication explanation, if any could be made. In response I received a courteous letter disagreeing with my contention, or of our contention, rather (for I took sides with the projectionist correspondent), and suggesting that I submit the matter to some eminent physicist.

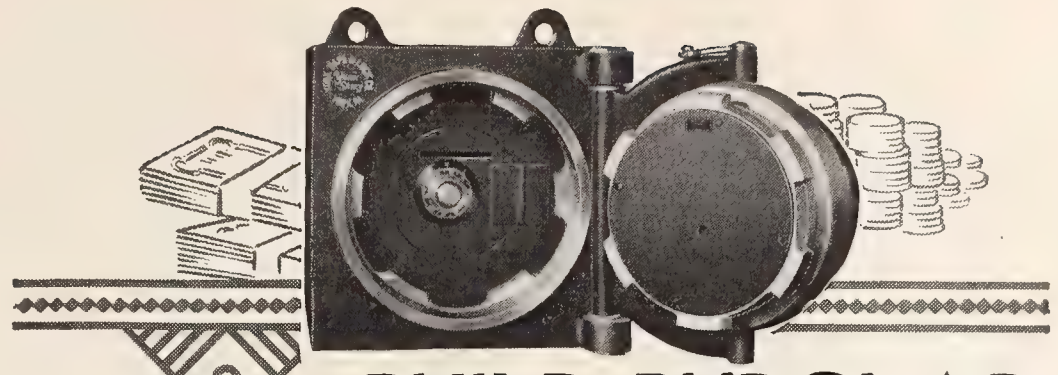
This I did, only to receive an uncertain reply. I then wrote the school, saying that if opaque substances absorbed all light rays, then my conception of the meaning of the term opaque was all wrong. I sent all correspondence along, asking the president of the school to please submit the whole matter to the Bureau of Standards in Washington for decision. My request was immediately complied with, and here is the result:

"I have given the correspondence inclosed a cursory review and have read the text on 'Optics.' I agree with the correctness of Mr. Adams' [the projectionist correspondent] criticism, but am inclined to think that while the facts of capacity are not expressed with scientific accuracy, the thoughtful student would not in that case be mislead.

"But Mr. Adams appears to have selected one of the most harmless cases. The author of the text book in question says, on Page 3, a 100-watt light is barely visible at a distance of a quarter of a mile on a very clear night; he evidently has not tried the experiment. Again he says that blue glass absorbs all colors but blue light; he has not tried it. One common blue glass, known as 'cobalt glass,' lets through a very appreciable percentage of all spectral colors: red, green and blue strongly; orange and yellow to a smaller extent. The mixture is blue for the same reason that a proper mixture of spectral colors may be white.



"I will not enumerate any more inaccuracies; question marks on the page margins locate several. Such statements are not found in acceptable texts.

"As to opacity, it is a property possessed by a body relative to the light which has already pentrated it. If, of an appreciable amount of light starting through a body, none reaches the boundary beyond, then the body is opaque. A Porro prism of glass totally reflects back on its path practically all incident light falling perpendicularly on its face; but a Porro prism is not opaque. Reflection therefore plays no part in the definition of opacity."—(Signed) C. A. Skinner, Chief Optics Division.

SOME REMARKS ON MAZDA EQUIPMENT

ROY S. COOK, manager of the Attica Opera House in Attica, Ohio, wants advice. He writes, "Recently I wrote you regarding sound equipment. The advice you gave was greatly appreciated. We small exhibitors would certainly be up against it without your help, and again I come to you for advice.

BUILD BURGLAR PROTECTION into YOUR TICKET OFFICE

THE installation of a YORK Round Door Chest is so easy and economical that you cannot afford to be without this protection for your cash receipts. Anchored in a block of solid concrete, this sturdy little safe defies all menace of fire and theft. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy door. And that will stop any burglar.

When desired, the YORK Chest is also provided with the "Hold-up Partition" as illustrated. Provided with a slot for the insertion of money, this inner door may be kept closed and offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for a YORK Chest in a reasonable length of time.

Let us show you why so many companies, both large and small, have adopted them. Write for illustrated folder.

lamphouse, using a 110-volt, 1,000-watt bulb if possible. If not, then a 30-volt, 900-watt bulb. What I want to ask you is, what focal length condensers should I have, and how should they be installed?"

Sorry, Friend Cook, but I must decline to offer advice in such a matter as this. First, I am not personally familiar with all the various adapters on the market. Second, if I gave you advice and things did not turn out well, possibly because of defects in the equipment itself, the maker of the equipment would have a "goat" right handy, and I would be that animal. It therefore is properly up to the one you purchase the equipment from to give all information necessary to proper installation and operation, and to give some reasonable guarantee in the matter of satisfactory results.

You are selling admissions, the number of sales being to a considerable extent dependent upon excellence in results upon your screen and through your horns. There are several excellent Mazda lamp equipments for sale. They will provide ample illumination for your 10.5-foot picture, but they are not make-shifts designed to cheapen installation cost. They are designed to provide maximum results, reasonable length of life and a minimum of trouble in operation. It is, I think you must agree, hardly within reason that an equipment designed to fit into any one of several different makes and kinds of lamphouses can possibly be the equal of equipments built up throughout as a unit.

"But they are cheaper in first cost," you say.

True, but did you ever hear of the chap who bought a $1,000 car second-hand for $200? Six months after a friend asked, "How much did that car cost?" The answer was enlightening. "It cost me," said the man, "$2,400, as follows: First cost, $200; repairs, $800; trouble (estimated) $1,000."

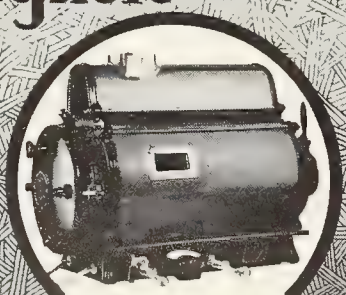
"But you said $2,400."

"Yep! I used up fully $400 worth of profanity!"

Friend Cook, I would proceed thusly: Demand from the maker or dealer the name and location of at least three theatres, in which the equipment they are trying to sell you has been in use from three to six months. Write both the manager and the projectionist of these theatres, asking what they think of the equipment. The answers should have very real value. On them you would be justified in basing your decision for or against installation. (Many thanks for your kind words concerning my work.)

PROJECTION COMMENT FROM ENGLAND

FROM H. CRIDLAND of Harehills, Leeds, England, comes the following letter:



"Dear Mr. Richardson: Many thanks for your letter. Your presumption that I am a projectionist is correct. This is my 21st year in the profession. I am a member of the Guild of British Projectionists and Technicians, Ltd. which, as you are aware, is a body of men who get together, give and receive ideas and visit places of technical interest with a view to improving their projectional knowledge wherever possible. I am, however, writing you personally, not in behalf of, or even with the knowledge of, the Guild.

"You may be interested to learn that I have known you through your writings since 1912. Just mention this as evidence that although I am a stranger to you, you are not to me.

"Well, Mr. Richardson, I am chief projectionist at the Tower in this city (seating capacity about 1,050). Also, have charge of projection and equipment at two other theatres operated by our company. We use Kalee projectiors and Western Electric 2-S, 41 type sound system. We have two motor generators, located in a basement 25 feet square by 9 feet high. In this room also is a small motor generator for float charging the secondary lighting battery, which latter is located in another spacious room on the top story, where also are the batteries for the sound system, telephones, etc. The projection room is situated just behnd and above the balcony. It is 25 feet long by 19 feet wide by 9 feet high. Built into one corner is the non-sync room, in which is a library of about 150 up-to-date records. We have three projectors, two spots and a stereopticon.

ing unable to squeeze spares and replacements out of their employers. My sympathies are with these projectionists, for they will still be expected to give a first class show, which no man can possibly do with either third-class equipment or equipment in need of replacement.

"Fortunately for me, our general manager is keenly interested in projection and all matters technical. I should very soon be hauled over the coals for any failure in keeping my equipment up-to-date and in first-class condition. I can have anything I ask for, provided it can be shown that its installation will either improve projection or increase efficiency in operation. He is one of the few managers who realize that box office income is to a considerable extent dependent upon good projection.

"Recently in a conversation with a friend who has lately returned from your country, I was informed that the impression on your side of the 'pond' is fairly general that projection over here is of a very low standard, whereas his own observations proved it to be very much the reverse. In fact, he went so far as to say that he had seen much better projection in some of our cinemas than he had in some of yours. I suppose I am treading on dangerous ground, but I would like to dispel the illusion, if it exists, that projectionists over here are just machine operators. Believe me, Mr. Richardson, if you were present at some of our Guild meetings you would realize the fact that our members are really live-wires.

"By the way, I have another suggestion to make in the interests of projectionists, concerning which I should like your views. It has to do with copy numbers of films. As you are aware, these are usually written, printed or stamped on the label of the container. Cases have been known when a conscientious projectionist having reported the condition of the film received by him, probably in good condition and returned by him in the same condition, has been accused by the exchange of damaging the same, and upon investigation it has been found to be a poor copy of the same film carrying the copy number of the same film he has had. How can this be prevented? Here is my solution: Every reel of every film whether single, double or multiple, should have the number photographed on both the leaders and tail pieces. For example:

"Pt. 4	End Pt. 4
"Sooky	Sooky
"Copy 6	Copy 6

"I am keenly interested in your figures on screen illuminations. I would be glad to have your personal opinion as to what constitutes a satisfactory foot-candle illumination, measured, say, midway between the center and outer edge of the screen. By this I mean a direct reading of the incident light."

The letter is long, but I am sure, coming from England, it will be read by thousands of our men over here with much interest.

As to the friend having told you he had seen far better projection in some of your theatres than in some of ours, that really does not mean anything. He might have seen some very excellent examples in England and some very poor ones here. I have not the slightest doubt but that England can show some shining examples of projection, also some very punk samples, which is true in both this country and in Canada.

As to your suggestion regarding the photographed numbers, I don't quite know. In the first place it is extremely difficult to effect any change in which the producer must take the initiative. In the second place we do a good deal of doubling up of reels over here, which means that tail-pieces and leaders are removed from all odd-numbered reels—also, sometimes they are not put back, which latter reflects no particular credit on our men.

It is questionable as to whether any set rule can be given for screen illumination, unless it be coupled in each individual case with the amount of auditorium illumination. I have hopes, however, that we will, through the series of measurements being made, be able finally to fix upon some pretty close approximation as to what constitutes acceptable screen illumination. Personally, at this time I am of the opinion that 10 foot-candles is plenty in any theatres, and that in some theatres that figure may be considerably reduced. That, however, is nothing more or less than a fairly intelligent guess. Later on I hope to be able to say something a little more specific.

DIFFUSE REFLECTION

JOHN CADDERLEY, Memphis, Tennessee, is puzzled by diffuse reflection. He says, "I am studying, trying to fit myself to some day become a real motion picture-sound projectionist. I have struck a snag, hence this letter.

"It is easy to understand how light is reflected from a perfectly smooth, polished surface, such as a mirror backing. It is hard to understand how light can be 'broken up' by a diffusing surface. It would seem that it is impossible for any surface to break up anything so very small as a light ray, which has, as yourself and other authorities say, 'no appreciable area of cross section.' Will you be good enough to explain? I wrote one eminent optical company, but was unable to understand the reply they were good enough to make. I have had that same experience before in asking questions of eminent engineers in various fields."

The matter is a bit difficult to explain. However, I have submitted it to one of the most capable men in the engineering field that I know of, Mr. L. A. Jones of the Research Laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company. He replies as follows:

"I think in general your exposition of the subject is quite correct and should be clear to anyone. Your statement that a diffusing surface does not 'break up a light ray' is entirely correct, assuming the definition of 'light ray' which you later set up. I do not believe that there is any very rigid and universally accepted definition of the term light ray. In general, however, at least from the practical standpoint, a light ray may actually be made up of a large number of elementary wave trains. If we use this definition of light ray it is of course possible that a diffusing surface may be said to break it up in that the elementary wave trains composing the light ray are reflected in different directions. I think, however, for your purpose, it is quite unnecessary to go into the more minute details of the subject, and I feel that your explanation should make it very clear as to what does happen to light when reflected from a diffusing surface. I should be inclined to let the explanation go just as you have it, without further analysis, which might, after all, be more confusing than illuminating to the lay reader."

My view is that it would be impossible for any surface to split up what we call a ray of light. However, a diffusing surface may split up or diffuse the illumination incident upon it. You must remember that a spot upon a motion picture screen does not receive just one light ray. It receives a very great number of them. It does not break up any single ray, but it reflects rays falling very close to each other in different directions.

The human eyes is not microscopic in its action. Take a spot on the screen, say, one-thousandth of an inch in diameter. Upon that spot we may assume hundreds of thousands of light rays to be incident, or in other words, to fall. The eye at an ordinary viewing distance of, say, 50 feet (or at any other distance, for that matter), can not discern such a spot, except in the sense that in conjunction with hundreds of thousands of similar spots, it forms an area of considerable size. They can not therefore actually see the details of what takes place on that spot. It sees the action as a whole.

Now, if on this spot one ray strikes an infinitessimally small point and is reflected at an angle of, say, 10°, and the next ray, striking upon an equally small adjoining point, which has an angle different from the first point, is reflected in a different direction, we may understand that while the eye could not see all that, still on such a spot it would be entirely possible that there might be a huge number of angles, and therefore a huge number of rays reflected in different directions.

If you will examine a good diffusing surface under a powerful microscope, remembering that with light rays we are dealing with a point, not an area, you will understand.

CONCERNING SRA CARBONS

RECENTLY I found a theatre using an SRA carbon trim and securing results which were not so good. Believing at least a portion of the fault to be due to the carbon trim, I wrote our good friend, W. C. Kunzman of the National Carbon Company, regarding the matter. His reply is before me, and believing it may be of value to many projectionists, I propose to let you read it. Here it is:

"Dear Frank: In regard to the sample carbons you suggested be sent to the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., I presume you have in mind low intensity carbons having high intensity color.

"In this connection, while our experimental laboratories have done quite a lot of work in the endeavor to secure chemically treated cores for low intensity carbons, which would give us a white light similar to high intensity trims, this was found to be impractical, except when the positive is rotated, which of course is not the case with low intensity lamps. We do not therefore have low intensity carbons which produce the effect referred to in your letter.

"The most efficient screen results are obtained with our 12-mm. x8, and 8-mm. x8 cored SRA trim when using 28 to 30 amperes. Should this not produce sufficient illumination, more may be had by using our 13-mm. x8, and 8-mm. x8 cored SRA combination, with 35 to 45 amperes. If the screen illumination appears yellow, as in the case under discussion, it is probably due to using too little current—amperage. However, the yellow light would probably give a higher illuminometer reading than would white light of equal power.

"In all probability much of the yellow tint in this case may be attributed to a screen surface, though it is quite possible installing the larger carbon trim and increasing the amperage accordingly might improve matters materially."

I again visited the theatre, and while it was impossible, due to lack of rheostat capacity, to increase the amperage to 30, I did get them to boost it as high as they could, which was approximately 28, whereupon the light seemed very satisfactory. All of which is a demonstration of the fact that it pays to attend closely to details, and also to have the screen illumination measured occasionally.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE UNION

RECENTLY in traveling from New York to South Lyme, I stopped in a very nice little theatre. I have had some correspondence with the manager of this theatre, who is thoroughly dissatisfied with the picture being placed upon his screen by two projectionists, each receiving the sum of $80 per week.

At the time I stepped into the theatre (it was fairly late in the afternoon) there was no one either in the box office or at the door. I stepped into the foyer and around where a view of the screen could be had. After looking at the very faint screen image for a few seconds the conclusion was reached that they were running a preview. I did not dream that such an exhibition could constitute a show before an audience.

The projection light source of that theatre is provided by Peerless equipment, concerning which neither of the projectionists has entered complaint. I could not measure the picture dimensions with the show running, but it certainly can not be more than 10 or 12 feet wide. The screen, the manager informed me, was clean and in excellent condition, yet its illumination was nothing short of an absurdity. No wonder the house was almost empty. You cannot sell tickets nowadays and put on such a perfectly punk exhibition as that.

What was wrong? It seems to me it is not up to me to answer that question. It is wholly and entirely up to the two men who receive the total of $160 each week to find out what is wrong and remedy it, provided the manager will produce whatever may be needed for the remedy—that is, if anything is necessary except the application of projection knowledge.

Going a bit further back than that, though, these two men are supplied to this theatre by a union, which organization fixed the price of service to the theatre. I am thoroughly in favor of exactly that proposition, but it seems to me that no man of understanding could possibly argue that when a union sells the services of a man to the manager and fixes the prices thereof, it is not up to the union to do everything within its power to compel that man to study his business and supply the manager or exhibitor with real efficiency in service. That, it seems to me, is just plain ordinary common sense.

Frankly, I have no patience with unions or union officials who take the attitude that, having fixed the wages, it is no part of the duty of the union to do everything possible to compel its members to deliver maximum efficiency and service. That is, it seems to me, not fair play.

I am perfectly aware of all the many problems faced by unions. I know that a goodly percentage of managers are themselves not inclined, and never have been inclined, to act fairly with the men. That point is freely conceded, but in all the history of this world I have never known any instance where two wrongs ever made a right, and most emphatically it is not up to the union to act unfairly because some of the managers do, or even if all of them do. The union is presumed to be based on justice and fairness.

Away back in the '80s I was one of those who helped push the union organization along when it was weak and wobbly. Then membership in the union did not get you much, even in the matter of wages. We worked hard, suffered plenty and built up the organization, until now it has become respected and powerful. Most of the I.A. unions respect themselves and act fairly by the exhibitor. Cases of this kind, however, seem to point out the fact that this is not true of all organizations. I say this for the reason that the business representative of this local was called in, and instead of recognizing the bad condition and trying to remedy it, he was deliberately insulting and vulgar in his language to the manager. It is not in the interests of trade unionism to conceal such an instance as this. Concealment is unfair, to the exhibitor, to the industry and to the I.A. itself. Fortunately, today only occasionally can a union be thus censured. The great majority of them try to deal fairly and squarely with the exhibitor, recognizing that this really pays.

CUSHION ISOLATORS

● A device designed to minimize vibration of the motor-generator has been brought out by the Century Electric Company, manufacturers of the Roth Actodetector. It is called a "Cushion Isolator" and consists in a steel sub-base suspending the motor-generator set on eight rubber discs protected in metal cups. Special rubber is used of a kind resistant to oil and moisture.

It is asserted that although the height of the equipment is increased a little by use of the cushions, the overall space required is not made appreciably greater. Need for vibration-absorbers of this type is probably not great, but doubtless these cushions will have valuable application in those instances where vibration is excessive. This would be especially the case when the motor-generator set is located close to the sound equipment.

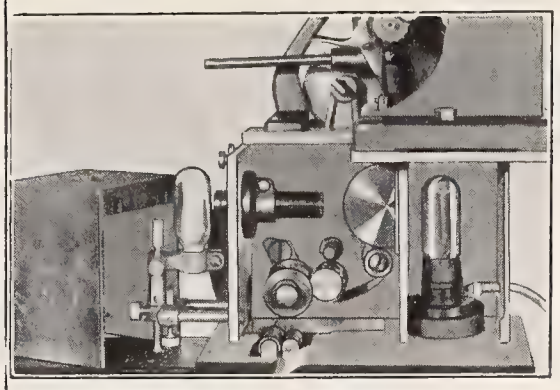
PHOTOELECTRIC RELAY

● A new photoelectric relay has been developed by the G-M Laboratories of Chicago. The unit consists in an electromagnetic switch which is opened or closed by the interruption or variation in the illumination on the photoelectric cell. Motors, electric signs, signals, etc., may thus be controlled by means of a light beam. The device is called a "Foto-Switch."

THEATRE AMPLIFIERS

● Two models of amplifiers especially designed for use in theatres, have been developed by the Webster Electric Company of Racine, Wis. The difference between the two is in the size, one of the models being also adaptable to portable equipment.

Each will supply one dynamic speaker of 1,800-ohms field resistance.



BY WAY OF NEWS

● Portable motion picture sound equipment, RCA Photophone type, has been installed on the Rex, new Italian Steamship Lines passenger boat. Portable equipment was chosen so that pictures could be shown in any part of the vessel, for all classes.

The U. S. Navy is also extending its use of sound equipment, and recently put in a large order for Walker screens with the National Theatre Supply Company.

Charles E. Brownell, for some time editor of the Motion Picture Projectionist, has resigned his position.

Equipment News and Comment

NEW TYPE SAFE

● An unusual type of safe which seems to have characteristics particularly recommending it to use in theatre box offices, has been brought out by the Gunite Foundries Corporation of Rockford, Ill.

Called the "Guncor Pot o' Gold," it is spherical in its general shape. The material of which it is made is referred to as a development of the manufacturer, which also makes Gunite brake drums for motor cars. The maker asserts that this material is non-drillable, non-breakable and non-crushable.

The safe, which has 900 cubic inches of storage space, may be enclosed within a concrete block, in a cement floor, or otherwise inserted into a part of the building, with only the combination lock showing. It is equipped for securing in position with an arrangement of reinforcing bars.

SYNCHRONOUS MOTOR

● A new synchronous motor has been added to the line of the Ideal Electric & Manufacturing Company of Mansfield, Ohio. It has been developed for general use where a synchronous motor is desired.

According to the specifications, it is compact and requires no external excitation, the exciter windings, direct current commutator, etc., being integral with the motor itself. It is started with a manually operated compensator in the same manner as an ordinary induction type of motor is started.

New portable sound projector developed in France and now being marketed in the United States by Andre Debrie, Inc., of New York. It comes in two main sections, one consisting in the projector mechanisms, the other in the sound apparatus. Total weight is 120 pounds.

This type motor is capable of resynchronizing itself if pulled out of step by a dip in line voltage or overload. Motors of this model may be supplied in all sizes from 5 to 100 h.p., and at 900, 1,200 and 1,800 r.p.m.

on the stage of the Cinema during the production of presentations will be rivaled only by that used in the International Music Hall, which is also under construction as a part of the vast Rockefeller Center amusement and commercial project.

In the preliminary steps of planning for the Cinema, the idea that this was to be the ultimate in motion picture theatre construction was always kept in mind, with the result that there is now a theatre, while designed primarily for the presentation of screen plays, furnished with stage equipment of the most modern design and construction.

The co-operation between the architects for the Cinema and the equipment engineers was all that could be desired and has resulted in ample space being provided to accommodate all the necessary equipment. The extent of this co-operation will be more fully realized when the Cinema is opened to the public and placed in operation. At that time the financial and psychological benefits derived from the installation of modern labor saving stage equipment will be conclusively and perhaps impressively proved.

One of the greatest achievements in the design of this equipment is the remote electrical control of the stage equipment, which will not only mean a great saving in labor, but will give a high degree of flexibility of operation and production possibilities.

Members of the Independent Supply Dealers' Association attending the organization's convention in Chicago. A large display of theatre equipment and accessories featured the meeting, at which J. E. Robin of Palisades, N. J., was re-elected president; L. G. Dolliver of San Francisco, vice-president; and Henry C. Dusman of Baltimore was elected secretary-treasurer.

sumed as the basis of the agreement, performance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be nonexistent."

Taxes on Realty of Subsidiary

CONSIDERABLE discussion has existed from time to time whether or not a film distributing or manufacturing company is liable for payment of income or franchise taxes on theatre property rented from a subsidiary corporation. This point of the law was decided in the recent case of Fox Film Corporation vs. Loughman (180 N. E. 885).

The facts of this case are that a state law provides: "Any corporation owning or controlling, either directly or indirectly, substantially all of the capital stock of another corporation, or of other corporations, liable to report under this article, may be required to make a consolidated report showing the combined net income."

It was shown that a subsidiary corporation held title to certain realty which it rented to a film corporation. On this property was a fully equipped motion picture theatre which the film corporation utilized in exhibiting its films. It was contended that the film corporation should not be liable for payment of taxes. However, the court held the film corporation bound to pay taxes on this basis, and said:

"The realty corporation supplied the requirements of the parent corporation, not only for the real estate used in its business, but also for a fully equipped motion picture plant. Thus it was not confined to the exclusive business of holding real estate. It held personal property as well. It was, therefore, not exempted under the provisions of the Tax Law."

Employment Contract Void

IT IS WELL established law that a theatre owner is liable in damages for breach of a contract irrespective of its nature. For instance, if a theatre owner agrees to pay either a contractor, architect or engineer a specified sum for preparation of plans and specifications, or a percentage of the construction cost, the theatre owner is liable for full payment although he decides later to abandon the construction work. On the other hand, if the theatre owner does not legally accept the offer made by the employe, the theatre owner is not liable.

For illustration, in McAlister vs. Mertens (43 S. W. [2d] 651), it was disclosed that a civil engineer entered into a written contract with a property owner by the terms of which he agreed to draw plans and specifications and superintend the construction of a contemplated project. He was to receive therefor a commission of 5 per cent of the cost of the construction work. He drew the plans and specifications. Before a contract had been let the engineer entered into a contract with a construction company by which it was agreed that if that company was awarded the contract for the construction work it would pay to the engineer 2½% of the cost, "which sum was to be accepted by the engineer in full settlement of all services."

Although the engineer wrote a letter to the property owner explaining the new agreement made with the construction company, the new contract was not accepted by the property owner. Later the engineer sued both the construction company and the property owner to recover the amount due under the contract with the construction company. However, since the property owner had not legally accepted or approved the new contract, the court held the engineer not entitled to a recovery, and said:

"Since the property owner did not accept the contract, it is not liable thereon."

Breach of Construction Contract

VARIOUS COURTS have held that although a contractor breaches a construction contract he is entitled to recover from the owner the value of work performed, but the owner may sue and recover damages from the contractor resulting from the breach.

For instance, in Evans vs. Mitchell (162 S. E. 660), it was shown that a contractor installed a heating system which later was found to be inefficient. The property owner refused to pay the balance due on the contract and the contractor filed suit.

During the trial the property owner contended that since the contractor had guaranteed that the heating system would satisfactorily heat the building, and had failed to fulfill the terms of the contract he, the owner, should not be obliged to pay for the heating system.

However, the court held the contractor entitled to recover the amount due from the owner, and stated that the owner's remedy would be suit against the contractor for damages. This court said:

"A breach of warranty, express or im-

On being in the Business—or Out of It

¶ In a certain "city room" of a large newspaper—and it probably has happened in more than this single instance—relatives of a man just deceased were threatening the editor. The "obit" had been correct at almost every point, they admitted. His name was spelled correctly. The list of his clubs was exactly right. But the only reference to the man's life-work was that he had been a politician, a ward boss. Not a word was said about his being a lawyer, at one time a very successful one, becoming prominent in legal circles. But he ceased to identify himself with his profession. And when he died, his identifications were what they later became.

¶ Not that the point of these remarks needs any primer-like analogy to make it clear. In any field, the wise business man knows the value of constantly maintained identification. Indeed, the truth of this supports a large portion of the whole body of advertising today.

¶ The enterprise which has chosen to purvey to the motion picture theatre must maintain its identification with this business if it wishes to continue to sell it. It must be constantly thought of as being in this business. Advertising is the enemy of obscurity. Advertising plus business integrity is the only way to prominence. And BETTER THEATRES, by its unique position, is the indispensable medium of identification with the motion picture theatre market.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on August 23. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

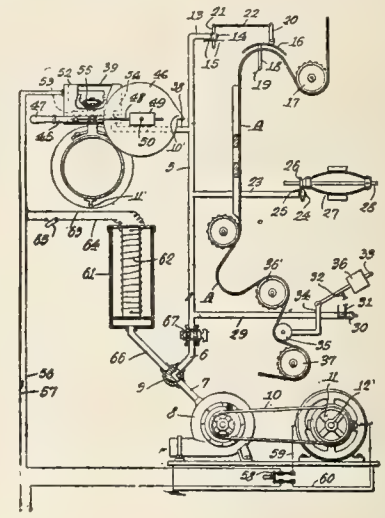
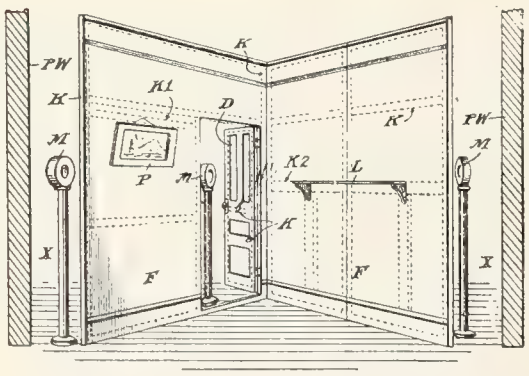
1. A synchronizing device for two independently driven mechanisms, comprising a variable speed device controlling the speed of operation of one of said mechanisms, and means operating independently of the material acted on by said mechanisms for measuring the relative speeds of said two independently driven mechanisms and for automatically actuating said variable speed device when required to gradually restore a synchronous relation between the operations of said two independently driven mechanisms.

1,801,521. LOUD-SPEAKER HORN. Joseph W. Milnor, Maplewood, N. J. Filed July 18, 1927. Serial No. 206,632. 14 Claims. (Cl. 181—27.)



1. In a loud speaker of the horn type, means distributed uniformly throughout the horn for decreasing the velocity of the sound waves in their passage through the horn as compared with their normal velocity in air, said means comprising for useful frequencies a substantially non-absorbing sound transmitting medium having a mean density greater that that of the air.

1,812,219. SOUND REPRODUCTION. Lewis I. Reed, Berkeley, Calif. Filed Oct. 2, 1928. Serial No. 309,839. 2 Claims. (Cl. 181—30.)



1. A stage for amplifying sound comprising a relatively wide and shallow front portion and a relatively narrow and deep rear compartment opening at its front into said front portion, the rear, side and upper walls of said compartment being constructed and arranged to form a sound amplifier.

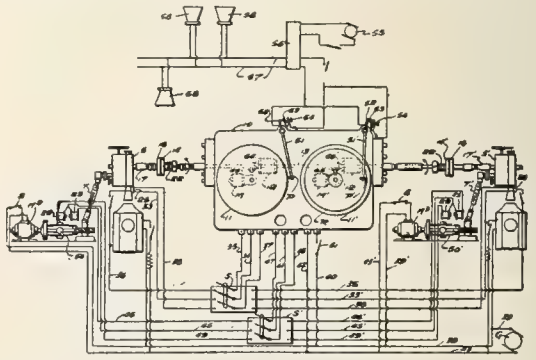
1. In a motion picture apparatus, a fire shutter, an arm for normally holding the shutter in its inactive position, a tube disposed adjacent to the arm, means for creating a vacuum in the tube to draw the arm into engagement with one end of the tube, a tube extending laterally from the first mentioned tube and having its free end open to the atmosphere, a valve for normally closing the free end of the last mentioned tube, and means actuated by the film strip passing through the apparatus for actuating the valve to permit air to enter the tubes and release the arm and shutter.

1,812,687. SOUND-CHAMBER AND SET-FRAME THEREFOR. Lee De Forest, New York, N. Y., assignor to De Forest Phonofilm Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Sept. 4, 1925. Serial No. 54,397. 5 Claims. (Cl. 181—30.)



1. A sound-permeable motion picture background for use in the simultaneous photography of sound and motion, consisting of side-walls which include a skeleton support and a filling of a sheet of coarse-weave, open-mesh cloth mounted on said support, the holes in said cloth being in free communication with substantial air-spaces inside and outside the background; and an electrical sound-transmitter associated with said background and hidden thereby.

1,801,061. CINEMATOGRAPH SPOOL CASE. Harold Mellor Thornton, West Hampstead, London, England. Filed Jan. 12, 1927. Serial No. 160,730, and in Great Britain Jan. 22, 1926. 1 Claim. (Cl. 88—17.)

Film carrying apparatus for cinematograph projectors comprising an apertured casing, two spindles projecting through the casing, a double width three flanged reel mounted on each spindle to rotate therewith, two films of the same length mounted side by side within the casing, the forward end of one film and the reverse end of the second film being attached to one double reel and the reverse end of the first film and the forward end of the second film to the second double reel and guide rollers within the casing over which the films pass, the casing being made symmetrical about a vertical line between the reels whereby it is possible to remove the casing from the projector, invert it end for end and reinsert it therein so that as one film is being exhibited the other film of the pair is being wound upon its second reel ready for exhibition when unwound therefrom.

1,812,449. SYNCHRONIZED SOUND AND PHOTOGRAPHY. Harrison W. Rogers, New York, N. Y. Filed Oct. 31, 1928. Serial No. 316,197. 3 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.2.)

1. In an apparatus of the character described, the combination of two motor driven motion picture projectors, a sound reproducing machine having a driving motor, said latter machine being interposed between the two motion picture projectors, a synchronizing device, a common shaft drive from one side thereof, two one way clutches one to each projector connecting the projectors to said shaft said clutches being of the type that when one is being driven by the projector the other clutch is free or in reverse, and means connecting the motor of the sound reproducing machine to the other side of the synchronizing device.

plied, does not annul the sale if executed, but gives the purchaser a right to damages. . . . The rule seems to be that if the defects or discrepancies in the article purchased are patent, such as might have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, then acceptance by the purchaser, in the absence of fraud, will operate as an absolute waiver on his part even of a claim for damages growing out of an implied warranty . . . but that such mere acceptance will not prevent his making a claim for damages arising out of an express warranty."

Liability For Acts of Employes

THE COURTS have held that a theatre owner is responsible for the acts of his employe done within the general scope of his employment with a view to the furtherance of the theatre business, even though the act is done negligently.

For example, in Shiembob vs. Ringling (160 Atl. 429), it was disclosed that the owner of a place of amusement employed an employe named Keaton to prevent boys from entering without having paid the admission price. The employer instructed Keaton to remain on the inside to prevent unauthorized persons from entering.

One day Keaton disobeyed his employer's instructions and went on the outside of the place of amusement. He saw a boy attempting to enter and threw a block of wood which struck the boy on the head, fracturing his skull from which injuries he later died. The parents of the boy filed suit against the employer to recover damages. The counsel for the employer contended that there was no liability because Keaton has disobeyed instructions and had positioned himself outside the place of amusement instead of remaining inside. However, the higher court held the employer liable, and said:

"If you find that one of the duties of Keaton was to repel trespassers from entering, the fact that he attempted to do so from the outside, where he had no right to be, rather than from the inside, where he should have been, would be of no consequence. The defendant is responsible for the acts of Keaton if done within the general scope of his employment while engaged in the business of the defendant and with a view to the furtherance of his business, even though the acts done be done negligently and contrary to the express and explicit directions and orders of the defendant."

Prevention of Injury

THE PROPRIETOR of a theatre or an amusement park is bound to exercise ordinary care to frequently inspect various apparatus utilized by concessioners in order to determine whether the same are maintained in safe condition. If he fails to exercise this degree of care he is liable in damages for injuries sustained by a patron. So held a higher court in the late case of Schellack vs. Biers (160 Atl. 404).

The facts of this case are that a rope broke on an apparatus on which two patrons were riding causing serious injury to one of the patrons. The lower court held the proprietor of the amusement park liable in damages, and the higher court sustained this verdict, stating the following important law:

"The proprietor of an amusement park is not an insurer of the safety of his patrons, nor is he bound to protect them against such obvious risks as are necessarily incidental to a particular amusement device, but he must use reasonable care and diligence to see that the device is properly constructed and is maintained in a fit condition for the purpose for which it is used."

Liability For Negligence

THE LAW is well established that the owner of a theatre building is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a spectator as a result of the former's negligence in repairing the premises. This rule of the law is applicable although the theatre building is leased to a theatre operator.

For illustration, in Johnson vs. Zemel (160 Atl. 356), it was shown that the owner of a theatre building constructed a platform for use of spectators who paid admission to the theatre operator who had leased the building. One night a spectator was seriously injured when his foot slipped through a hole in the platform. The injured patron sued the owner of the theatre building to recover damages.

The counsel for the building owner contended that the latter should not be held liable because the theatre, at the time of the accident, was being operated by a theatre operator or lessee. However, the higher court held the theatre building owner liable, and said:

"Zemel (building owner) was bound to use reasonable care to see that the platform was properly constructed and was maintained in fit condition for the purposes for which it was used, and that he was responsible for an injury resulting to a spectator from failure in that regard."

Must Keep Premises Safe

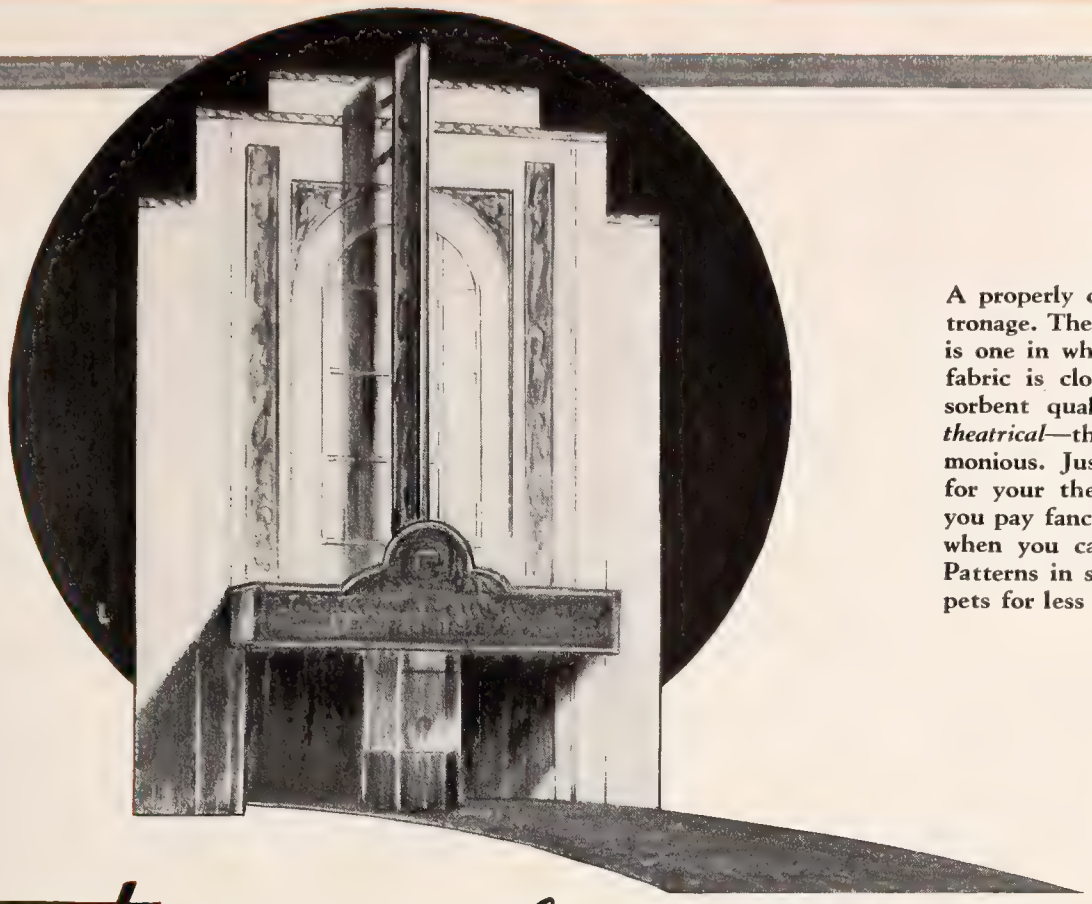
GENERALLY SPEAKING, a theatre owner is liable to an invitee or patron, using due care, for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the premises which is actually or constructively known to the owner but not to the patron, and which the owner has negligently permitted to exist, and of which the patron has no knowledge or notice. In other words, the theatre owner must exercise ordinary care to put and keep his premises in a reasonably safe condition for use of his patrons. Otherwise, he must give notice of dangers which are known to him and unknown to patrons.

For instance, in English vs. Sahlender (47 S. W. [2d] 150), it was disclosed that a woman patron was seriously injured when she fell into a basement when attempting to enter a toilet room. She filed suit to recover damages.

During the trial the evidence indicated that the door through which she stepped, thinking it led to the toilet room, was the entrance to the basement and that she had no knowledge of this arrangement. Therefore, since the proprietor had failed to securely lock the door leading into the basement, and had failed otherwise to warn patrons, the lower court held the injured patron entitled to recover damages. The higher court rendered a decision sustaining this verdict.

Owner Held for Jury

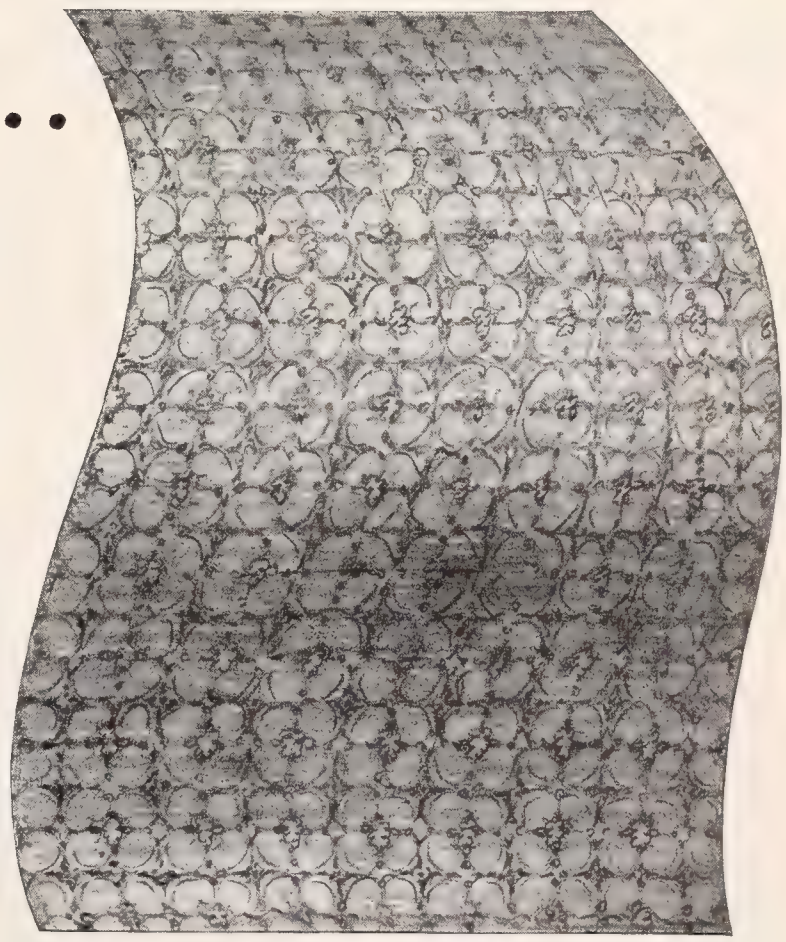
IN ALL controversies involving injury to theatre patrons, evidence must be submitted to a jury who, after thoroughly considering all phases of the testimony, may render its verdict accordingly. If the verdict is reasonably based on the testimony, the higher court will not reverse the decision.



For example, in Hall vs. Great (160 Atl. 302), it was shown that a patron stepped on an accumulation of oil on the floor.

Considerable testimony was given which convinced the jury that the proprietor was negligent in failing to remove the accumulation of oil on the floor. Therefore, the jury held the injured patron entitled to recover damages.

The proprietor appealed to the higher court on the contention that the evidence did not conclusively prove that his failure to exercise care in removing the oil had actually resulted in the injury. However, the higher court refused to reverse the verdict.



PLANNING THE THEATRE

Lack of inquiries concerning theatre construction problems, suitable for publication, again forces the omission of the department, Planning the Theatre. This department is exclusively devoted to direct service, hence it will be published only when requests for its aid have been made upon it. Renewal of interest in theatre construction and remodeling in the fall may permit resumption of its regular appearance.

A properly carpeted theatre invites patronage. The proper carpet for a theatre is one in which long-wearing quality of fabric is closely allied with sound absorbent quality. The pattern must be theatrical—the colors striking, yet harmonious. Just any carpet will not do for your theatre . . . and why should you pay fancy prices for ordinary carpet when you can buy National Exclusive Patterns in specially woven theatre carpets for less money?

for your theatre...

Extra weight, long-wearing, sound deadening fabrics that yield to the footstep with a feeling of luxury. A variety of exclusive theatre patterns in rich colors and distinctive designs to exactly harmonize with your decorative scheme.

Right Service—Our direct distributing connection with the world's largest carpet weavers, our expert knowledge of theatre floor covering—our nearness to you insures a completed job, correct in every detail.

Right Prices—We cannot be undersold on theatre carpets of comparable quality. Our new samples include a variety of weaves, grades and patterns to meet any floor covering appropriation. We can save money for you with specially reduced summer prices.

LA SALLE THEATRE

110 WEST MADISON STREET
CHICAGO, ILL.

August 18, 1932.

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.,
4431 West Lake Street,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

Regarding the Model F type Motiograph De Luxe Sound Projector Equipment which you installed in the LaSalle Theatre, and which was placed in operation on Easter Sunday, March 27th of this year, we wish to say that this has been in continuous operation 15 hours each day since that time, and has given us complete and pleasant satisfaction. We have received many compliments from our patrons on the clarity and naturalness of reproduction.

Our theatre being one of the oldest and most historic in Chicago's "Loop", with an established clientele, good sound was of paramount importance. Therefore you may be sure we investigated thoroughly different sound equipments before we selected Motiograph. It is gratifying to say that your equipment has merited our judgment and has met all the claims you made for it. This, even considering the fact that no acoustic treatment was done in the theatre auditorium.

We are especially pleased with the simplicity and dependability of your equipment, and the low cost of maintenance. Our only expense to date has been for exciter lamp replacements, one 845 tube having given a life of over 1,900 hours—and two 227 tubes. The balance of the original tubes is still in operation.

Your service has been both prompt and courteous, and our relations with your Company most pleasant.

Very truly yours,
R. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

WELCOME HOME BOYS!

Sure, we heard how you took Europe by storm!

THAT'S GREAT! But we've got much better news! About your new feature length comedy!

"PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES"

It was previewed last week in New Rochelle. The audience howled from the first foot of film to the fade-out! Boys, it was a panic and a riot rolled into one! After the success of your first full length comedy "Pardon Us" exhibitors demanded another one. Will they be thrilled, delighted and jubilant about "Pack Up Your Troubles"! Dunt esk!

Hooray for Laurel and Hardy!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 10 — September 3, 1932

HOLLYWOOD GOES EXPLORING

IN an utterance from Hollywood this week Mr. Jack L. Warner gives keynote expression to an encouraging trend of motion picture production as an avowed policy of his organization. "The beaten path is not the road to public favor. . . . The run-of-the-mill picture is out—if it was ever in. . . ." Mr. Warner cites as Warner expression of the policy the currently remarkable "Life Begins," and a number of coming titles.

What Mr. Warner has crystalized into words is that manifestation which appears to be a new spirit of adventure in the creative department of the motion picture. As has been elsewhere recorded in these pages, M-G-M's "Strange Interlude" is another conspicuous departure for the screen.

Of a piece with this venturesomeness is Universal's "Once in a Lifetime," not so much intrinsically, being an appropriation from the stage, as in the spirit of the making. And this brings us to Carl Laemmle, the younger, officially known as Junior. Some considerable part of the new spirit of adventure in material, of boldness in concept, seems to have been pioneered by this young man, born of and nurtured in the motion picture tradition, remembering the while his contributions "off the beaten path" in such productions as "All Quiet on the "Western Front" and "Dracula." When the motion picture laughs at itself as in "Once in a Lifetime" it is grown up, and curiously this sort of maturity is mostly to be had from those young enough to have grown up since the screen was born.

In this season of screen departures it is interesting once again to look back upon some aspects of the evolution of the art of the printed word and publication which contains so many parallels, and which offers so many neglected pre-experiences that could be of value to the screen. A survey of the most complete catalogue of incunabula reveals a total of 16,000 editions of various works and among them only about fifteen percent of works written originally for the printing press and moveable type. That is to say that for the approximate first half century of the printed book, up to the year 1500, the whole of the art of publication was a borrowing art, devoted entirely to "beaten path" literature and classics of ancient acceptance. Compared with typography and the printing press the motion picture is getting its independent stride rapidly enough.

NEWSREEL NOTABLES

THE recent social furore with a party at historic Faneuil Hall, including eight hundred of the elite, the erudite and the elect of Boston, to honor Mr. Dick Sears' installation as commander of the Oliver Ames Post of the American Legion is a tribute to the community status that can be achieved by motion picture men by friendly diligence as members of society. Mr. Sears, now with Pathe News, has for something like two decades been the personification of the newsreel in New England. From the Connecticut River to Eastport on the tip of Maine runs his domain, wherein every public figure and official, from Citizen Calvin Coolidge to the traffic policeman at Moose-Up Village, gives his photographic errands welcome and a helping hand. In his time Mr. Sears has served most of the newsreels, and in all of them he has also done a good job for his native New England.

In a very kindred manner and through parallel years the amiable and indefatigable Mr. Tracy Mathewson of Atlanta, more recently with Universal's newsreel organization and currently freelancing, is a figure of good will through the southland from Richmond to the Panhandle and over the border into Mexico. In that big empire his name is a pass-word. And, interestingly enough, it is also an open sesame wherever the Prince of Wales chances to be. Up in the big Northwest in the land of salmon and Douglas fir is another such a personality of the newsreels in Mr. Will Hudson with years of performance on a plane that has made him an institution.

In the careers of these men is to be seen a development akin in quality, but wider in scope, to the status of successful country editors.

To a degree but slightly appreciated in the industry these men and their newsreel colleagues are good will representatives of the motion picture. The newsreel camera is all that the bigger public ever sees of productive action in the motion picture business.

NATURE NOTE

THERE are three poignantly dramatic sounds in nature which have yet to be made a part of atmospheric screen narration—that first hint of release from winter signalized by the fairy piping of the peeper frogs in the marsh; that intense, burning vibrato of the jarr fly on a sunbaked dead twig in the haying time of fervid mid-July; and now the night long, relentlessly patient, refrain of the katydid that means summer is dying. School days and the season of family returnings from beach and mountain and camp to home and the range of the box office are at hand.

ESCAPE

MR. ELMER RICE, playwright, author of "Street Scene," "The Adding Machine" and "Counsellor at Law," which is now to be done into pictures by Universal, has come home from two months in Russia all aglow because he found the theatres crowded over there and remarking about the dark stages of New York. If accounts of metropolitan living conditions in Russia are correct, it is easy to understand why the people would want to go to the theatre—would want to go anywhere else, in fact.

The Forgotten Man

by TERRY RAMSAYE

¶ There's a kind of important guy in this country that it seems Hollywood never has thought much about, and that in spite of the fact he is the fellow from whose pockets come most of the dollars spent at the box office. You see, this guy is not very loud. He has opinions, all right, but they are vented mostly in talking to his neighbors and in especially provocative instances, maybe a speech at the club or lodge meeting, or once in a while a letter to the local paper. This fellow has never been questionnaired or pulse-counted on questions of "audience reaction," because he is not much of a reacter. When the movie makers go into a huddle over the bigger and better product for the new season, this guy who is going to pay for it never gets to speak for himself.

¶ If you asked him about it he would look quickly about to see there were no womenfolk present and remark to you: "The movies? Some of 'em are swell and some of 'em are lousy—you never can tell, but what the hell?" That's about all he says audibly and consciously about the movies. Meanwhile, he is dedicating his life to the business of building, maintaining a home, rearing a family. He hopes that the girls will "turn out good" and marry reasonably well. He has secret high hopes that the boys, or one of them anyway, will score special success and be big among men. That's his whole hope and job, and he's for anything that will help him, and against anything that's in the way, or looks like it might be. He has quite a few anxious hours that he does not say anything about.

¶ When he goes to the movies with the family it makes him a little uncomfortable to observe the gyrations of a "nance" comedian, real or synthetic, with little Jane, aged 12 and curious, there alongside of Mother. And there are every now and then some "cracks" in the show that he'd rather Mother would not catch him laughing at, because he'd be ashamed to tell her just why it was maybe a little bit funny. Also he may not say much but he's inwardly a lot unhappy if he sees 15-year-old Alice, who has been doing a lot of lipsticking of late, sitting all agape, absorbing the screen-demonstrated technique of the famous and delicious Dolly Diddle working her way through a regiment of heroes on the way to the great Moral Lesson in the last reel. Of course, you understand, he knows his kids have too much of the real stuff in them to be influenced by such a movie, but just the same it's no help. Of course the young folks are not going to put him on the spot and get the laugh on him for being an old-fashioned fogy, so he won't say anything and hopes for the best — anyway there's some swell movies, too—guess the kids'll turn out all right. In a none too articulate sort of way this fellow knows he has no way to do anything much about the movies, anyway. There's a bunch of guys out in Hollywood that make 'em (he'd like to see them doing it once), and it is just possible he knows there's another bunch of guys in New York that sell them, and that every now and then there are pieces in the paper about the movie stocks and a lot of figures that interest him about as intimately as a dispatch from Bucharest via London concerning the stabilization of the lei.

¶ Once he did talk a few minutes in the lobby with Jake Smith, who runs the movie show, and he squawked to Jake about what he thought wasn't too good a show. But Jake told him he'd have never run the picture himself if it wasn't he had it bought on a contract that gave no out. Of course, Jake wasn't to be blamed for living up to a contract. He knows, this guy of ours, that a contract is a contract. But those movie guys must be cuckoo to think that Hometown wanted that kind of junk. Damn if he wouldn't like to have some of them to a Booster Club meeting and show 'em what a swell American town Hometown really is.

¶ Of course if it chances that the preacher, or the very busy Ladies Culture Club, should decide that they ought to petition the mayor or the governor or the congressman for a law about some of these movies, this man of ours will not care very much one way or the other, seeing as how he's seen a lot of laws that didn't get anywhere, but more than likely he will lean in the direction of the most push. . . . "If our best people all want it, it's probably okay. Anyway, Mother knows what's best for the girls. Guess these movie folks are making plenty of money, anyway. I saw in the kids' movie magazine where—"

CAMERAMEN HOP TO STRATOSPHERE TO GET LOWDOWN ON THE ECLIPSE

Seventeen Cameras and Eight Sound Crews Used by Five Newsreels in Path of Solar Eclipse for Picture Record

The solar eclipse of Wednesday afternoon was only 95 per cent complete for New York in an astronomical sense, but Broadway went for it one hundred per cent. The Great White Way got sky minded by noon and as the eclipse hour approached there was an hegira to the roofs and upper story windows which left the skyscrapers below just empty echoing caves. For an hour no one in New York was to be had on the telephone, including the home office operators.

The Eclipse on Broadway

Meanwhile industrious office boys from film companies seized a commercial opportunity and went through the crowds of Broadway selling six frame bits of fogged picture film at five cents apiece. It was the livest film market Broadway has seen for months.

Meanwhile, another curious manifestation appeared roaming the skies—an autogiro plane pulling a trailer sign bearing the title "Strange Interlude," in behalf of the Wednesday evening opening of that MGM production.

Complete newsreel coverage of the solar eclipse Wednesday was maintained by the five reels. Special arrangements were made for developing prints which were rushed to theatres of the country.

In all, 17 cameras and eight sound crews were used by the newsreels in photographing the occurrence of the phenomenon in the actual path of the eclipse, which followed a course 100 miles wide from Maine southeastward to the Atlantic Ocean at Cape Cod, Mass. In addition, cameramen were stationed outside the vicinity of the totality of eclipse to photograph land scenes and unusual effects of the phenomenon. One newsreel, Fox Movietone, assigned cameramen from all its American branches, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to shooting local aspects of the eclipse.

The newsreel coverage included a wide use of airplanes, which were considered essential not only for the greater clarity of pictures to be obtained from them in the clearer atmosphere of great heights, but also as "insurance" against the possibility of clouds at high altitudes which would render land cameras useless. A large amount of equipment of all newsreels was centered at Fryeburg, Maine, in a mountainous section which, ordinarily, is above cloud height, so that cameras stationed there would be less likely to be affected by low clouds.

Newsreel tieups with Army and Navy photographic units were plentiful, and the cooperation of these departments also was given the reels in accommodating them with planes, pilots and scientists. Several of the news-reels also saw fit to effect tieups with observatories and universities, by which they were enabled to photograph the eclipse through specially constructed telescopes and to receive explanatory lectures, to accompany their shots, from national authorities on astronomy.

Sound crews were employed almost exclusively on the ground, where they caught the sounds and discussions of watchers and scientific observers and recorded descriptions and explanations by astronomers throughout the course of the eclipse.

Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone worked in conjunction with Captain Barnett W. Harris, of the photography section of the Army aviation signal corps, and associated with Dearborn observatory of Northwestern University, employed three specially developed cameras equipped with 48-inch, 36-inch and 26-inch focal lenses, respectively, which were attached to equatorial mounts and electro-magnetically driven. These cameras and two sound trucks were stationed at Fryeburg, Maine. One specially equipped camera was arranged to record the total period of eclipse, involving two hours running, on 100 feet of film. A second was set to catch the light flashes of the chromosphere at the second and third contacts (beginning and end of totality of eclipse) and to record the duration of totality (about three minutes) on 150 feet of film. A third camera was focused to catch the prominences over the moon; a fourth was assigned to catch the phenomenon as seen by the eye of the spectator, and a fifth was assigned to shoot ground scenes in the vicinity in which the scientific expedition were centered.

Paramount News assigned two cameras to land work at Conway, New Hampshire, in conjunction with university observatories there, and a third camera was assigned to a plane for air shots at the same point. Land cameras also were stationed at Mt. Washington to catch the phenomenon from a point ordinarily above low hanging clouds. Several of the Paramount cameras were equipped with an optical lens arrangement which permitted the camera to follow the course of the sun across the moon, while mounted on a revolving axis. Paramount also effected a tieup with the Army photographic air service for pictures at high altitudes.

Plane Cabin Sealed

Pathe cameramen made two stratosphere flights; the first, from Derby, Vermont, attempted a flight above 20,000 feet to obtain pictures of the shadow bands cast by the eclipse onto the earth, and flew along the shadow path to Cape Cod, and from there to Newark, N. J., with the film. The second flight centered in a locality above Chatham, Mass., and employed a specially equipped Fokker plane which sought an altitude of 30,000 feet. Its sealed cabin was equipped with an oxygen supply to overcome conditions of the thin air at its maximum altitude, and windows for camera views were built into both the roof and sides of the cabin. From this plane, a description of the phenomenon was given to a broadcasting station at Chatham for a national radio hookup.

Pathe assigned one sound crew to the activities of Sproul Observatory at Derby, Vt., and at this point had a camera attached to a 60-foot telescope. A running description and explanation of what was taking place was given for the sound crews by an astronomer at this point. A second sound crew was stationed at Newburyport, Mass., and worked with a special camera equipped with a 36-inch filter lens. This equipment was placed in a sponged rubber suspension arm to eliminate as much vibration in photographing as possible.

Universal had two land cameras and one for air pictures stationed at Conway, N. H. A tieup with the University of Michigan observatory crew at Fryeburg, Maine, made it possible for Universal to get exclusive camera-telescope pictures at this point. In addition, airplane pictures of the shadow band cast on the earth by the eclipse were caught from the air. Universal's cameras were equipped with a special vibrationless telescopic lens, developed at its own studios.

CASTING OF 15,910 EXTRAS IN MONTH REFLECTS REAL RUSH IN PRODUCING

1,500 Added to Payroll at Fox Studios; Leaders Convinced Business Is Moving Upward, With Better Quality Product

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

A very quiet week on the preview front, but an extremely active one for production. Not in many months have the studios been running at such a tremendous pace. The fall production season is on with a real rush. For the first time in an age there is not a single important studio, major or independent, where the wheels of production are not grinding merrily and at high speed. Furthermore, there is a genuine conviction that business conditions are on the upgrade, together with an equally sincere belief that the quality of the new product will contribute to this "blessed event."

The quarterly meeting of the Producers Association, held Friday, saw smiles clear around the table, smiles of real enthusiasm. With no bunk about it, all members without exception declared they felt that with the best pictures they ever have had to sell, plus a general feeling of optimism throughout the country as reported by their sales executives, the motion picture industry would be well out of the doldrums by the end of the year.

Fox, which is beginning to teem with activity for the first time in several months, announced that 1,500 had recently been added to its production payroll, that most of them were artisans and technicians needed in making physical preparations for productions coming up at the big Westwood plant. Everyone from Winfield Sheehan down is enthusiastic over the prospects for some big time stuff, and the lot is plastered from end to end with announcements of "Cavalcade," the biggest of the Fox supers to get under way in the near future.

After the summer vacation period the Warner-First National plant at Burbank is once more on its toes, with production and preparation bringing more people to the payroll every day. There is a lively enthusiasm among all employees, too, because of the cheers elicited by such recent pictures from there as "Blessed Event," "Life Begins" and "Tiger Shark."

Over at Paramount Sam Katz, just returned from New York, brought the boys in and gave them a picture which has created hot enthusiasm. In addition to the promise held out by pictures underway, or just completed, Paramounteers are of the opinion that stories in preparation are going to top those already launched. The reorganized machine as set up by Katz and Emanuel Cohen is now functioning smoothly and happily.

At RKO Radio, Dave Selznick is jumping both ways at once, what with production duties and conferences with Harold Franklin, Roxy, Bob Sisk, Phil Reisman and other home office visitors. Among other matters under discussion in this group is the one of production plans for the opening of Radio City, at which time the studio hopes to have some very ultra pictures ready to start the processional there.

Out in the valley, Carl Laemmle, Jr., and his augmented staff are pounding away on Universal's production schedule. Junior, of course, is famous for his smile, but it is even broader this fall, and Senior feels the same way about it. Right now the big item is the football yarn, with the All-American lineup, which Universal hopes will even top its notable "Spirit of Notre Dame" last fall.

Culver City Busy

The big Culver City plants, MGM and RKO Pathe, also are clicking along industriously. L. B. Mayer returned the end of the week from the East with optimism radiating as never before. His reports to the production staff on the current successes from that lot have piled up a new enthusiasm among the production forces, who are determined to keep in the vanguard in the face of the keenest competition in years. At nearby Pathe Joseph I. Schnitzer, Jack Bachmann, M. H. Hoffman and other independent producers are hard at it.

In Hollywood, Columbia, World Wide, Educational, United Artists, Monogram and all the others are almost too busy to answer when we call to ask what is going on. Some executives have moved their beds into the studios. There is so much to do they seldom get away before very late at night, and have to be back at the crack of dawn next morning.

No better proof of the activity is available than the records of the Central Casting Bureau, through which the studios engage their extra talent and bit players. Up to Saturday there had been a total of 15,910 extras employed during the month of August. But, of this number, 7,005, or nearly half, were engaged during the week of August 21-27. Looks like a lot of delinquent grocery bills may be paid up hereabouts these next few weeks!

Two new pictures shown during the week were Marion Davies' "Blondie of the Follies," and a Warner picture entitled "They Call It Sin," featuring Loretta Young and David Manners. There's much lavish display in the Cosmopolitan picture, in which are detailed the adventures of Marion Davies and Billie Dove crashing the "Follies" and, with the crash, much prosperity. It has plenty of interesting backstage stuff, which probably will be all right now, as Hollywood has fortunately been laying off of this material for some time past. Interesting, too, is the fact that both the principals mentioned actually are graduates of the Ziegfeld school. There's lots of excitement and whoop-de-da in this one.

Loretta Young's stock seems to be following the upward trend of the market for sure. A great performance in "Life Begins" is now followed by another excellent one in "They Call It Sin." Most of the reviewers are still trying to figure the why of the title, or have given up trying. There's nothing particularly sinful about it, especially in comparison with some other shows we've had the past few months.

Fox to Produce Jungle Feature

Clyde E. Elliott, director of the Frank Buck picture, "Bring 'Em Back Alive," and James O. Spearing, scenarist as well as New York Times man, have been signed by Fox to make a jungle picture in India and Malaysia. Mr. Elliott expects to sail in about two weeks with two camera men, one sound man and three actors for the leading roles. The balance of the cast will be made up of natives.

While Mr. Elliott's more recent fame is based on the success of "Bring 'Em Back Alive," he has produced many other releases in a screen career extending back over fifteen years or more. Among his important productions was the once celebrated line of "Post" scenics notable in their day for pictorial quality. He came to the motion picture industry from the newspaper field, where for a time he specialized in the writing of sports. For Pathe two seasons past he directed a conspicuously successful football series with the late Knute Rockne.

Mr. Spearing was for a number of years the much quoted motion picture critic of the New York Times, and went from that post to Hollywood for a period as a scenario writer and some experience in direction. More recently he has been again in the service of the Times as automobile editor, from which he has taken a leave of absence for the period of the new expedition.

Hiram Brown to Head New Unit

Hiram Brown, former president of RKO, may head a new independent production and exhibition company to be built around the present Beacon Films organization. The Beacon company heretofore has distributed in the non-theatrical field, but with Mr. Brown's advent it is understood the company will widen its field of activity.

The entrance of Mr. Brown into the organization hinges upon acquisition of new capital. His term as a member of the advisory board of M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, expired August 1.

Beacon Films was organized in April, 1931, by H. C. S. Thomson. Associated with him were Roy Gates, Douglas Burden and W. C. Chandler. Mr. Thomson resigned from Beacon in January. Mr. Gates is now president. Mr. Burden, a producer, is vice-president, and Mr. Chandler, an attorney, is chairman of the board.

Dash Injured in Auto Accident

Abe Dash, head of The Film Daily's accounting department, was seriously injured on Monday in an automobile collision in Times Square. He is at Polyclinic hospital.

"STRANGE INTERLUDE"

TERRY RAMSAYE

"Strange Interlude," being the remarkable and altogether unique adventure in the medium of the screen that it is, will most likely be provocative of as many opinions as there are commentators to view it. Therefore the headline on this article was written with studied concern for precision of statement. It will be pleasant if any considerable proportion of showmen agree, and it will be interestingly exciting if they do not.

Taken cold, straight, empirically and without a viewpoint founded on some appreciation of its genesis, derivations and background as dramatic material, and without understanding of its significance in terms of Hollywood thought, "Strange Interlude" would create for itself a number of difficult questions.

"Strange Interlude" calls for discussion from many salients of consideration, as diverse as could be imagined from the whole range of dramatic analysis, but here, foremost in these pages it must be discussed as box office merchandise—which it is—variously.

It would, however, seem that it is implicit that the exhibitor, in all that larger region beyond the domain of Eugene O'Neill and the Theatre Guild, shall have to make a very considerable contribution of showmanship by endeavoring to prepare his audiences by enough of the background of "Strange Interlude" to give them some color of an interest beyond the simple quest of entertainment. Given that interest, audiences are likely to be fascinated to the fade-out, and lacking that they may be unhappy at moments and fall far short of getting all that is to be had of the picture. This is not at all intended to imply that "Strange Interlude" is something that has to be studied, that it makes any demand beyond the intelligence of a typical motion picture audience. It does, however, demand a state of mind, an attitude, a readiness to go on a dramatic adventure along with the makers of the picture.

Those elements of the play which are so poignantly O'Neill have for the screen, somewhat in movie fashion, been subdued, sandpapered and varnished toward euphemism. There was in the making of "Strange Interlude" an evident awareness that it was strong meat.

The exhibitor desiring the effective and convenient handle of star performance and name value for his selling will find in Miss Norma Shearer's work in "Strange Interlude" a quality that gives great justification to her fame. In this picture Miss Shearer has accomplished a performance which can be expected to go far in breaking down the critical lines that in the past have been drawn between the art of the stage and the endeavors of the screen. Miss Shearer's success in this production is probably the most significant of her career because of the extraordinary range of the demands made by her part. It is mayhap not too enthusiastic a judgment to say that Miss Shearer's fan admirers would find the production satisfactory entertainment quite regardless of the content of her vehicle.

And lest it be deduced that Miss Shearer's performance is the whole piece, let it be immediately recorded that it establishes no unhappy contrasts. The cast is generally competent and convincing. It is all clear enough that Mr. Louis B. Mayer and Mr. Irving Thalberg set out to do a very considerable job and spared no resource or effort to do it.

The obvious element of departure in this production is in carrying to the screen the play technique, involving expression in the voices of the cast, as asides, of the alleged real thoughts of the characters, in contrast of course with their often dissembling utterances. As a result in many, many instances, the action must defer to the delivery of two sets of lines, one of which is part of the conversation in progress and the other a part of the unexpressed and concealed thoughts which constitute or reflect the motivations of the deceits that make the drama. This has been handled with considerable skill, interrupting the flow of narration far less than would have been anticipated.

It is to be observed that the asides, the spoken thoughts, as embodied in the picture, might, however, be eliminated with little or no impairment of the drama. Competent actors, and the cast has them, can imply quite as much as the asides convey. This is to be sure much more true of the screen version of "Strange Interlude" than of Mr. O'Neill's play. The screened thoughts are far, far too pure—and if they were not, if they were made real, then a very pretty kettle of censorship fish would have been had. The Hollywood grapevine has it that this special labor was considerably under the attention of Colonel Jason Joy of the Producers Association. If so it was a work of rather more Jason than Joy. The purification process extracted a deal of the O'Neill. But O'Neill is profoundly not mass merchandise and he works primarily for and in a medium which has vastly less concern with mercantile discretions than the motion picture.

The story that is told is decidedly adult entertainment, being almost as far removed from adolescent appreciation as it is from the comprehension of the juvenile. Its strain of bitters is persistent and at its sweetest it is bitter-sweet. It has its moments of rare beauty, invaded, for the hypercritical, by a Hollywood softened interpretation of atmosphere where realism asks for a certain grimness that is New England.

Back of rather than in "Strange Interlude" as a picture are the reasons that it appears on the screen. Its production represents a very conscious reaching out to acquire for the motion picture and its people some of the kudos of the more rarefied upper strata of expression in the older art of the stage. The picture therefore includes investment in glory.

"Strange Interlude" is conspicuously one of those plays that has risen in the school of drama evolved in the period since the screen took the Road away from the stage. It is socially conscious, humanly analytical, in sum a bit of vivisection, beyond the standard mass appetite. The picture treatment has done all that can be done, maybe more than ought to have been done, to bring it to mass understanding.

If audiences could know, which they can not, of the travails of soul of Eugene O'Neill, if they might have seen his home-that-was on the dunes of Provincetown, where now only a crumbling hearth of a fireplace has been left by the storms that sweep the cape, if they could share some part of the anguished hours of his strange mingling of hectic emotion and creative effort, the picture would convey more of the depth of the play.

This made the play, to a certain audience, important, and because it had that special importance it becomes a motion picture. "Strange Interlude," regardless of what its own particular screen career is to be, will stand among the productions of the period, as one of the major production adventures. It represents the daring that the motion picture must have if it

MORE HOUSES POOLED; RKO-FARASH DEAL OFF

Fox, Publix and RKO Properties Are Involved in Four Readjustments in Idaho, Utah, Illinois, Iowa and New York

Pooling of circuit holdings in several key cities and the subsequent economic readjustment of first-run theatres involved continues to occupy the attention of national operators. While long pending negotiations involving Farash Theatres and RKO houses in Schenectady, N. Y., were abandoned this week when the principals failed to agree on terms, negotiations are under way for poolings of properties in a number of other localities. The proposed pool at Schenectady would have taken in practically the entire first-run situation there, embracing RKO's Plaza and Proctor theatres and the State and Strand belonging to the Farash interests. RKO was to have operated the theatres and readjusted prices and the status of exhibition activities accordingly.

Four new pooling deals involve Fox, Publix and RKO properties. A deal between Fox and Publix has resulted in Publix and its subsidiary, Nenmar Theatre Company, taking over the Fox Egyptian at Boise, Idaho. This is the third acquired by Publix in a pooling arrangement, the others having been the Pinney and Granada at Salt Lake City. Simultaneously, the Paramount at Idaho Falls, Idaho, will be turned over to the Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, Publix has completed a deal, sewing up the local situation by acquiring the Strand from Fox. The house had been closed since July 5 and reopened August 28. The only other first run house in town is the Publix Broadway.

Another agreement involves the RKO Palace, at Rockford, Ill., and the Publix Strand, at Yonkers, N. Y. In the Rockford deal, Publix operates the Palace in addition to its Coronado and Orpheum; at Yonkers RKO operates the Publix house in addition to its own theatre, the Proctor.

Further poolings in prospect involve the Fox theatre, St. Louis, and Publix and Warner theatres in the Carolinas. RKO has acquired the Publix Missouri, at St. Louis, on a one-year lease, and is now operating it in conjunction with the RKO St. Louis. RKO is reported to favor pooling of the Fox theatre with the two it now operates, providing satisfactory arrangements can be made with receivers for the Fox.

Negotiations between Warner and Publix, and the Publix affiliates, Kincey and Wilby, will result, if concluded, in the pooling of several theatres in Charlotte and other sections of the Carolinas.

Cessation of the five-theatre pool at Memphis has resulted in the reopening of Loew's Palace, one of two theatres which were closed for the brief period of the arrangement. Loew's Strand will not be reopened. Five Loew, Warner and RKO houses were involved in the pool, which began on April 21 and collapsed two weeks ago when the circuits participating evidenced dissatisfaction with results.

Decision is expected soon in negotiations between Publix and Dubinsky Brothers whereby the Dubinsky circuit will release several Kansas City houses to Publix. One of these, it is said, will be the first run Newman in Kansas City.

Ed Dubinsky, president and general manager of Publix-Dubinsky, has been in conference on the deal for more than a week. Austin C. Keough, secretary of Paramount Publix, was in Kansas City three days this week on the Dubinsky's future contractual relations with Publix.

It is understood the one-year operating contract Dubinskys had with Publix for seven houses expired on July 1. The expected split-up will leave the Dubinsky Brothers one downtown first run, the Liberty.

Business Gains Seen by Mayer

Business conditions are improving in the eastern part of the United States, in the opinion of Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of M-G-M, expressed on his return to the Coast after a lengthy trip east. Mr. Mayer declared that "demand is again outstripping supply and surplus stocks are now moving."

"When I visited the large eastern cities I found factories reopening and others adding employees by the scores," said Mr. Mayer. "The buying that follows in the wake of such an upward move is definitely restoring confidence, and this is the major requisite in any business recovery.

"In motion pictures I found conditions equally encouraging. With employment conditions improving, theatre attendance is increasing. Surplus supplies of pictures have been depleted and many theatres which have been closed are opening again," Mr. Mayer said.

Films Greatly Improved, Catholic Convention Told

American films in the current year were noted as 40 per cent more suitable to Catholic audiences than they were in 1929 by Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, national motion picture chairman, in her report to the convention of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae at Denver this week. Mrs. McGoldrick conducts MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S School and Screen and Junior Show departments.

According to the report, the Federation's previewing groups have examined 8,356 features and short subjects during the past four years. Fifty-one per cent were recommended to Catholic audiences in 1929, 61 per cent in 1930, 61 per cent in 1931 and 71 per cent in 1932. Mrs. McGoldrick pointed out to the convention that cooperation with the industry rather than censorship has proved the most effective method of improvement in the moral quality of pictures.

is to get anywhere in a world of shifting values and evolutionary progression. It is to be thought of, in a certain sense, as being in a category of experiment with such exciting departures as "Life Begins," and "Once in a Lifetime." Through much of the silent period and most all of the sound period the motion picture drama has suffered a deal from super-caution in the effort to make everything surefire merchandise, resulting in a hedging that brought stultification.

"Strange Interlude," a borrowing from the stage though it is, is a stepping out for the motion picture.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Robert Z. Leonard, from the stage play by Eugene O'Neill. Dialogue and continuity by Bess Meredyth and C. Gardiner Sullivan. Photographed by Lee Garmes. Film editor, Margaret Booth. Running time, 112 minutes.

Television Is Not Ready, Says Roxy

Television will not be a live amusement factor for some time, in the definitely expressed opinion of S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, speaking last week at Kansas City in a discussion of innovations planned for Radio City, with which Roxy is prominently identified.

"The mass mind," he said, "is not ready to accept television as it is. The public expects too much of it. We find it is not practical to spring it now. But when it comes we will be ready for it."

Third dimension, now perfected, will be used at Radio City, said Mr. Rothafel. Projection and photography will be revolutionized when third dimension attains wide acceptance, the impresario declared. Color Roxy placed in the same category as third dimension. Radio City innovations, he indicated, will come in part from the RCA laboratories and from Europe, as a result of the recent tour of Roxy and Martin Beck, director of RKO vaudeville, in search of talent and ideas. Novelty will be the keynote of Radio City's stage attractions, the showman indicated.

Commenting upon the lack of tradition in the show business in America, Roxy said, "The attraction must be merchandised, certainly. But along with it I have always sold the theatre as an institution. That builds tradition, which has a definite value and often helps in hurdling the rough spots."

INCREASED RADIO ROYALTY LIFTS CLOUD SMOTHERING TIN PAN ALLEY

Music and Record Sales Forced Down 30 to 80 Per Cent in Recent Years by Short Life of Songs on Air Waves

Million and Half Copy Sales for Hits Reduced to 200,000 Maximum; Piano Roll Business Cut Down 90 Per Cent

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Dark economic clouds which have hovered so low over Tin Pan Alley for four or five years are about to lift. This because the royalty requirements have been increased on the ether waves which have gobbled up hundreds of popular songs, usually utterly consuming them quickly as they gluttonously groaned for more.

In 1931, radio began to divert popular attention of those seeking amusement at home from the old-style phonograph sound box and piano to the newer and more scientific medium of the loudspeaker and vacuum tube. The flow of gold from the nation's pocketbooks to sheet music and record counters of novelty and department stores was virtually stopped. And, while broadcasters have continued to pay certain royalties for the use of copyrighted numbers, these payments, publishers say, have failed to compensate songwriters for their losses. Music sales tumbled as profits of radio stations soared, and Tin Pan Alley sought a reckoning and a readjustment. Both were forthcoming this week when the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers—the music industry—succeeded in promulgating a new schedule of royalty fees for the 600-odd radio stations in this country, which hereafter will pay the Society an additional $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 per annum for the use of copyrighted music.

Music and musical record sales in recent years have dropped variously from 30 to 80 per cent, due principally to the short life of popular pieces which has been brought about by constant performance simultaneously to millions of radio listeners, who have long since discarded their pianos and phonographs.

Publishers Demand Five Per Cent

Having already decided that performing right via broadcasting was the only real value left to popular copyrighted numbers, the Society of Composers some weeks ago served an ultimatum on broadcasters that, unless they substantially increase royalty fees, which currently average $960,000 annually on a flat sustaining basis, all copyrighted material belonging to the 750 publishing firms and song writers who are members of the Society would be withdrawn from radio channels. The seriousness of such a situation, said the composers, might well be considered, in view of the claim that their brain-begotten embrace 80 per cent of all material used on radio microphones.

Negotiations were launched accordingly between the Society and the broadcasters. The former "demanded" 5 per cent of the $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 grossed annually from sponsors of commercial programs. Broadcasters sternly refused to accede to these demands and a bitter dispute followed. During negotiations, radio interests admitted that "air" performances have cut into the sale of music to the public, but they pointed out that it is no longer necessary for publishers to spend huge sums in exploiting new songs.

The controversy ended only the other day when the National Association of Broadcasters indorsed a second draft which provided for the continued payment of the combined sustaining fee of $960,000, plus 3 per cent of the net income from the sale of broadcasting time for the first year; to be raised to 4 per cent for the second year, and to 5 per cent for the third. The agreement automatically increases royalty payments from the present annual average of $960,000 to $3,000,000 for 1932-33; $4,000,000 for 1933-34 and $5,000,000 for 1934-35.

Although the National Association indorsed the new form, the American Society must negotiate contracts individually with the various radio interests. On Tuesday, contracts were signed with the two principal radio groups: National Broadcasting System, owned and operated by the Radio Corporation of America, which also has an important interest in various motion picture and theatre subsidiaries; and Columbia Broadcasting System, an independent concern, in which Paramount Pictures formerly owned a controlling share.

In the case of networks, the increased fee will be payable by the key stations, two or more stations operating simultaneously being considered a network. However, the sustaining fee paid by stations broadcasting on a cycle of less than 500 watts will be lowered, while basic charges to approximately 100 large broadcasting units will be increased.

Music Sales—Then and Now

Until a few years ago, the music business was a most profitable industry. It paid enormous returns to publishers and proportionate income on royalties to songwriters. They collected from sheet music sales, victrola records, music rolls and whatnot. Songs like "Margie," "My Blue Heaven," "Dardanella," "Remember?" "Beautiful Ohio" each sold well over 1,000,000 copies and a proportionate sale was realized on records and piano rolls. If any of these were to be marketed currently, leaders along Tin Pan Alley believe their sales scarcely would total 20 per cent of that figure. The last 1,000,000 copy seller was "Sonny Boy," marketed after radio reached an important stage. Its popularity was due to the enormous success of one of the first talkers, "Sonny Boy," in which the song was popularized by Al Jolson.

Recent popular hits like "Paradise," "Lullaby of the Leaves" and "Lovable" will do well to reach a sales mark of 200,000 each, and as for the sale of records and piano rolls, the decrease is still more pronounced. While "Ramona" sold 3,000,000 copies in 1927, only 900,000 wanted Rudy Vallee's "Maine Stein Song," published a few years later, when radio had started to react on music sales, even though Vallee's constant plugging at the height of his career made it one of the most popular pieces of a decade or more. Due to the radio influence, music publishers do not expect ever again to reach the 4,000,000-copy sales of the Frank Davis-Max Prival "Lullaby Land."

Comparative sales of three of America's largest music publishers indicate that in 1925—preceding the wide popularity of air waves—average sale of a song hit was 1,500,000 copies. In 1929, the average was only 1,000,000, at a time when radio was riding on the crest of a prosperous business period and when it was still a novelty. Two years later, the average sales of a hit dropped to 250,000 and it is estimated that not more than 350,000 copies could be sold now even if a rapid economic recovery developed.

Phonograph records showed a more drastic decline in sales, according to figures supplied by the three leading music dealers. In 1924, approximately 200,000,000 records were sold. In 1929, there were 100,000,000 sales, and last year only 25,000,000 sales were recorded.

Piano Roll Business Non-Extant

The piano roll business is practically non-extant. No figures are available, but estimates given indicate that a 90 per cent decrease in sales has taken place since 1924.

New Jersey is said to have the largest number of radios of any state, with 60 per cent of all homes enjoying programs of broadcasters. The effect of radio on sheet music sales in this state may be gleaned from the fact that large novelty and department stores, which formerly were the state's biggest merchandisers of music, do not handle the article at all today.

The firm of Leo Feist, one of the old line publishers, reported sales of sheet music are 75 per cent off and sales of records 97½ per cent lower than before radio.

Sol Bornstein, president of Irving Berlin, said that "there is no question but that radio has almost completely done away with the sale of records," and in verification he mentioned the 1,250,000 sale of records on "Remember?", a hit of a few years ago, as compared with the current Berlin hit, "Lullaby of the Leaves," which to date has sold only 15,000.

In the days of million copy sellers, exploitation consisted principally of professional "pluggers" who induced important vaudeville and stage names to sing certain numbers. It took a long time before the entire country became conscious of a particular song, and in the case of a hit, its selling life lasted at least 18 months. Pianos and victrolas were sold extensively and sheet music and records were in demand.

When radio came, song "pluggers" deserted backstage for the confines of broadcasting studios. The average vaudeville theatre song audience of 10,000 a week was immediately supplanted by a radio audience representing several millions and music publishers expected their sales would increase accordingly.

The situation looked bright. Talking pictures made their debut and demanded music —plenty of it. Songsters and publishers signed with motion picture producers or were absorbed completely and hundreds of writers made a hurried departure for Hollywood under contract for fabulous sums. It looked like a certain cleanup for Tin Pan Alley, what with radio exploitation for those who stayed in New York and picture exploitation for those who went West. However, the reaction of monotony from "too many songs" was soon felt. The same songs were heard in theatres and on the air, and over-production in anticipation of enormous sales began to clutter up the music counters. Picture producers ended the cycle of musicals and returned both song writers and publishing firms to Tin Pan Alley.

Radio, too, proved a boomerang for the song-makers. Receiving sets took the places in homes formerly occupied by victrolas and pianos, and the two by-products, sheet music and records, suffered thereby.

This, then, is the enigma of the music business. Whereas, songwriters and publishers previously collected handsome royalties, they now depend almost entirely on the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, a protective association which collects annually from theatres, radio, restaurants, dancehalls and other places where copyrighted music of its members is played for profit. The royalties accrued are divided among its membership on a pro rata basis.

Court Ruling Sets Precedent

"In 1924," according to E. S. Mills, the Society's general manager, "radio broadcasters contended they were not performing copyrighted music for profit. The U. S. district court for the eastern district of New York denied this contention and the decision was later upheld by other courts. Radio at that time was just a by-product of performing rights, but it quickly became important.

"In later years, the closing of theatres and the decreasing use of orchestras by ballrooms and restaurants lowered composers' revenues further. At the same time radio was demanding eight times as much music as ever before, due to the fact that the average life of a song after broadcasting became popular was only 90 days, whereas formerly it had been 18 months. Throughout this period, the composers' revenue from radio was only $900,000 annually, and this had to be divided among all authors, composers' and publishers' societies the world over."

In addition to approximately $75,000,000 derived annually from commercial programs, Mr. Mills said that radio manufacturers sold $309,000,000 worth of radio sets last year, and $20,000,000 in radio station equipment. The Society was paid less than $1 out of every $400 grossed, he said, for the use of copyrighted music.

Columbia Broadcasting, one of the two largest national systems, has a music library of 50,000 different selections, consisting for the most part of copyrighted pieces. According to Julius Mattfield, manager of the library, 18,000 are classical and semi-classical orchestral and vocal numbers; 7,500 are orchestral jazz; 16,500 are popular song copies; 500 special arrangements of jazz works; 2,500 copies of vocal music from operas and operettas in special song collections; 3,000 compositions of choral music and 2,000 selections in the special libraries of "key" artists as Kate Smith, Morton Downey, Irene Beasley, Vaughn de Leath, Ben Alley, Reis and Dunn, and other Columbia stars.

The Columbia library supplies music for about 300 programs each week and an average of 40 new orchestrations a week is written by librarians, each requiring from four to seven days' effort for one arranger.

The secret of the radio success of a popular song, said Mr. Mattfield, rests in originality.

WHY NOT DRAMATIZE SOUND?

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

Although the old silent screen was inarticulate, it had its compensations. There was something left to the imagination. A lot of that silence was golden. Too few of our picture-makers realize the value of dramatic silence. Fewer still make any serious attempt to dramatize sounds.

Wasn't it John Ruskin who said that "Architecture is frozen music?" Extending that thought, we might say that music is flowing architecture, and so arrive at the affinity of motion pictures and music. But the screen seems to be getting far away from the picture in motion. Motion pictures are becoming more and more pictures of still life and recording of set speeches; replicas of stage plays with an occasional mechanical shifting of scenes.

It seems strange that the power of music to make mobile and to vitalize has not been given more recognition in its application to the audible screen. Music need not—indeed, could not—entirely usurp the spoken word, even though it is capable of expressing thought within its own sphere. Even to the uninitiated, the reiteration and the building up of a musical idea has a clear significance when the tonal phrase is applied to a visualized situation or characterization, while its direct emotional appeal is subtle and always reinforcing.

There is evidence that some producers are making progress in the technic of fusing pictorial action with tonal rhythm, intensifying the emotional content without distorting the dialogue. This is encouraging. Moving pictures will continue to flourish just so long as they keep moving, and retain that fluidity and mobility which is the essence of their charm.

The chap who said, "Ever let the fancy roam; pleasure never is at home," knew something. People go to the theatre to let their imaginations have fling. The deep thinkers stay home and read erudite tomes or do cross-word puzzles.

If the tastes of radio audiences are any criterion, the public likes music better than talk, its musical preferences incline heavily toward the popular rather than the classical, and it enjoys music more in the summer than in the winter. A survey of the past year, of the first three months of 1932 and of a recent week—as compiled for Julius F. Seebach, director of program operations of the Columbia Broadcasting System —shows how a network supplies the entertainment wants of the average listener. Out of the mass of statistics arises a human story of personal preferences. Whether the public's tastes in air entertainment are in any way related to its screen preferences can only be guessed.

Of talk programs, the public greatly prefers script acts or dramatics to any other form of speaking entertainment on the radio. "We try," Mr. Seebach said in explaining the charted time, "to provide something that will satisfy every listening taste." These are the figures for 1931:

MINUTES OF MUSIC

Total, 316,460—100%

Figures for the first three months of this year show about the same proportions—79.7 per cent music to 20.3 per cent talk.

Sacred hymns broadcast on Sunday nights have a following among the radio audience. Seth Parker (Phillips H. Lord) set out to determine the extent of this following and the names of favored hymns. Seth Parker asked his listeners on his weekly coast-to-coast broadcast over NBC to submit their ten favorites. "The Old Rugged Cross" won by 6,000 votes.

More than 600 titles were submitted by listeners in every state in the union, and elsewhere. At least one of the first ranking ten, listed herewith, was mentioned in almost every letter:

MUSICAL FILMS TO PREDOMINATE IN GERMAN PRODUCT THIS SEASON

Movability of Silent Picture Regained, Says Klitsch, but New Style Must Be Found for Opera of More Serious Subjects

Screen Operetta Best Suited at Present for World Market, Says Tintner, Public Demanding Light Entertainment

by HANS TINTNER
Berlin Correspondent

The German sound film programs of the coming season will show a predominance of the musical picture. Figures speak the most convincing language also in old Europe, and productions in which music was foremost have scored most surprising successes in the past season. Yet, the light operetta film is not even the special field of the German film artists, who as authors, composers, directors and actors have been surpassed in this kind of pictures by the more charming and graceful Austrians. Of the artists working in German operetta films 80 per cent are domiciled on the Blue Danube.

What importance the German film producers attach to this class of films and its Austrian masters is shown by the vigorous protests which the German producers filed with the government on account of the contingent law restrictions hindering the Austrian artists working in Germany. Through the embassies important alterations were obtained which insure the further undisturbed work of the Austrians in Germany, for whom the operetta is a sort of national affair.

Movability Regained, Says Klitsch

The managing director of the Ufa concern, Ludwig Klitsch, has also emphasized the importance of the musical film for the present-day programs:

"The German sound film has freed itself from its dependency on the stage, which was noticeable in the first operetta films, and has become aware of the advantages of a special sound film technic," he said. "The sound film has regained step by step the movability of the silent film. From the considerably lighter sound film style of the picture 'Gasoline Station,' in which the singing and dancing followed for the first time the sound film's own laws, a large step forward was made in the film 'The Congress Dances,' in which revue-like elements are woven into the action of the operetta in a masterly and filmlike manner. Our big aim is now the sound film opera, for which, however, the new film style must yet be found."

The goal has not yet been reached, and the musical film is in many respects still in its earliest stages. Many a crudeness and imperfectness must be overcome yet.

Compared with the theatre, the sound film is so extremely young that its immaturity and all its faults are absolutely excusable. Many thousand years ago there had already been theatrical performances in India and Greece. The effects on the public have been tried out, masterpieces of dramatic art have been created and produced on the stage. The first German sound film, however, was produced in the year 1929!

The musical comedy, which at present predominates in the cinema programs and is strongly demanded by the public, leaves much to be desired. It has not fulfilled the mission of the sound film as a mirror of our time and cultural factor. The musical comedy of our days does not want to have anything to do with real life; it flies to the rose-colored, unreal and grotesque fairyland of the operetta fable. This may be due partly to the present situation in Germany, where Germans are shooting each other in the streets, where the farmer's harvest is distrained on the field. The German public flies from this life to the cinema and does not want to be reminded of what takes place outside.

These reasons have contributed to the fact that today the German film producer seeks his fortune in the light and pleasing operetta and the film revue, and does not want to hear of anything else.

That the music is life and soul of the sound film has been recognized in Germany since the very first experiments in this new field. The picture which contained only dialogue and sound effects could create sufficient interest only in its dramatic heights, in order to really convince and fascinate the public. On the whole, however, it was almost as tedious and dull as a silent film shown without musical accompaniment.

There was no doubt that the sound film absolutely required music. However, one did not know exactly in which way the musical element should be incorporated. It was impossible to produce a continued series of sound films wherein a composer, a singer, a conductor of an orchestra or other musical star always represented the leading part.

This was one of the greatest obstacles to the young German sound film art. The public, accustomed to find in the picture a reproduction of natural life, was annoyed that the hero, as on the operetta stage, began to sing suddenly and apparently without story justification. It felt the violent contrast between the realistic dialogue sequences and the inserted song.

Efforts were made to lessen this contrast by selecting still lighter subjects, trusting that the song would spring up more logically from the comedy action than from serious situations. The picture makers worried their brains to find a way to insert songs and musical pieces of all kinds so that they were organically connected with the action

Now followed a series of films in which music was inserted in a very intelligent manner without damaging the audiences' feelings as to the logic of the thing. In these films the stars did not perform the musical parts but the scenario was arranged in such a manner that in the course of the action the star got into the musical sequences. This also was no final solution, because the results were only dialogue films with inserted musical parts.

As a result of many experiments, much seeking and striving, a new style of the musical film finally was found. If the music did not go with the realism of the films made up to now, then it was necessary—and this was the solution of the difficult problem—to lessen and alter the realism. The whole action, the theme, the scenery had to be laid in a fictitious, unreal sphere. In these efforts the German sound film artists benefited naturally by the great tradition of the stage. The Vienna operetta, the musical comedy, the comic opera, all of them showed that characteristic want of seriousness, that comedy touch which lends itself to musical illustration.

It was not by mere chance that the first big international sound film success of Germany was produced by its best known director of stage revues. Eric Charell possessed the unhesitating, playful boldness and lightness which was necessary to adapt the chorus and ballet, dancing and scenery for the sound picture. He definitely abandoned all realism and he divided the whole action of his picture right from the beginning in musical scenes and big choreographical scenes. He is the inventor of the new sound film style in Germany.

Serious Subjects Needed

Like Ernst Lubitsch, who introduced in American pictures the big musical show and used in his pictures the effect of musically and rhythmically conducted masses, which had been tried out on the stage, who divided the song in chorus and solo songs, Eric Charell has led the experimenting German sound film to the big musical revue.

The film operetta will last, regardless of how the film may develop further, because it meets best the demand of the public for light, superficial entertainment. On account of its whole structure, the film operetta will be best suitable for the international market. Only a pedant can be displeased with this light-hearted Muse, because it does not take the world seriously.

However, only narrow-sighted people can believe that the public will be satisfied in the long run with this light entertainment alone. The coming sound film opera must be based on more serious and heartfelt subjects. It will have to treat the things of life with more trueness and more feeling than the musical comedy of our days. A great deal of work is to be done yet before we succeed in producing a sound film opera appealing to the general public. We know positively that the stage opera in Germany is perfectly antiquated and that its mummy-like existence is granted only by subventions from the government. There is not a single opera house in Europe which could exist without state aid. We must look for suitable subjects conforming with the spirit of our time. It will be difficult to find them, enormously difficult. However, he who knows the intoxicating effect of a big philharmonic orchestra on the masses, who has experienced the great charm of fine and well-trained voices, knows that this field offers the sound picture enormous possibilities.

BRITISH SUNDAY SHOW TILT TURNS TO GRAB BAG FIGHT FOR THE FEES

Nest of Hornets Stirred Up by Decision to Use 5 Per Cent of Charity Levy for Cultural and Educational Purposes

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

Passage of the Sunday Opening Bill through Parliament recently was decried by many in the trade because of the unfair impost it placed on commercial enterprise in this one industry. This Charity clause was—and is—definitely unpopular. The suggestion made and adopted in the later stages of the bill that 5 per cent of the charity levy should be set aside for cultural and educational purposes was (if possible) even more unpopular; it stirred up a nest of hornets.

Quite a different situation has since developed. Now there is this money floating before the imagination of everyone who professes to know what is best for the trade, and each one wants to lay his hands on it to help him pave the way for the millenium of the cinema business.

As authors of the original idea, the Commission on Cultural and Educational Films has, presumably, first title to the cash. But, as I have previously pointed out, the trade is none too ready to accept the Commission, and therefore has its own ideas about the disposal of the doubloons. Simon Rowson, chief of Ideal Films, and one of the trade's few intellectuals, has, in that stately mouthpiece of the irate Englishman—the Times—propounded his plan for disposing of the bullion. He is all for a film institute somewhat after the lines indicated in the Commission's recent report, though he thinks such an institution should be controlled more largely by the trade than by the culturists.

Joint Organization Proposed

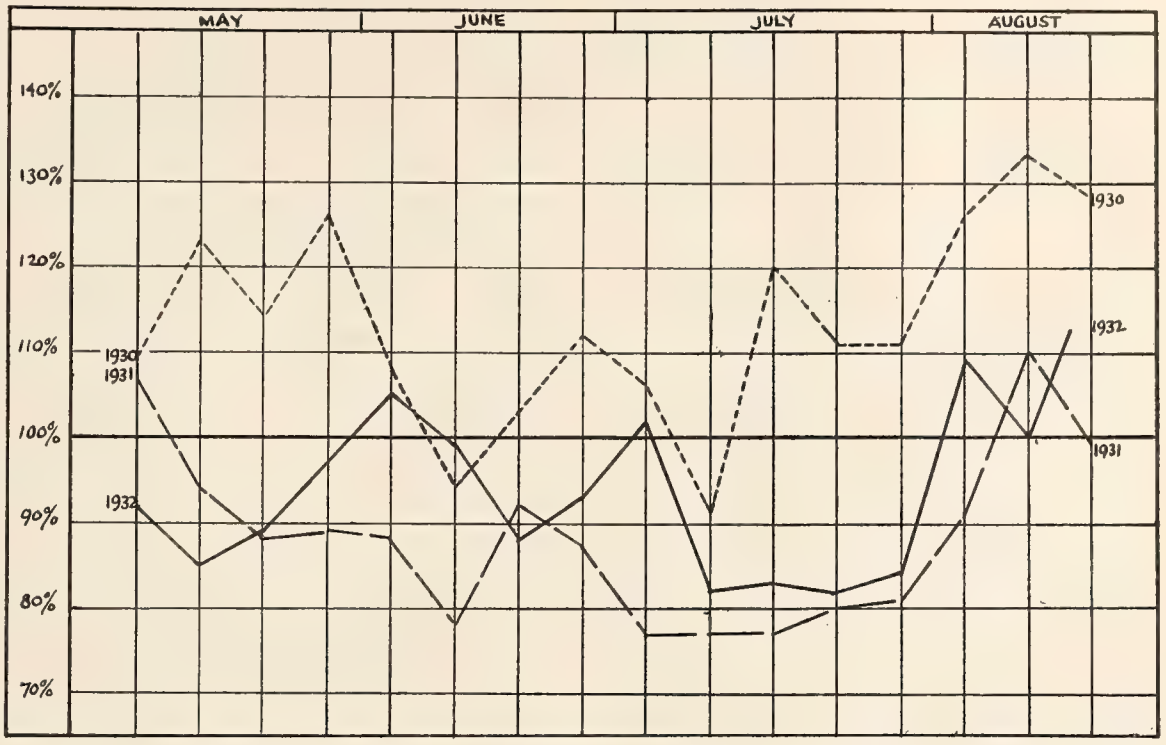
As I was writing the foregoing news came through that overtures have been made by the Commission to the Films Group of the Federation of British Industries to form a joint organization to apply for the Fund. Even so, disagreement is likely to arise on the question of which party is to have the stronger voice in the control of the joint body, the arguments being exactly those just indicated.

Another to enter the fray is Will Day, doyen of oldtimers, whose chief claim to fame is the fine collection of motion picture material that he has built up over a course of years. Mr. Day thinks the 5 per cent might be put to a worse use than founding a national film museum, of which his collection could form the nucleus. 'Tis a worthy idea, but drags somehow away from the purpose for which the fund has been earmarked.

Meanwhile the trade sums up its opinion of the whole business in the title which it has coined for this moneybag—the "Uplift Fund."

Much eyebrow-lifting followed the news which broke without warning on the trade that the Examiners to the Customs had decided that the trade's valuation of negative sound track was a leetle too modest, and that henceforth each foot of variable density or variable area—as the case might be—would be valued for purposes of duty at 4 shillings and twopence, i. e., one dollar at par of sterling. Previously the commissioners had taken the trade's word for it that the worth of sound track was no more than two or three cents per twelve linear inches.

Since import duty is payable at the rate of ten per cent on the valuation, it is easy to compute the difference that the readjustment will mean to the luckless importer. On a feature of, say, 6,000 feet, he will now pay H. M. Treasury the sum of $600 for the privilege of introducing the negative into this country instead of the twelve dollars that he had to piece up before. Existing duty of 10 cents a foot on picture negative is not affected.



It seems somehow that officialdom has formed the impression that talk on celluloid has increased considerably in value since Al Jolson first registered his croons.

Here and There

Discussions in the Wardour Street area have been these recent weeks chiefly in the nature of small talk. Nothing much else to chew on. Here are some samples:

A well known anti-cinema fanatic went down into the country to address an audience on his pet topic. He was introduced by the local vicar, who said, "I and many others feel that the cinematograph is one of the greatest inventions of the age, and one of God's greatest gifts to the people." And did said fanatic murmur "Hear, hear"?

The upward trend in box office receipts of the Los Angeles theatres the past month is reflected in this graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of returns throughout the country. Here is a comparison of receipts at Los Angeles in the summer months of the last three years. The 100 per cent line represents the average weekly gross for the entire year 1931.

A few aero-minded lads on Flicker Alley have decided to form a Film Flying Club. Exhibitors are all for the idea, and propose taking up their latest returns in order to feel they have risen at last.

Formerly a motion picture arena but now devoted to non-stop vaudeville, the Leicester Square theatre is offering its projection equipment and its organ for sale. Omen!

The world premiere of George Bernard Shaw's second talker, a screen version of "Arms and the Man," took place at Malvern during the annual drama festival. Wonder what valuation the Customs would put on the sound track of this one?

In a newspaper competition to determine the twelve most popular British stars, the following players got the votes of 700,000 readers in this order: Jack Buchanan, Tom Walls, Gracie Fields, Edna Best, Jack Hulbert, Ralph Lynn, Owen Nares, Cicely Courtneidge, Herbert Marshall, Joan Barry, Sydney Howard and Gordon Harker.

Three Territorial Buyers For Skouras Circuit

Motion picture buying power of Skouras Theatres is to be divided into three territorial divisions with a buyer for each sector. Edward Peskay will buy for houses in the east. J. J. Sullivan for Fox West Coast houses and Fred Stein for the middle-west. All deals are to be approved by Edward L. Alperson.

NEW COLOR PROCESS READY FOR MARKET

Photocrom, Inc., Will Handle Wolff-Heide Process, Developed by Photographic Chemist of Berlin; System Outlined

The Wolff-Heide color process, primarily a chemical process and under development for several years, has been perfected and preparations are now under way for its marketing, according to the sponsors. To market it a new corporation, a practically closed one, has been organized under the name Photocrom, Inc. Its headquarters are at 420 Madison avenue, New York.

The Photochrom organization claims that the production speed of the process makes it possible to turn out colored positives in only ten minutes longer than it now takes to turn out a black and white positive, and it is also said that negatives may be produced at an increased cost of ¼ cent a foot over black and white negatives, and that costing 2½ cents a foot may be made into colored positive at a gross cost of 2 2-3 cents a foot. They also cite as economy factors the lack of necessity for special camera equipment and the fact that standard developing methods are employed so that the work may be done in any well equipped laboratory now handling black and white work.

Eight Color Hues to a Frame

Highlights of the Folff-Heide process involve the sensitizing of the raw film stock to produce three separate gelatinous layers of color sensitivity, the first layer being sensitive to orange and red, the second to green and the bottom layer blue. This selective sensitizing, done chemically, is described as the real basis of the process. After the film is exposed it is developed in the same manner as a normal black and white negative, and is then subjected to three successive chemical baths, requiring a total of ten minutes to complete. The first, or red bath, converts the silver deposit in the upper gelatin layer, the red impression, into its own colors, red and orange. There follows a green bath which converts the second layer into green silver, and a final bath which converts the silver deposit on the bottom layer and representing the blue impressions into the blue color.

From the primary colors of the spectrum thus obtained, it is possible, the sponsors say, to produce eight separate color hues to a frame.

From the negatives, contact prints are made with standard developing equipment, which gives a normal black and white positive. The positive is then passed through the three sensitizing baths which the negative underwent, thus producing the colored positive.

Inventor a Photographic Chemist

The process was conceived and developed by Emil Wolff-Heide, a photographic chemist of Berlin, Germany, who, it is said, expended $600,000 in developing the process over a period of ten years. The method was largely developed in the Wolff-Heide laboratories in Berlin, although the chemist says he succeeded in adapting it to commercial use in this country.

Photocrom, Inc., which owns all rights to the process, having acquired them from previous owners, is headed by Henry Zollinger, of Zollinger & Schroth, New York silk manufacturers. Mr. Zollinger is chairman of the board and treasurer of Photochrom, Inc.; Ernest Hodossy is vice-president; R. H. Richard, secretary, and K. V. Vallintsits, assistant secretary. Financing has been arranged through Mr. Zollinger, a group of his associates and a European group which is said to include the Grand Duke of Luxembourg.

The company expects to have a marketing arrangement for this country completed by September 15, with offices operating in New York and Hollywood. It is planned to have world marketing plans in operation by the end of the year, with the establishment of offices in Berlin, London and Paris.

Chaplin Restrained from Further Hearing of Suit

Lita Grey Chaplin, in Los Angeles, has been granted an alternative writ of prohibition enjoining further hearing of Charlie Chaplin's suit to restrain his two sons from fulfilling the contract made by their mother with Fox. Prior to that Mr. Chaplin had been granted a temporary stay in superior court restraining the former Mrs. Chaplin from placing the sons in film work.

Mr. Chaplin sought the injunction on the ground that he had provided a $200,000 fund for the rearing and education of his children at the time of his divorce, and that the boys were as yet too young to engage in film work. The writ obtained by Mrs. Chaplin will prevent Judge H. Parker Wood from ruling on Mr. Chaplin's petition until September 8, but he is expected to rule on Friday on the question of modifying the Chaplin divorce.

The Fox studios are going ahead with preparations to film "Little Teacher."

Lewis Resigns as Fox Story Chief; Duties Split Up

Al Lewis, head of the Fox story department since 1928, has resigned to enter production. There will be no successor, Mr. Lewis' duties being split up among Richard A. Rowland and Florence Strauss in New York and Julian Johnson on the coast.

Formerly a partner with Max Gordon in the theatrical producing field, Mr. Lewis has a number of Broadway stage plays to his credit, including, "Welcome Stranger," "Six Cylinder Love," "Icebound," "The Nervous Wreck," "Rain," "Secrets," "Easy Come, Easy Go," "Chicago," "The Donovan Affair," "The Jazz Singer," and "The Spider."

Tribute to Sears

DICK SEARS

Elected commander of the Oliver Ames, Jr., Post of the American Legion at Boston, Major Richard W. Sears, Pathe Newsreel technician, was given additional honors when he was installed in office at Old Faneuil Hall, the first time the "Cradle of Liberty" had been opened to such ceremonials. The Armory of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company was the scene of the reception and dance. Mr. Sears has been a member of the Ancients for 22 years, but despite the length of time that would seem to connote, he is not a charter member; the order was founded in 1638.

Eight hundred attended the event. On the platform were 35 leaders in several fields of activity, among them Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, Congresswoman; Congressman W. P. Connery; Lieutenant-Governor William Youngman; Col. Rush B. Lincoln, representing the Army; Steve Garrity, state commander of the Legion; Col. William Bailey, G.A.R.; Maj. Henry Taylor, Boston Fusiliers; Capt. Walter Queen, commander of the Ancients; also British war veterans, Spanish-American veterans, other state and city officials, newspaper friends, commanders and delegations from many Legion posts.

Entertainment was given by four acts provided by Al Somerby of the Bowdoin Square Theatre, the Yankee Division drum corps of 50 members in French uniforms, the Ames Post drum corps, and by Miss Katherine Gray, of Boston society circles, who sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

"Dick" Sears was a photographic officer with the 26th, 80th and other divisions in the World War.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A KING has turned producer for an independent picture company. Faustin Kirkus, known to millions as "The white king of the black isle" of La Gonave, near Haiti, is now making voodoo scenes on the island for Principal Distributing Corporation.

The succession of events that led the natives to make him king reads like a dime novel. It seems that their last king, Faustin the First, died many years ago and a legend had it that he would one day return from out of the heavens. Wirkus was assigned to maintain order on the island and when the 40,000 voodoo negroes spied him coming from the clouds (in a U. S. Marine plane) and heard that his name, too, is Faustin, they made him king and "gave" him the 250-pound reigning queen as his wife. He refused the wife, with thanks, but accepted the crown and for some time held power over the island and its inhabitants.

William Seabrook "discovered" the white king and wrote of the adventure. Then, after much persuasion, the publishing firm of Doubleday, Doran managed to get him out of the Marine Corp to write a book. Since his resignation from the military, some three years ago, he has been lecturing throughout the country.

Principal commenced to make a feature picture, called "Voodoo," and hearing of the exsergeant's relations with the Gonave negro voodoos, managed to line him up as "ambassador of good will" between the savages and a production crew which was sent to film their rituals.

In checking reports that St. Louis policemen issued a ban against persons being "buried alive" for exhibition purposes, we discovered that instead of being "buried," the man underground, from time to time, slipped into a subterranean "living room" to enjoy a smoke, eat and rest his cramped limbs. Large crowds of the curious paid ten cents or more per person to witness the stunt. And St. Louis theatres suffered accordingly by the competition.

For weeks now we have been wondering what happened to the Irish delegation to the Olympic games in Los Angeles. It appears that the Swedes and Poles, Rumanians and Ukranians, Syrians and the Turks were being wined and dined by various Hollywood production executives and actors. But nary a word came over the line about a reception to the Irish, and we were worried. There must be at least one from the old sod in the film capital, we thought, and lo and behold we were right. Joseph I. Breen, a West Coast executive of the Hays office, begorra-ed himself into the Olympic Stadium and gathered the clan together for a good old-fashioned shindig.

Here's a motto from Martin Beck: "Work faithfully for twelve hours every day . . . and don't worry. Then, in time, you may become a bigger executive and work sixteen hours . . . and have all the worry."

And now beer—plain but foamy lager beer—has been added to the ever growing list of things that are needed to save the show business. While in Kansas City the other day, Mr. Beck voiced the opinion that the product of malt and hops is needed as a stimulant for drooping box offices. He believes that if beer returns, many theatres will be converted into beer gardens and thus the number of theatres will be reduced. Simple?

"In fact," he said, "such a possibility is the only lifesaver I see for a great many theatres; it will go a long way toward solving a perplexing problem." And, perhaps, not only for theatres.

"The standing at this writing," Mr. Stuart continued, "is that there is a mountain to move and we have carried away a few wheelbarrows full of rock. At the rate we are going, it will take two years to remove the obstacles. The owners have given us FOUR MONTHS. Thanksgiving Day is the dead line. Pay dirt will be found on that day, or this cluster of plain and fancy RKO-LIANS go out like a light. Meanwhile let's leave the crowing to the Pathe rooster."

"No use kidding ourselves that we are doctors," concluded Mr. Stuart. "'Wet Nurse' is a more appropriate title."

THE two extremes of insurance policyholders are undertakers and theatre employes. No other civilian class makes a poorer showing than theatre employes and none is as fully protected with life insurance as funeral directors. Motion picture actors and actresses, musicians and entertainers as a class are 64 per cent without insurance.

The American Service Bureau made a nationwide checkup on life insurance buyers for the 132 large insurance companies of this country and Canada. It found that of every 10,164 applicants, only 28 were actors, musicians or entertainers. And 64 per cent said they had no other insurance, while of the remaining 36 per cent, the average carried was $37,500. The average of the new applications totaled $7,464. However, what with the many million-dollar policies and others of a high amount, few classes carry more insurance than those in Hollywood.

Theatre managers and owners carry an average of $23,000 and only 34 per cent are without protection. The average new application is for $6,244, while their employes carry an average of only $1,750 and only 14 per cent are insured.

Only 9 per cent of undertakers are without protection, due for the most part to the fact that they come into such intimate contact with the need for life insurance protection by the families of those they bury.

102 PUBLISHED BOOKS AND PLAYS PURCHASED IN LAST SIX MONTHS

MGM Heads List of 8 Producer-Distributors and Five Independents by Buying Rights to Twenty-Three Manuscripts

One hundred and two published fiction books and plays were purchased in the six months from March to August by eight producer-distributors and five independent companies, for production and release in 1932-33. Numerous other published stories and plays previously purchased but intended for the current season's production schedules would considerably swell the total. Original stories written by studio writing staffs, or originals submitted on assignment or by free-lance authors, are not included.

Fiction and play purchases reached a high mark in March, when 25 stories were purchased in preparation for the launching of the season. Seventeen were bought in April, 21 in May, 12 each in June and July, and 15 in August.

M-G-M purchased more published books and plays than other companies, having contracted for talker rights to 23 manuscripts. Paramount acquired 15; Warner, 14; World Wide, 14; Universal, 12; RKO, 7; Columbia, 6; Fox, 6, and United Artists, Chesterfield, Goldburg Productions, Monogram and Paradise Pictures, 1 each. However, some of these companies have numerous additional story properties in their vaults for current production.

Titles of current story buys, with authors' names and other descriptive matter, appear each month in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Purchases for August, which follow, list six made in the month by Paramount and three by Warner:

Columbia

"Black Moon," novel by Clements Ripley.

Chesterfield

"The King Murder," mystery story by Charles Reed Jones.

MGM

"The Mask of Fu Manchu," story by Sax Rohmer.

"The Lady," play by Martin Brown.

Paramount

"International House," by Lou Heifitz and Neil Brant.

"A Chance at Heaven," novel by Vina Delmar.

"The Grand Thing," story by Lawrence Hazzard.

"Evenings For Sale," novel by I. A. R. Wylie.

"The Cross," novel by Gina Kaus.

"What Every Woman Knows," play by Sir James Barrie.

RKO Radio

"The Monkey's Paw," mystery story by W. W. Jacobs.

Universal

"The Life of Clyde Beatty," story by Edward Anthony.

Warner Bros.

"Forty-Second Street," novel by Bradford Ropes.

"Grand Slam," novel by B. Russell Herts.

"The Mind Reader," play by Vivienne Cosby.

Stories Must Be Different These Days, Says Warner

Declaring that the "run-of-the-mill picture is out—if it was ever in," and that audiences no longer are satisfied with "ordinary" films, Jack L. Warner, vice president in charge of all Warner-First National production, said this week that as far as his company is concerned, "we're already far off the beaten path in story material and we are going to wander farther and farther afield."

The foremost test now for each screen story must be this: Is it different? Mr. Warner said. The public demands that the picture be unusual, the subject unique, and the whole "filmed with all the innovations that the industry can devise."

Unique Background a Factor

Citing the following Warner pictures, made or contemplated—"Tiger Shark," "Life Begins," "I Am a Fugitive," "Silver Dollar," "The Match King" and "20,000 Years in Sing Sing"—the production executive said:

"Not one of these is standard motion picture material, yet every one is certain to be a sensation in its own way. In each one of them there is a combination of unusual story and unique backgrounds."

Freshness of topic and treatment is the requirement, regardless of whether the story "comes from an outside source or from the staff of 30 writers under contract to the studio," he said. " 'Public Enemy,' 'Little Caesar,' 'Five Star Final' and 'The Last Flight' all dared to be different, yet they proved sweet music to exhibitors and popular fare with audiences."

Of the new product Mr. Warner added: " 'Tiger Shark' is a tremendously exciting picture with a background of tuna fishermen. It is totally different from anything either Edward G. Robinson or Warner Brothers has made before. 'Life Begins' is equally sensation in nature from the theme standpoint. It has the most unusual setting ever dared in a motion picture."

He spoke of a contemplated production, "The Lowdown," dealing with the "publicity racket"; of "I Am a Fugitive," which, he said, "is going to make us some enemies" but will be talked about; of the planned filming of "The Miracle" with Loretta Young as the nun and Max Reinhardt helping to stage it; of pictures in work on the life of Ivar Kreuger and his "mysterious actress friend"; on Warden Lawes' prison story; on the career of Haw Tabor, Colorado's spendthrift silver king.

"There isn't an ordinary story or a program picture on the lot," Mr. Warner said. "We have only one yardstick: what the writer says must be extraordinary."

New Orleans Protection Discussion May End Suit

United Theatres, Inc., and independent theatre owners of New Orleans are conducting conferences with a view to adjusting the local protection situation. The circuit has not yet replied to a suit brought by the United States attorney general's office, charging restraint of trade and asking a discontinuance of present zoning and protection practices.

Independents have registered protests against the circuit's 30 days protection over second runs and 60 days over third runs, which protest resulted in federal attention and the pending suit. If a settlement is reached during the current negotiations, a move for withdrawal of the government suit is considered likely.

Receivers Take Over Theatres

Jesse W. Barrett and Walter A. Nohl, receivers for Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., St. Louis, have taken over the properties of the Central Properties Corporation, with the consent of Circuit Judge Moses N. Hartman. The move is a step to put the Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatre properties under the jurisdiction of the circuit court.

Jesse Lasky May Produce for Paramount; Katz Favors Units

Sam Katz, on the Coast, is discussing with Jesse L. Lasky the possibility of a deal, similar to the one near completion with B. P. Schulberg, whereby Mr. Lasky would produce features for Paramount release. Mr. Katz is considered favorably disposed toward the unit system of production. Charles R. Rogers is at present producing at the Paramount plant.

Under the terms of the deal with Mr. Schulberg, the latter may borrow Paramount players, directors and technicians, but he assumes part of the production cost. It is understood Mr. Katz desires to maintain studio control over the producing units, with Emanuel Cohen in a supervisory capacity. Schulberg would produce eight features under the agreement.

To Sell "Crusoe" Exclusively

"Mr. Robinson Crusoe," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, will be the first picture distributed by United Artists under the exclusive run plan of Al Lichtman, general sales manager. A number of dates have already been set. The sales policy on each feature is to be decided as it appears from the studio.

PRODUCERS DECIDE TO OUTLAW PLAYERS WHO JUMP CONTRACTS

Association Resolution Is Believed to Include Independent Film Makers; Emanuel Cohen Succeeds Schulberg on Board

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Stirred to action by recent attempts on the part of well known players to jump their contracts by dissatisfaction over salary, Hollywood producers through their association have definitely gone on record as against the employment of such artists until they carry out their contractual obligations. Formally announced last week by Will H. Hays, following the semi-annual meeting of the producers' association, the resolution declares "that the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers, Inc., hereby does recommend that none of the members of said association at any time in the future employ any artist who refuses, without legal justification, to comply with his contractual obligations, to any producer of motion pictures."

This practically closes the doors of all studios to players who quit over salary disagreements. All the larger companies are members of the Association, but the resolution further mentions that it will have nothing to do with contract jumpers "to any producer of motion pictures," which is believed to include the independents as well. And since so many large circuits are controlled by members of the Hays association, it is unlikely that any independent would seek to employ an artist who had put himself out of bounds under the resolution.

Jack Warner Presides

The resolution is said to be aimed particularly at certain Warner-First National players who, upon attaining increased popularity with fans throughout the country, have refused to fulfill the terms of their contracts and have insisted upon having more money. Jack L. Warner, vice president of the association, presided at the meeting at which the resolution was drafted, in the absence of Louis B. Mayer, president.

Settlement of the rumors that Emanuel Cohen might leave his post as first vice president in charge of production at Paramount studios was seen in the fact that he was elected to the board of directors of the producers' association to succeed B. P. Schulberg, resigned.

Calls Product Superior

General optimism was expressed over improving business conditions, and the prospects for outstanding motion pictures this fall. Mr. Hays reported to the meeting that his office had found that during the month of August, 153 feature-length pictures are actually in production or being prepared for immediate shooting, as against only 74 productions last August and 108 in August of 1930.

"Renewal of individual effort, the careful scrutiny of new economics, and the increase of inter-studio cooperative measures, combined with the constant urge to make every picture of greater entertainment appeal than the last, is placing the 1932-33 product ahead of its predecessors, and, in consequence, will add thousands of theatre attendance," said Mr. Hays.

"With the major film companies now engaged in one of the greatest production seasons of their existence, I believe their efforts will be amply rewarded as the pendulum of business swings back toward normal this fall.

"Although the slack period of the last few months has had a tendency to slow up the wheels of the industry, it has not been without its rewards."

France Leads Europe in New Theatres Built in 1931-32

The press of Europe has recently given much prominence to an item to the effect that France led all other countries of Europe in point of new film theatres constructed during 1931-32, according to a report from M. H. Kennedy, American Trade Commissioner at London. In France 76 houses were completed, with a total of 154,700 seats.

Great Britain is listed second with 70 theatres and 105,000 seats and Germany third with 60 houses and 25,000 seats. The French dominance in this particular is attributed to the construction plan which Pathe Natan organized and carried out successfully.

Distributors Will Contest Omaha Restraint Suit

The restraint of trade suit filed recently in Federal court at Omaha by Victor Newton, theatre owner of Pacific Junction, Ia., which named seven distributors and the Omaha Film Board of Trade, will be contested by the MPPDA and distributors. No date for a hearing has been set as yet.

Seeks to Curb Triple Bills

Banning of triple feature bills before the practice becomes widespread in St. Louis is sought by the MPTOA of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the association, has requested distributors to insert a clause in contracts which would make triple bills prohibitive. A similar request has been sent by Mr. Wehrenberg to the Hays organization.

Dallas Film Row Structure Passes

The original four-story film building on Harwood street, Dallas, which housed Universal, United Artists and many other leading film companies for many years, will soon be remodeled into an office building due to an increasing scarcity of exchange tenants. The last two companies to move in the near future are United Artists and Universal.

Grainger Sees Corner Turned

"Fox Film Corporation has no problems, but definite tasks," James R. Grainger, vice-president in charge of distribution, told assembled sales force leaders and executives this week at the home office, in accepting a silver plaque presented on behalf of the home office and field sales organizations. Harry H. Buxbaum, branch manager of the New York exchange, made the presentation speech.

Mr. Grainger said in part: "The personnel of the sales organization is facing facts. It has no reconstruction process through which to go—we went through that some time ago." The executive paid tribute to the leadership of Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film.

"We are not unmindful of the fact that the sales organization can succeed only to the extent that exhibitors succeed," said Mr. Grainger. "There is no doubt that the economic situation in this country has rounded the corner on which we have so intently had our eyes fixed for several years. We know that good pictures, entertaining pictures, always will do business, profitable business."

Present at the meeting were William J. Kupper, western division sales manager; vice-presidents W. C. Michel, Richard Rowland, Glenn Griswold; C. E. Richardson, treasurer; Sidney Towell, comptroller; Clayton P. Sheehan, general foreign distribution manager; E. C. Grainger, eastern divisional sales manager; George A. Roberts, personnel director; Truman H. Talley, general manager of Movietone News; Jack Sichelman, assistant sales manager, and others. Mr. Kent was out of town.

CLEVELAND ZONING PACT MAY DO AS MODEL FOR OTHER SITUATIONS

Text of Agreement Drafted in Out-of-Court Settlement of Monopoly and Conspiracy Suit Filed by Independents

New Agreement Also Governs Problems of Premiums and Double Bills; Becomes Effective January 1; Runs a Year

The new zoning pact between independent exhibitors in Cleveland and Loew's Ohio Theatres, governing the activities of both in regard to zoning, admission price concessions, double featuring and other phases of theatre operation, may be used as a model for other territories where distributors and theatre owners are at odds over protection.

Adopted early in August, the Cleveland agreement will become effective on January 1 and shall terminate one year later. It was drafted in settlement, out of court, of a monopoly and conspiracy suit filed in district court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio, eastern division, by independent theatre owners of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, for whom Sam Horwitz was attorney, against Loew's and distributors, and represents one of the first protection agreements of its kind ever drafted between independents and the larger interests for the establishment of equitable and amicable protection relations between both.

Seen as Guide for Other Areas

Because of the vital part which Cleveland independents played in drafting the agreement, it is hoped by legal and other official representatives of distributors and their circuit interests to place the form in work in other territories where they have been unable to date to draft protection schedules which would be acceptable to exhibitors. In any event, attempts will be made to have the Cleveland form serve as a basis for discussions and negotiations in territories where new zoning and protection forms are needed. Also, the new agreement governs the problems of premiums, double bills and others of considerable discussions in many key centers.

In Nebraska, zoning differences between distributors and circuits and independent owners were the basis of the Youngclaus suit. At Kansas City "chaos" is the word that aptly describes the protection situation. Local exchange managers say they will not even discuss the subject with representatives of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, and all protection deals will be negotiated individually.

The uniform zoning plan sought by the Kansas City independents' association will not receive favorable consideration, the distributors have indicated, as they wish to avoid all implications of concerted action, in view of possible litigation, which is known to be contemplated by the independents in that event. Therefore the distributors have not committed themselves on whether they will grant Fox Midwest theatres the protection they ask.

Porozynski and Walter Balverski, a partnership, of Garfield Heights, Ohio, Loretta S. Sureell of Lakewood, Ohio, Windameer Theatre Co., Inc., a corporation of East Cleveland, Ohio, now or heretofore operating the theatre specified opposite the signatures of the parties or such of the foregoing executing this agreement, jointly and severally, hereinafter referred to as the Cleveland Exhibitors, parties of the first part, and Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., hereinafter referred to as Loew, now or heretofore operating the theatres specified opposite its signature, party of the second part.

WHEREAS, the Cleveland exhibitors as party plaintiff have filed in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio, eastern division, a bill in equity against Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and others, as parties defendant, alleging in said bill that the defendants in or about the year 1921 unlawfully and in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, engaged in a combination and conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate trade and commerce in motion pictures; and alleging further that said combination and conspiracy has since said time unlawfully and is now unlawfully restraining and monopolizing said interstate trade and commerce, and threatens to continue to restrain and monopolize said interstate trade and commerce, as is more fully described in said bill filed in said case, which is entitled The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, an association, et al., vs. Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., a corporation et al., and being cause Number 4103 on the docket of said court; and

WHEREAS, Loew's Ohio Theatre, Inc., by its attorneys, Mooney, Hahn, Loeser, Koeugh and Beam, and the other defendants by their respective attorneys have filed in said court their respective answers to said bill of complaint denying the conspiracy therein alleged and all acts alleged in said bill of complaint to have been committed pursuant to such alleged conspiracy, and

WHEREAS, the Cleveland exhibitors are severally engaged in the business of operating theatres principally for subsequent-run exhibition of motion pictures in Cuyahoga county, State of Ohio, and Loew is engaged in the business of operating theatres principally for first and second-run exhibitions of motion pictures in said county and state, and

WHEREAS, the Cleveland Exhibitors desire and Loew is willing, but only for the purpose of this agreement and only for the term thereof, that the length of the period of protection for the first and second-run exhibition of motion pictures heretofore customarily and usually granted the Loew Theatres against the theatres operated by the Cleveland Exhibitors has been limited as hereinafter provided, without making such limitation a precedent or standard of protection elsewhere;

Action Dismissed

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the sum of ONE DOLLAR ($1.00) and other good and valuable considerations, the mutual promises and agreements hereinafter set forth and the premises herein stated, the Cleveland Exhibitors severally and jointly and Loew agree as follows:

FIRST—(A) That the action now pending in the district court of the United States for the north district of Ohio, eastern division, entitled "The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, an association, et al., plaintiffs, versus Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., a corporation, et al., defendants (in equity No. 4103) be dismissed as against all defendants without prejudice and marked costs paid, and the parties hereto hereby consent to the entry of such order as the court shall determine is necessary or required to so dismiss said action without further notice to or action by the said parties, and the said parties hereby authorize and direct their respective attorneys to prepare and consent to the entry of such order.

(B) The Cleveland Exhibitors, jointly and severally, if individuals or partnerships for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, and if corporations for their successors and assigns, covenant and agree that they will not after the date of this agreement institute, bring or file any suits or actions whatsoever, in law or in equity or otherwise assert any claim or demand whatsoever by legal process or otherwise, against Loew, or against the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., or against the Cleveland Film Board of Trade or their respective successors, predecessors and assigns, arising out of or based upon the facts or any of them alleged in said petition.

Theatres Classified

SECOND—(A) That for the purpose of this agreement, each of the respective theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors shall be deemed to be classified upon each day when exhibiting any of the motion pictures hereinafter described in Paragraph Tenth hereof as follows:

CLASS A

Those at which for each and every person at evening performances an admission price is not less than twenty-five (25c) cents shall be charged and at which only one feature motion picture is exhibited, neither gifts nor premiums of any kind or description are given away and only one person is admitted for said admission price of not less than 25c.

CLASS B

Those at which for each and every person at evening performance an admission price of less than twenty-five (25c) cents and more than nineteen (19c) cents shall be charged and at which only one feature motion picture is exhibited, neither gifts nor premiums of any kind or description are given away and only one person is admitted for such admission price.

CLASS C

(1) Those at which two or more feature motion pictures are exhibited customarily known as "double features," and / or at which gifts or premiums of any kind or description are given away, and / or at which more than one person is admitted for the admission price of one person.

(2) Those at which for each and every person at evening performances an admission price of less than twenty (20c) cents and more than ten (10c) cents shall be charged.

CLASS D

Those at which for each and every person at evening performances an admission of ten (10c) cents or less is charged.

CLASS E

Terminal, Strand, Standard, Great Lakes, Roxy and Cameo theatres, provided such theatres for each and every person at every evening performance charge an admission price of not less than twenty-five (25c) cents and exhibit only one feature motion picture, admit only one person for said admission price of not less than 25c and do not give away gifts or premiums of any kind or description, otherwise said Class E theatres shall be deemed to be classified as Class B, Class C or Class D, as the case may be.

(B) The price of admission at the theatres specified in each of the classes in Paragraph Second (A) provided for shall be deemed for the purpose of this agreement to be the lowest actual price charged for the admission of any person to each such theatre at evening performances exclusive of any admission tax and / or of any other like tax, or charge, now and / or hereafter imposed.

(C) The term "evening performance" shall be deemed to mean any and all performances from and after 6 p. m. The term "person" shall be deemed to mean an adult person.

Classification of Runs

THIRD—That only for the purpose of this agreement the exhibitions of motion pictures shall be deemed to be classified during the term of this agreement (1) first run, (2) second run, and (3) subsequent run. A first-run exhibition shall be deemed to be the first public exhibition of a motion picture in Cuyahoga county, excepting any "road show," which shall not be deemed to be a first-run exhibition. A second-run exhibition shall be deemed to be the exhibition of a motion picture which theretofore has had only a first-run exhibition as hereinbefore defined. A subsequent-run exhibition shall be deemed to be any exhibition of a motion picture which theretofore has had first and second-run exhibition as hereinbefore defined.

FOURTH—Loew agrees that in license agreements, excepting those referred to in the next succeeding Paragraph Fifth, which Loew may enter into for the exhibition of any motion picture during the term of this agreement at its theatres or any of them, it will not demand, contract for, or require the distributor thereof to grant protection (as such term is commonly known in the motion picture industry) of more than:

(a) Thirty-five (35) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class A theatres;

TEXT OF CLEVELAND PROTECTION PACT

(b) Fifty-six (56) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class B theatres;
(c) Sixty-three (63) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class C theatres;
(d) One hundred (100) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class D theatres for its theatres contracting for a first and second-run exhibition thereof in Cuyahoga county;
Nor more than:
(e) Twenty-eight (28) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class A theatres, fifty-six (56) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class B theatres, sixty-three (63) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class C theatres, and one hundred (100) days after the conclusion of the first run against Class D theatres, if a license for only a first and not a second run of any such motion picture is granted any of its theatres.
Nor more than:
(f) Forty-two days after the conclusion of the first run against Class E theatres, if a license for a second run of any such motion picture at the Mall theatre is granted Loew, provided that the Mall theatre, in each such case for each and every person at every evening performance, charges an admission price of not less than twenty-five cents (25c) cents.
(B) In the event that in respect to any motion picture Loew contracts for or requires less than the maximum number of days' protection specified against any of the theatres in any of the classes of theatres hereinabove enumerated, then Loew agrees not to demand, require or contract for any more protection against the other theatres in said class, and the number of days' protection specified against each of the other classes of theatres shall be in respect to such motion picture, reduced by a like proportionate number of days.
(C) Whenever the subject matter of protection and/or date of availability is anywhere in this agreement mentioned or involved, the same shall be subject to the physical availability of prints and in such respect this agreement shall be deemed to be modified accordingly. Loew agrees to use its best efforts to obtain from distributors the necessary number of prints to make each motion picture exhibited by Loew available to the Cleveland exhibitors as provided in this agreement.

Individual Theatre Protection

(D) In the event that on any day or days during the term hereof the admission price for evening performances at either the Park theatre or the Granada theatre, in the City of Cleveland, shall be less than thirty (30) cents, then respective control prices specified herein for determining Class A, Class B, and Class E theatres shall be for such day or days only automatically changed and reduced by the amount the admission price during such day or days for evening performances at the Park or the Granada theatre is reduced from thirty (30) cents; provided that on such day or days the Park theatre or the Granada theatre, as the case may be, then shall not be within any of the classifications herein provided for theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors.
(E) If Loew contracts for the second or subsequent-run exhibition of any of said motion pictures at any of its theatres at which the charge for admission at evening performances is less than the admission price herein in Paragraph Second (A) specified or as such admission charge may be from time to time changed and reduced as provided in Paragraph Fourth (D) hereof for the determination of Class A theatres and / or at which two or feature motion pictures are exhibited and / or at which gifts or premiums of any kind or description are given away and / or at which more than one person is admitted for the admission price of one person, then and in that event the same classification herein made of the theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors shall be, for the purpose of this agreement, made of such particular theatre of Loew on the day or days when so exhibiting such motion picture second or subsequent run. In any such case Loew agrees not to exhibit at any such theatre on such day or days any such motion pictures prior to the date of the availability thereof for theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors in their respective classifications.
(F) Notwithstanding the definitions of a first and second-run exhibition in Paragraph Third hereof, if Loew contracts for first and second-run exhibitions of any such motion pictures at any of its theatres, Loew shall have the right to exhibit such motion picture "day and date" or otherwise before the thirty-sixth (36th) day after the conclusion of the first run thereof at any one or more or at all of its theatres which are not, at the date or dates of exhibition thereof, within any of the classifications herein provided for the theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors. If Loew contracts for only second-run exhibitions of any such motion picture at any one or more of its theatres, Loew shall have the right to exhibit such motion picture at such of its theatres as are not at such time included within the classifications herein provided for the theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors, twenty-one (21) days after the conclusion of the first run thereof; and in each such case such motion picture shall not become available to the Cleveland exhibitors until the thirty-sixth (36th) day after the conclusion of the first run thereof.
(G) Any of such motion pictures which have not been "booked" by Loew for a second run at any time prior to ten (10) days after the conclusion of the first run thereof shall be deemed available for "bookings" for subsequent runs by the Cleveland exhibitors and upon inquiry by any of the Cleveland exhibitors, Loew shall inform said Cleveland exhibitors of the fact.

CLEVELAND AGREEMENT LOWERS PROTECTION

The new Cleveland agreement governing exhibition activities in that city, signed by independent theatre owners on August 26 and thereby ending their monopoly suit against distributors and Loew's Theatres, provides for reduced first-run protection, definite theatre classification based on admission price and exhibition policy, and further provides for arbitration in cases of evasion or breach of contract.

Double features are barred from all Class A, B and E houses.

Premiums and giveaways are barred at houses in these classifications, also two-for-one admissions are not permitted.

However, elasticity is given to the agreement by the provision that any house may double-feature, give premiums, admit two for one price, etc., by changing its classification from that of A, B or E. Changes may be made as frequently as desired, except within a particular run.

First-run protection is reduced to 35 days following conclusion of the showing, providing the first-run circuit has also booked a second-run. In the event the circuit has not booked a second-run, then the picture shall be available to Class A houses 28 days after conclusion of the first-run.

Reduced protection is also provided for Class B, C and D runs.

Breach or Evasion Defined

FIFTH—It is expressly agreed that the provisions herein in Paragraph Fourth (A) contained, concerning periods of protection shall not be interpreted or be deemed to obligate Loew not to contract for the exhibition of any motion picture in Cuyahoga county for only a "first and / or second run and exclusive of any other exhibition thereof," and if Loew so contracts it shall not thereby be deemed to have breached any of the provisions of this agreement since the entire subject matter of licensing "exclusive runs" of motion pictures is not covered or intended to be covered by this agreement, neither of the parties waiving any right in such regard.
SIXTH—The Cleveland Exhibitors and Loew agree that in each license agreement entered into by them or any of them for the exhibition of any of said motion pictures at their respective theatres excepting license agreements for only a first run or a first and second run and exclusive of any other exhibition of any of such motion pictures in Cuyahoga county, there shall be incorporated therein by reference hereto or otherwise, the provisions of Paragraph Fourth (A) hereof relating to protection, together with the following provision:
"The classifications of the theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors provided for in Paragraph Fourth (A) of a certain agreement between the Cleveland Exhibitors and Loew and which determine for the theatres of the Cleveland Exhibitors in each such class the date of availability of such motion pictures, shall supersede any other provisions covering the date of availability specified in this license agreement."
SEVENTH—The Cleveland Exhibitors and Loew agree that none of them will exhibit any of such motion pictures prior to the expiration of the period of protection, if any, against any of their respective theatres specified in the classification in which any such theatre shall be placed by the provision of this agreement, and that any such exhibition shall constitute a breach or evasion of this agreement.
EIGHTH—The term of this agreement shall begin on January 1, 1933, and end on December 31, 1934.
NINTH—(A) Every claim that any of the provisions herein relating to the classification of theatres or to protection have been breached or evaded shall be settled and determined by arbitration as hereinafter provided upon the written sworn complaint of any party to this agreement that (a) the Cleveland Exhibitors or any of them have directly or indirectly evaded or attempted to evade the classification of their respective theatres provided for in Paragraph Second (A) hereof, or (b) that Loew has contracted for or required protection in excess of that specified in Paragraph Fourth (A) hereof, or that any of Loew's Theatres have directly or indirectly evaded or attempted to evade any classifications thereof, provided for in Paragraph Fourth hereof.
(B) Evasions of the provisions herein relating to the classification of theatres shall be divided into two classes as follows:

CLASS I
All evasions relating to:
(a) admission prices;
(b) the giving away of gifts or premiums;
(c) the admission of more than one person for the admission price of one; and
(d) the exhibition of only one feature motion picture at Class A, Class B or Class E theatres.

CLASS II
All evasions relating to the exhibition of more than one feature motion picture at theatres not classified as Class A, Class B or Class E theatres.

Procedure on Complaints

(C) Each such complaint shall be submitted for determination by arbitration as follows: The complainant shall notify the party claimed to have breached any such provision (hereinafter referred to as the respondent) of the name of his arbitrator, and at the same time deliver to the respondent a copy of the sworn complaint, which shall set forth the evasion or breach claimed and the grounds upon which arbitration is demanded. Within three (3) days thereafter the respondent shall, by written notice to the complainant, name the respondent's arbitrator. Failing to do so within said time, the complainant shall be entitled to name such second arbitrator. The two arbitrators so selected shall within three (3) days after the appointment of the last arbitrator so named hear, in the City of Cleveland, the complainant and the defense thereto, if any is interposed, and failing to agree upon an award within three (3) days after the termination of such hearing, the two arbitrators shall select within three (3) days a third arbitrator, and the three arbitrators so selected shall hear and determine such complaint. If the two arbitrators are unable to agree upon and so select a third arbitrator, then upon the application of either complainant or respondent upon one day's notice to the other, a Judge of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio, eastern division, shall have power to appoint such third arbitrator. In the absence of such Judge or such Judge failing to appoint a third arbitrator within three (3) days from the making of the application to such judge, such application may be withdrawn by either party making the application, and the president of the Cleveland Bar Association shall have the power to appoint such third arbitrator upon application upon one day's notice to the other party as hereinbefore provided. The third arbitrator, if appointed by a judge of the district court of the United States or by the president of the Cleveland Bar Association, shall be a person wholly disinterested in the controversy and the parties.
(D) The award of two or a majority of the arbitrators, if three are appointed, shall be deemed the award of the arbitrators, and shall be reduced to writing signed by the arbitrators agreeing thereto, and a copy thereof delivered to each party to the arbitration, and such award shall be final and binding upon all parties thereto and the parties to this agreement. The arbitrators respectively selected by the complainant and the respondent shall serve without compensation, but the compensation, if any, of the third arbitrator and expenses of any arbitration shall be paid by the unsuccessful party.

Authority of Arbitrator

(E) If more than one complaint is filed by any of the Cleveland Exhibitors arising out of the same claim of evasion or breach, then the Cleveland Exhibitors Association shall be regarded as the complainant with all the rights and privileges of a complainant so far as the procedure of arbitration hereinbefore specified is concerned, but if such complaints shall be dismissed, the expenses of the arbitration shall be borne by the Cleveland Exhibitors filing such complaint.
(F) In each such case, the arbitrators shall have, and are hereby given, authority to dismiss the complaint or to find that the provisions herein relating to the classification of theatres or to protection have been evaded or breached.
(G) Upon finding that Cleveland Exhibitor, or Loew, evaded or attempted to evade the classification of any theatre of such Cleveland Exhibitor or Loew, if at such time such theatre of Loew is classified as provided in Paragraph Fourth (A) hereof, and such evasion is of the class of evasions hereinbefore specified in Class 1, to direct and award that such theatre after a date to be fixed by the arbitrators, shall be for a first offense classified as a Class D theatre for

MPTOA, Allied Plan Conference, May Cooperate

Some manner of working arrangement between the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Association, major national exhibitor organizations, appears likely in the near future as the result of communications between M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA and W. A. Steffes, president of Allied, within the past two weeks.

Abram Myers, in a wire to Mr. Lightman on Tuesday, suggested that the meeting take place on September 20, in either Chicago or Washington, since Mr. Steffes will be available after September 17.

Commenting on Mr. Lightman's invitation for a discussion, Mr. Myers said: "Believing that informal discussion between representatives of the two organizations may be productive of good and certainly can do no harm, I am anxious that the spirit animating your proposal and our acceptance be not allowed to languish."

Conferences of the principal parties involved were originally tentatively scheduled for Tuesday of this week, designed to reach a showdown on the 5-5-5 contract situation. Allied directors, according to a wire from Mr. Steffes to Mr. Lightman, had appointed a committee to meet with a similar group representing the MPTOA on matters of mutual concern. Mr. Steffes informed Mr. Lightman that Allied seeks "common ground on which to work for the welfare of exhibitors of the country." The statement is in a measure a reply to an original letter from Mr. Lightman in which he said: "Our organization is in accord with most of your contentions, but simply uses different methods in getting results."

Mr. Lightman indicated that important, and previously arranged engagements would prevent his attendance at the proposed conference in Chicago on Tuesday, suggesting at the time a date immediately after Labor Day. The Allied committee as appointed by the directors includes Mr. Steffes, Abram F. Myers, Sidney Samuelson, H. A. Cole, Glenn A. Cross and Nathan Yamins. Allied is understood anxious to discuss the eight major problems which it has indicated as most serious to the exhibition situation today.

The proposed meeting will probably not take place before the latter part of September, since Mr. Steffes, on vacation, will not be available, although the MPTOA has signified its willingness to meet on September 6 or 7. Mr. Myers is understood inquiring among other of the Allied committee members whether they would be willing to participate in the session despite the absence of Mr. Steffes, but Mr. Myers is of the belief that the group will determine upon a postponement pending the return of the president.

Mr. Lightman has indicated his intention to communicate with independent exhibitor organizations in the event that the proposed meeting takes place.

Return to Work, Zukor Tells Chicago Exhibitors

Each exhibitor must study his own situation and get back to work, Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, declared in an address Wednesday at the Drake hotel in Chicago at a luncheon gathering of 200 exhibitors, exchangemen and newspaper representatives.

"Salvation lies in a careful analysis of his own situation by every exhibitor and a return to work," Mr. Zukor said. He also urged that the various branches of the business get together for a mutual understanding of viewpoints.

1,000 Theatres Reopened Within Past Two Months

Within the past 60 days approximately 1,000 theatres throughout the country have reopened, according to estimates of various sales executives at the home offices, Motion Picture Daily said this week. The reopenings have occurred in practically every state and sales territory in the country.

Sales chiefs have based their figures on deals for new product and negotiations for such deals at present under consideration. Two months ago, it is said, exhibitors with closed houses would not discuss new product, while many have opened negotiations within the last 30 days.

Keith Reports $233,423 Profit

B. F. Keith Corporation, a subsidiary of RKO, earned a net profit of $233,423 for the six months ended June 30. Profit from actual operation and other sources was $703,830, but this was reduced when $470,406 was deducted for depreciation and amortization.

Billie Burke Planning Permanent Home on Coast

Billie Burke, widow of the late Florenz Ziegfeld, plans an early return to New York to settle the estate of her husband, after which she will make Los Angeles her permanent home, continuing in motion pictures.

She will bring the body of the late showman on her trip to New York, where a final funeral service will be held. The body is temporarily resting at the Forest Lawn Cemetery, Glendale, Calif.

and during a period of thirty (30) days, for a second offense as a Class D theatre for and during a period of forty-five (45) days and for a third offense as a Class D theatre for and during a period of sixty (60) days.

(H) Upon finding that such evasion is of the class of evasions hereinbefore specified as Class II, to direct and award that such theatre after the date to be fixed by the arbitrators shall be for the first offense, classified as a Class D theatre for and during a period of fourteen (14) days with the right in the arbitrators because of extenuating facts and circumstances proved at the hearing and found by the arbitrators, to suspend the classification of such theatres as a Class D theatre, but for a second offense such theatre after a date to be fixed by the arbitrators shall be classified as a Class D theatre for and during a period of twenty-eight (28) days without the right in the arbitrators to suspend such classification.

Reduction of Protection

(L) Upon finding that Loew has contracted for, or required and received protection for any of its theatres in excess of that specified in Paragraph Fourth (A) hereof, to direct and award that commencing upon a date to be fixed by the arbitrators, the protection granted Loew in respect to any motion pictures deliverable to Loew for exhibition at such theatre during the succeeding thirty (30) days, shall be reduced by one-half of that which such theatre may receive under the provisions of said Paragraphs Fourth (A).

(J) Upon finding that Loew contracted for a run other than a first-run exhibition of any of such motion pictures at any of its theatres and in such case that Loew contracted for or required and received protection which prevented such motion pictures from becoming available on the thirty-sixth (36th) day after the conclusion of the first run thereof; provided that an "extended run," if any, of any such motion picture shall not be deemed to prevent such motion picture from becoming available on said thirty-sixth (36th) day; to direct and award that commencing upon a date to be fixed by the arbitrators and for a period of thirty (30) days thereafter such theatre shall not exhibit any of such motion pictures prior to thirty-six (36) days after the conclusion of the first run thereof.

TENTH—The provisions of this agreement shall apply during the term hereof to the exhibition of all feature motion pictures exhibited in Cuyahoga county by Loew on and after January 1, 1933, and for which Loew has contracted for either a first or second-run exhibition thereof.

ELEVENTH—This agreement shall become binding upon the signatories hereto when executed by Loew, and at least ninety per cent (90%) of the parties hereinabove designated as the Cleveland Exhibitors and owning or operating at least ninety per cent (90%) of the number of theatres of all the Cleveland Exhibitors named herein.

TWELFTH—The Cleveland Exhibitors jointly and severally and Loew agree that any exhibitor of motion pictures in Cuyahoga county, Ohio, not now a party to this contract, may become such, subject to all its obligations and entitled to all of its benefits, upon executing counterparts of this agreement and by delivering one thereof to Loew and the other to Samuel Horwitz, Esq.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, each of the parties executing this agreement, if an individual or a partnership has hereunto set his or their hand and seal and if a corporation has caused its corporate name to be hereunto subscribed and its corporate seal to be affixed by its proper corporate officers duly authorized the day and year first above written.

SELECTIONS

Noted by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

A cross section of national opinion on the pictures of the month, this estimate given to each of the following films is an average opinion offered by the representatives of seven organizations previewing motion pictures in Hollywood. Their unanimous judgment was reached in a series of conferences.

The groups are: General Federation of Women's Clubs; International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; National Council of Jewish Women; National Society of New England Women; California Congress of Parents and Teachers; Los Angeles Branch of Association of University Women.

CORNERED (Columbia). Tim McCoy, Noah Beery.

A timeworn story in which a pal saves his friend's life, thereby incurring eternal indebtedness. When the one is accused of shooting his sweetheart's father, the other hunts down the actual murderer. Good entertainment for young people. Family. GOOD.

CROONER (Warner Bros.). David Manners, Anne Dvorak, Claire Dodd.

Rian James, the gay hearted columnist, has written the thread of story with which this light production is woven. He presents a crooner who wins success by a mere accident, takes himself seriously and loses everything. The picture has some amusing reflections of the celebrity whose rise to fame is too sudden. This is family audience entertainment. GOOD.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP, THE (Paramount). Tallulah Bankhead, Gary Cooper, Charles Laughton.

A finely acted production with the African coast as a background. Tallulah Bankhead as Diana Sturm is the wife of the insanely jealous commander of a submarine. He accuses his wife of a misconduct of which she is not guilty. This picture has photographic interest, suspense and moments of fine drama. Its theme precludes it from the juvenile program. It is strong adult entertainment. VERY GOOD.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY (MGM). Jackie Cooper, Conrad Nagel, Lewis Stone, Lois Moran.

A thoughtful study of a serious question from the child's point of view. A scientist neglects his family for his work and loses them. His ultimate suffering and that of his children are clearly shown, as well as the latter's readjustment problems in a new environment. Jackie Cooper gives another remarkable character portrayal. An outstanding picture. Family. VERY GOOD.

DOWN TO EARTH (Fox). Will Rogers, Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich.

A timely, amusing and entertaining story of the problems of today, with Will Rogers suggesting a way out. It is wholesome entertainment for the family. GOOD.

FIRST YEAR, THE (Fox). Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell.

A refreshing and wholesome comedy drama depicting the trials and tribulations of a young couple during the first year of marriage. The story is taken from the stage play by Frank Craven and is excellently interpreted by the principal players. Family. GOOD.

GUILTY AS HELL (Paramount). Adrienne Ames, Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe.

A murder mystery in which the audience sees a murder committed and follows the police in their efforts to find the guilty person. It is for adults who enjoy this type of story. Not for children. GOOD.

HEARTS OF HUMANITY (Capitol). Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searles, Lucille La Verne, Claudia Dell.

A human interest plot with a definite appeal, built around the love of a Jewish junk dealer for the son of an Irish policeman whom he adopts when the father is killed. Fine character studies. Family. VERY GOOD.

HOLD 'EM JAIL (RKO Radio). Edna May Oliver, Wheeler-Woolsey and Roscoe Ates.

It is a very clever burlesque of prison football and prison methods that provides wholesome and amusing nonsensical entertainment for the whole family. The football game alone is well worth seeing. VERY GOOD.

LAST MILE, THE (World Wide). Howard Phillips, George Stone, Preston Foster, Daniel Haynes.

This adaptation of the bitter stage drama by John Wexley is grim and tragic material for entertainment but worth seeing for the moving portrayals given by an able cast and as a study of a major social problem. The first act of the stage play, it will be recalled, was taken from a manuscript written by a condemned man in a Texas penitentiary. It is adult fare and a powerful study of capital punishment as seen through the minds of condemned prisoners. EXCELLENT.

LOST REMBRANDT, THE (Twickenham Series).

A Sherlock Holmes story of the recovery of a painting that had been stolen from the Louvre, filmed in the typically British manner. Clean, good entertainment. Family. VERY GOOD.

LOVE ME TONIGHT (Paramount). Maurice Chevalier, Jeannette McDonald, Charles Ruggles, Charles Butterworth.

A pleasant fantasy of a tailor who falls in love with a princess that offers charming and amusing entertainment. Tuneful lyrics, an excellent cast, and a director with an original style, have combined to make a picture that is outstanding in its entertainment value. Adults and young adults. Not for children. VERY GOOD.

MICHE (Paramount). A comedy farce in French. Suzy Vernon, Robert Burnier, Marguerite Moreno.

This is a light story, finely entertaining, sprinkled with laughter and more important than the average farce because of its bright dialogue. Its theme places it in the class of strictly adult entertainment. GOOD.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE (United Artists). Douglas Fairbanks, William Farnum, Earle Brown, Marie Alba.

A refreshing and imaginative comedy in which an ingenious New Yorker transforms a lonely island in the South Seas into a modern habitation, with only his wit and knowledge of woodcraft to aid him. Scenes are authentic and beautifully photographed, the comedy is clean and unexpected and the whole is filled with swift movement, unhampered by an overuse of dialogue. Highly recommended for all ages. EXCELLENT.

MOVIE CRAZY (Paramount). Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings, Kenneth Thomson, Sidney Jarvis.

Harold Lloyd has given us one of the best screen comedies that we have seen for a long time. As a film-enamoured youth he goes from a small midwest town to Hollywood. From the moment he arrives the fun begins. Outstanding entertainment for the family. EXCELLENT.

NIGHT CLUB LADY, THE (Columbia). Adolphe Menjou, Mayo Methot, Skeets Gallagher.

An adaptation of the Anthony Abbott mystery with the suspense built to a climax as Thatcher Colt, the clever detective, works out the unexpected solution. A thoroughly enjoyable and entertaining mystery story. Mature audience. VERY GOOD.

NIGHT MAYOR (Columbia). Lee Tracy, Evalyn Knapp, Ted McCoy.

A daring and amusing skit on the antics of a chief executive, famous for his wisecracks and reputation as play boy. In this picture, the popular mayor is about to be investigated by the governor. The tabloids howl while the city's elected leader takes Doree Dawn to another party. The tailor is an important person in the cast and contributes to the general hilarity. This film offers much amusement and is obvious in its references. Family. GOOD.

OKAY AMERICA (Universal). Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan, Walter Catlett, Alan Dinehart, Louis Calhern.

A broadcasting columnist in contact with the underworld learns that a wealthy girl is held for ransom. The case is of nationwide importance and is finally taken to the president by the young columnist. In the final solution the boy's life is sacrificed. It is a powerful and dramatic production with a theme of current interest that is delicately handled. Very satisfactory entertainment for adults and juniors. VERY GOOD.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME (Universal). Practically all the national reviewing groups have listed this screened story of the popular comedy as "grand entertainment." It is a satire on the motion picture industry itself, with much good humored fun and a great deal of vulgarity left out. Its subleties will be above the heads of small children but it can be booked as a family audience picture which will be hilariously entertaining. EXCELLENT.

PHANTOM EXPRESS, THE (Majestic). William Collier, Jr., Sally Blane.

This railroad story tells of a merger forced by unfair means. The plot is in no way original but the material is clean and wholesome and entirely simple. For the average family audience. GOOD.

SCRAPPY (Columbia). Bob Steele, Noah Beery, Shirley Grey.

A Western adventure dealing with the friendship of an unknown cowboy and the unfailing sheriff. Both love the same girl, making the plot as matter of fact as ninety-seven percent of all Westerns. Good photography and the freedom from all suggestiveness make this picture acceptable entertainment for young people. Family. GOOD.

SPEAK EASILY (MGM). Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante, Ruth Selwyn, Thelma Todd.

This is Clarence Budington Kelland's recent

story of the lonely and academically minded young college professor who goes to New York to get a better understanding of the world and its people. Under the mistaken impression that he has plenty of money, and wishing to help out a group of stranded actors, he tries to put a poor stage show on its feet. His simplicity and his good intentions bring him plenty of trouble but everything ends happily. It is hilarious comedy marred by one doubtful scene, but otherwise thoroughly enjoyable. Adults and young adults. Good.

SEVENTY THOUSAND WITNESSES (Paramount). Philip Holmes, Charles Ruggels, Lew Cody.

A thrilling football story with a strong cast in which a college hero suffers foul play and dies in the game. The picture has, perhaps, too much of bootlegging and speakeasy background, and it places too much emphasis upon the gambling between great colleges on their sports events. Nevertheless, the story moves along with quick action and sustained interest. It is free of objectionable detail and suitable for family audiences. Good.

TEXAS BUDDIES (World Wide). Nancy Drexel, Frances McDonald, Bob Steele.

This Western includes the rescue of an airplane carrying a payroll, a charming woman passenger and a hidden gold mine, all of which are better than average ingredients for the story of the plains. Family. Good.

TIGER SHARK (Warner Bros.). Edward G. Robinson, Zita Johann, Richard Arlen.

A notably fine performance is given by Mr. Robinson in this story of the life of a fisherman that is original both in its theme and treatment. There are unusually remarkable views of deep sea fishing and its dangers are clearly shown. Adults and young adults. Very Good.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD (Warner Bros.). Constance Bennett, Allen Vincent Mowbray, Neil Hamilton, Gavin Gordon.

A wealthy pleasure-loving girl meets a young lawyer and an idealist and attempts to adjust her station in life to his. When her brother kills the man who he thinks has compromised her, she sacrifices herself for those she loves. This is society drama in its most melodramatic form but has audience interest, and is free from objectionable detail. Adults. Very Good.

OUTSTANDING SHORT SUBJECTS

Three short subjects of exceptional interest because of their unusual subject material are the following, produced and distributed by Beverly Hills Productions, Inc. All furnish splendid entertainment for all ages:

Nuri. The wise old family elephant, Nuri, interprets the every-day life of India. The excellent narration is by Gayne Whitman.

Satan's Playground. Extraordinary views of Death Valley where, according to legend, the devil has taken his last stand. There are amazing pictures of the animal life of the desert and pathetic ones of the Indians, who somehow manage to live there.

Man Eater. A charming story of two friends who are divers. They love the sea and are devoted to each other even to the point of sacrifice. The under-sea photography is noteworthy.

Magic Carpet Series

All of the following in this most commendable travel series are family entertainment:

Belles of Bali. View of the temples and the dancing girls on the Island of Java.

Broadway by Day. Well chosen views of New York City.

Byways of France. The lovely countryside of France.

Desert Tripoli. Exceptional photography makes this an outstanding short.

Here Comes the Circus. A human interest touch is added to the arrival in town of the circus with its trucks, its tents and accompanying parade.

Incredible India. An intriguing picture for the most hardened picture-goer. It reveals, among other things, the secret of the elephant's carrying powers.

E. W. Newman Travel Talks (Vitaphone). Family.

Beauty Spots of the World. A few of the world's lovely places have been selected for audience enjoyment—Amalfi, the Acropolis, Venice, Delhi, Peking, the Andes and Japan. Dr. Newman's comments are excellent.

Transportation of the World. Methods of passenger and freight transportation used in China, Venice, Belgium, Angkor, Java, the Ganges, Ceylon and Zululand are shown, and interesting comments made concerning them.

Wonder Spots of the World. An excellent choice of subjects is offered—Victoria Falls, the Pyramids, Pisa, Great Wall of China, Bangkok, Fujiyama Cambodia in Angkor and the Taj Mahal.

Dancing Around the World. Folk dances in Spain, Italy, Sweden, Bavaria, Java and of the Zulus in Africa. Interesting and educational.

Babe of Mine (Vitaphone). A day in the life of a baby that is made entertaining because of the sweetness and naturalness of this baby. (Family.)

The Ball Game (RKO Pathe). The Big Bugs and the Little Bugs have an exciting game. Enjoyable. (Family.)

Believe It or Not (Vitaphone). Mr. Ripley shows some unusual things to be seen in and about New York City and explains them. Interesting family entertainment.

Bosko at the Beach (Vitaphone). A Loony Tune showing Bosko and his dog on a beach party. The dog in a series of difficult and amusing attempts rescues a drowning kitten. (Family.)

Bosko's Store (Vitaphone). Bosko owns a store and has a happy time until the kitten starts trouble. (Family.)

Bring 'Em Back Half Shot (RKO Pathe). A satire on "Bring 'Em Back Alive" is offered in this clever cartoon. One of the Aesop's Fable Series. (Family.)

Day Nurse (Universal). A policeman rabbit is asked by a nurse to mind her baby. (Family.)

Evolution (Ideal). An educational subject in three reels that presents some scientific theories regarding the origin and development of life. The film has been made with the cooperation of the American Museum of Natural History and of the curator of the New York Zoo, Dr. Ditmars. It is interesting and entertaining. (Family.)

Gardens of the Caribbean (MGM). A Fitzpatrick travelogue. Splendid photography and interesting dialogue. (Family.)

Hey, Hey, Westerner (Vitaphone). A Technicolor musical revue. A playboy forced to reform in order to inherit his father's fortune, succeeds despite the efforts of two wily and conniving lawyers. (Family.)

Ma's Pride and Joy (Paramount). A young radio singer substitutes for a temperamental star and becomes an immediate success. Donald Novis is the radio favorite and the several songs he sings are well worth hearing. (Family.)

Mickey Mouse Cartoons.

Mickey's Whoopee Party (United Artists). While Minnie plays the piano, Mickey acts as host to all the animals at a barnyard dance. Amusing and entertaining. (Family.)

Trader Mickey (United Artists). Mickey as a miniature Trader Horn, arrives with his dog on a cannibal island. His music sets all the cannibals dancing and he escapes unharmed. Amusing. (Family.)

Mickey's Busy Day (RKO Radio). Mickey himself and his gang work to win a prize offered for the best kept yard. (Family.)

New England Sunsets (Paramount). Interesting and beautiful views of New England pastoral scenes. (Family.)

Romance Sentimentale. A French picture by Serge Eisenstein. A series of unique and beautiful photographic studies accompanied by interpretative music. (Family.)

Romantic Argentina (MGM). A Fitzpatrick travelogue. Picturesque scenes in the city and rural life of Argentina. (Family.)

Scrappy Minds the Baby (Columbia). One of the Scrappy cartoon series in which this amusing character finds that minding a baby is not easy. (Family.)

Screen Snapshots (Columbia). An excellent short subject depicting a cowboy rodeo on Hoot Gibson's ranch. (Family.)

Sea Spiders (Paramount). An interesting study of pearl divers and their dangerous trade. (Family.)

Singapore (RKO Pathe). The Vagabond Adventurer shows scenes in this famous port. Comments by Ward Wilson. (Family.)

The Transatlantic Murder Mystery (Vitaphone). Professor Crabtree helps to solve a jewel robbery and murder and makes possible the capture of the guilty criminal. A well developed short subject. (Adults.)

War in China (Educational). Scenes from the recent war areas in China (Family.)

The Wild Goose Chase (RKO Radio). An Aesop Fable, in which the characters go after a pot of gold at the end of a rainbow. (Family.)

Seeing the U. S. A. by States (Motion Picture Classics). A fine series of two-reel studies of the individual states showing, photographically, their historic background, natural beauties and current commercial development. Synchronized with a fine musical score. In the series, No. 1 is Georgia; No. 2, Maryland. (Family.)

Belgian Catholics Plan Better Films Campaign

Catholics of Belgium plan a campaign for the production and exhibition of clean motion pictures, it was announced recently by Joseph Cardinal Van Roey at a Brussels conference attended by Minister of Labor and Industry Heyman and Minister of State Theunis.

The campaign, according to the Cardinal, will seek to have all theatres modernized to permit the showing of talking motion pictures. The present Catholic Film Centrale controls about 200 of the 1,800 cinema theatres in Belgium, but most of the 200 are not equipped for talking films.

LAST FRONTIER

RKO Radio PICTURES

Produced by
VAN BEUREN CORPORATION

Released Sept. 2 when Young America is taking its last fling at vacation . . . just before they sink their noses in the history books.

Men of daring cleave the savage West in the most dramatic of all the Indian campaigns, culminating in Custer's Last Stand. Thousands of Indians, herds of buffalo, wagon trains weaving their snake-like trail toward the Golden Gate. Historic characters re-live the blazing pioneer days.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Thirteen Women

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Getting the best results from this picture will demand expert showmanship. Primarily it is morbid, dealing with a woman (Myrna Loy) who plots diabolic revenge upon a group of women who she believes gave her a shabby deal when they were all students at a girls' academy.

She uses the occult, through a series of horoscopes supposedly sent to the women by a mystic, but which she has prepared—depending upon the power of suggestion for them to fulfill the dire prophecies. Almost before the picture is under way, there are three tragedies: one is a drop from a circus trapeze; another a murder, for which the woman committing it on the suggestion of her horoscope is sentenced to prison; the third, under the same medium, a suicide. This is followed by the death of the seer, himself, an event that he has predicted in some of the letters.

After that introduction, the plot shifts to Miss Loy's attempted revenge on the child of the woman whom she holds as the ringleader (Irene Dunne), its frustration by a smart detective and her own subsequent death.

How the average audience will receive the picture will depend upon the particular premise laid down by the individual showmen, who understand the likes and dislikes of their own patrons. In many cases, the theme may seem much too gruesome. Consequently, it would appear that the best way of approaching the picture to create interest would be to concentrate attention on Myrna Loy. Even though Irene Dunne and Cortez will be billed as the headliners, the picture is almost entirely Myrna Loy. She does a powerful job, with a difficult role, one that will win her no sympathy, but does show her as a villainess whom your audience will want to hiss. Playing her up big and also featuring Dunne and Cortez, using the remaining known names in the cast in support undoubtedly will carry weight.

Second to the personality angle, smart showmen will want to play on the intense interest that there is in fortune-telling. Giving away horoscopes will stimulate a lot of curiosity, and if you can arrange to spot a crystal-gazer or horoscope artist in your foyer to give free readings, that attraction should lure a number of women.

Every effort should be made to get as big as possible an audience in the theatre for the first showings, with a view to making their word-of-mouth advertising help subsequent performances. The idea of a special matinee for women only, with a lecture, if possible, by some well known mystic, should be worth an attempt. If he wants to point out the fact that any kind of fortune telling should not be taken too seriously by all means let him do so. But in your advertising it would not be wise to try to point out that this is a moral lesson.

Finally, the picture is absolutely adult entertainment and its greatest appeal will probably be to the feminine contingent. It's far too strong for children and juveniles. More than the usual amount of care should be taken in building up the supporting program, featuring funny short subjects that will provide a contrast. Additionally, if the picture is booked for a lengthy run, it will be wise to have some special attractions for the last couple of days.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Executive producer, David O. Selznick. Directed by George Archainbaud. From the novel by Tiffany Thayer. Screen play by Bartlett Cormack. Art director, Carroll Clark. Cameraman, Leo Tover. Sound recorder, Hugh MacDowell. Film editor, Buddy Kimball. Assistant directors, Tommy Atkins and Doran Cox. Release date, September 2, 1932. The Night Club Lady

Murder Mystery

Two distinct lines of surprise can be promised the patrons in drawing their attention and interest to this production. One is the agency that brings death to the two individuals. The other is the characterization by Adolphe Menjou. It is difficult to think of the debonaire, romantic drawing room Menjou as an analytically-minded police commissioner. Nevertheless, with a touch of the whimsical while maintaining the suave correctness of the roles that first brought him stardom, he carries into this picture a portrayal that is convincing, crisp and likable, possibly even more so than as the managing editor in "Front Page."

Miss Mayo Methot as the night club hostess does a good job but the name likely will not be very well known to the community.

The night club owner is warned several times that her death hour is near, and death does come even while the commissioner has his operatives surrounding her in her apartment. He establishes the fact that the half dozen servants and associates involved are all crooks of varying hues of crime, whom she has moulded to her purposes by blackmail. As for the solution, to present that in these lines would be to destroy the exhibitor's first interest in the picture.

Skeets Gallagher, as the commissioner's friend who is fond of his cups, provides the comedy touch.

The subject matter scarcely makes advisable an appeal to juvenile attendance. It should be spotted away from children's days.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Irving Cummings. Story by Anthony Abbot. Adaptation and dialogue by Robert Riskin. Cameraman, Teddy Tetzlaff. Sound, George Cooper. Release date, August 27, 1932. Running time, 68 minutes.

They Call It Sin

(First National)

Romantic Drama

Because the title of this picture sounds lurid, showmen who will play it will find it necessary, in the majority of cases, to tackle their interest-creating campaign from some new angles. While the story of mixed-up romance is generally clean, the impression which the title will naturally convey is one that indicates sex and a story of passion, to which great numbers of fans already have turned a cold shoulder.

Here's an outline of the story. Though Jimmy Decker is engaged to his boss' daughter, he goes West and falls in love with a small-town church organist, Marion Cullen. Marion's father and mother, people of the old school, object to her new friend. Marion leaves home and comes to New York only to learn the real facts about Jimmy. Then she goes on her own, gets a job with a theatrical producer, turns down his advances. Jimmy and his friend, Dr. Travers, are still anxious for her welfare. Travers, going to Humphries' apartment to have a showdown with him, sees the producer fall from a balcony, a fall that proves fatal. The girl is suspected of having caused the tragedy, but Travers gets a dying confession from Humphries and then marries the girl himself.

The picture is well put together and well acted, which suggests that the best approach would be through personalities. Patrons have seen Loretta Young in previous pictures and she already has established herself as one of Hollywood's most promising young stars. In this picture, she undoubtedly has done the best work of her career. In addition to hers, the names of George Brent and David Manners carry an appeal that will be of definite value in interesting the younger people in your audiences. Likewise Una Merkel is making definite headway as a comedienne and she is directly responsible for the many laughs that crop out in the story. The entire story centers about that quartet and Louis Calhern, with the rest of the cast effective in support.

than the ordinary program offering and every effort should be exerted to play down the impression of the title and to build up an audience interest on the strength of the cast and the cleanliness of the story, as there is nothing in it that would cause any one to voice any objections.

While there is little in it that will be of interest to children under the teen age, there is enough to please the appetites of the young folk as well as the most mature.

Straight advertising will have to carry the main burden of your build-up campaign inasmuch as there is hardly anything that will suggest unusual exploitation. It might not be a bad idea to capitalize on the thought of the title by telling your patrons that it is entirely misappropriate and giving your word that those who see it will be delightfully surprised.

Sell romance, with a little drama plus a brand of comedy that is sure to provoke plenty of laughs.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Based on the novel by Alberta Stedman Eagan. Screen play by Lille Hayward and Howard J. Green. Directed by Thornton Freeland. Photographed by James Van Trees. Release date, November 12, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

The Green Spot Mystery

Melodrama

This feature picture is a new version of a chapter play recently made by Universal's British company under the title of "Lloyd of the C. I. D.," and therefore lacks nothing of thrills and action. It has all the ingredients of the serial—master criminal, brilliant young detective, abducted maiden, secret panels, time bombs, poisoned darts, and a priceless ornament stolen from the tomb of King Tutankhamen.

The complexity of its action and the rapid succession of hair-lifting situations make it an acceptable meal for those who like their screen fare plain and plenty. Play up the mysteries that are all incidental to the plot. Who is the green spot murderer? Who is the Manor Ghost? Then the curious may be interested to see an English exposition of the methods of Scotland Yard (misleading as they may be).—Charman, London.

A Passport to Hell

(Fox)

Drama

Stern drama of unrelenting persecution of a misunderstood woman is presented in this production, in which deportation places her against an African jungle background. Little effort is made to give comedy relief to the theme, which indeed does not call for it.

The cast abounds with names which should be known to the community. Heading the list of characters are Elissa Landi and Paul Lukas, but there are also Warner Oland, Alexander Kirkland, Donald Crisp, Earle Foxe and Yola d'Avril, though the roles of the three last-named are not sufficiently important to merit considerable play.

The extent to which the title is to be emblazoned upon the theatreman's paper should be determined by his knowledge of his community's reactions to picture names of this kind.

The story opens with the suicide of a Briton in the rooms of Myra in British West Africa, a situation which results in her being deported to the adjoining German colony. The son (Kirkland) of the commanding officer (Oland) befriends her and she agrees to become his bride when the c. o. threatens to banish her. The father sends him back to his jungle post in the hope that her loneliness will break up the match. While he is away, Kurt (Lukas) appears, from a military engineering job. Myra falls in love with him. Sergeant Snyder (Crisp), a British spy, tries to win her help in obtaining a map. She refuses, but her husband hears his overtures. When she sails (to give him a chance at a career) he misunderstands and kills himself.

That gist of the story will serve as a guide to the handling of the exhibitor's campaign.

Neither the theme nor the carrying out of it lends itself to an appeal to juvenile attendance.—Rovelstad, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Story by Harry Hervey. Continuity by Bradley King. Dialogue by Leon Gordon. Cameraman, John Seitz. Sound, A. L. Von Kirbach. Release date, August 14, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

The Sniper

(Amkino)

War Drama

The flair for propaganda in Soviet productions throws confusion into the orderly development of a picture which runs most of its length as a frank pictorial display of the sniper and trench warfare of the world conflict of eighteen years ago. In the deliberate analytical style of Russian picture-making the schools for sniping are studied, as well as the practical results on the field. There is also all the grim reality that is Russian.

The picture might well close with the desertion of the Russian troops under the call of bolshevism. But then comes more footage to show the industrial impetus of the new movement. Finally, without clear connection, the industrialists go into battle when a border sentinel is picked off by a sniper, and the private, now industrial chief, kills his former captain (of the old czarist school) in a manhunt that for its apparent spirit of cold revenge seems to undo the previous preachment for honor in peace. To the audience that is peculiar to the Cameo Theatre in New York any such divergence of thought was in no sense deleterious to the production, however, to judge from the applauding.

The superimposed English titles were good translations and kept the story connected for those unfamiliar with the Russian.—Rovelstad, New York.

Good Comedy

Jimmy Gleason, with his tough mannerisms and goodhearted actions, is always appealing, and in this case he is no less so than usual. A telephone lineman, he discovers a small boy who has run away from successive beatings at a poor farm, and "kidnaps" him. His attempts to give the youngster a much needed bath are amusing, as are his efforts to teach the lad a prayer he has himself forgotten. When the poor farm owner comes in pursuit Gleason and his girl pretend the boy has smallpox and the day is saved. A well rounded comedy, with Gleason enjoyable.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Evolution

(Ideal)

Interesting

Generally interesting, in a measure diverting, is this long short subject, dealing in a not too heavily scientific manner with the origin and development of the earth and its living occupants, according to latest theory. Instructive, the subject is not cumbersome, holds the attention well. Three short reels picture the planetary development of the earth, the formation of mountain, river and prehistoric animal forms and lastly the development of man, illuminated with narrative by Allyn Garrett, supervisor and director of the film. Models of prehistoric monsters, live animal shots, done with the cooperation of Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Gardens, contribute much to the diversion and value of the subject. An appealing short.—Running time, 28 minutes.

Pleasing Sennett Comedy

Forrester Harvey and Matt McHugh, a pair of nutty detectives, "formerly of Scotland Yard," assign themselves to protect a famous bad luck jeyel bought by Daphne Pollard. A combined butler-mystic, Walter Long, is trying to restore it to the Indian idol from which it was stolen. In their well timed English accent, Harvey and McHugh get over a lot of laugh jerking dialogue, but the thrill of the picture is when the four leads are up in an airplane driven by a gorilla. Plenty of hair-raising actions are heightened by the comedy. This is followed by a chase through crowded streets with the two detectives in the sidecar of a motorcycle driven by the same gorilla. The finale is a surprise, as the camera whirls to a radio broadcasting station and it is revealed the Harvey and McHugh are only telling their story over the air. It has plenty of stuff that should please both adults and children. Running time, 22 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Ball Game

(RKO Pathe)

Lots of Fun

The Big Bugs and the Little Bugs engage in a championship battle of the diamond, and what a game it is. When the caterpillar, "in the hot box," separates into a number of scampering baserunners and reassembles himself on the base, it's tough enough. But it's simply too much when the big beetle spreads his wings and reveals a dozen feelers brandishing bats. The pitcher summons an army of his confreres and they bombard the batter. He hits one, but the Little Bugs come back and he's put out—literally and totally. It's an Aesop's Fable, and it's good.—Running time, 5½ minutes.

Publix and MGM Will Increase Use Of Sniping Space

Publix has decided on a wider use of paper in outdoor sniping, as a result of a test conducted at the Brooklyn Paramount last week. Four-sheets were used and these will be supplanted by six-sheets.

M-G-M is also concentrating on the use of sniping for its outdoor advertising. Billy Ferguson, in charge of M-G-M exploitation, has sent five crews throughout the metropolitan New York district and outlying sections to advertise "Strange Interlude," which opened at the Astor on Broadway Wednesday.

Kansas City Finds Boards Helpful on Occasions

There is no consistent use of billboards in the Kansas City territory. The majority opinion is that billboards are effective occasionally and for only certain types of pictures.

L. M. Garman, manager, Pantages Theatre (independent): "They are a valuable asset if the paper is salable. Deluxe theatres should make wide use of billboards, especially illuminated stands."

John McManus, manager, Loew's Midland: Makes consistent use of billboards to advertise a cut-price parking tieup, 20 8-sheets being used for this purpose.

Lawrence Lehman, manager, RKO Mainstreet: Says he uses them six times a year.

Irwin Dubinsky, assistant general manager, Publix-Dubinsky Theatres (in about 15 towns): "Billboards recently have lost their pull because of the great diversity of products advertised." However, he uses billboards several times a year.

Bernard Joffee, manager, Fox Uptown Theatre: Uses 24's once every six weeks. Uses 25 stands in Kansas City.

FAN WRITERS MAY ORGANIZE

Western representatives of fan magazines and writers met in Hollywood Tuesday to discuss the possibilities of what could be accomplished if they organized. More cooperation between studios and fan magazine writers is the main objective. Writers say they want to present Hollywood and film people in print in a dignified manner. Walter Ramsey, western editor for "Modern Screen," was appointed temporary chairman, and he will appoint a board of directors which will start organization machinery in motion immediately.

Academy Begins Credit Record File for Writers

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, on the Coast, has announced the establishment of a permanent registry of credits for motion picture writers as part of the administration of the code of practice governing relations between writers and producers.

Writers who have contributed to a screen story but have received no credit on the screen will be entitled to register a certified record of their work for reference to prospective employers. A simple card form has been prepared, on which the writer may identify himself and the work he has done. Space is provided for confirmation of the information by the producer.

Mexico City's Exhibitors Lose Fear of Strikes

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Repetition of action similar to that of the employees' strike of last spring which kept dark for a month one first line Mexico City theatre and 17 neighborhood houses is deemed unlikely by Mexico City exhibitors, who base their hope upon three decisions of the federal board of conciliation and arbitration rendered in recent capital-labor conflicts. All these decisions were in favor of the employers. The cases in point were the strike of street car motormen and conductors, that of groups of workers in the refining plants of the American Smelting & Refining Company, and that of workers of the Imperial Oil Company.

As was the case with the disgruntled theatre employees last spring, these walkouts were inspired when the companies were obliged to cut personnel and salaries. These three companies fared much better than did the exhibitors. The board's decisions absolved them from paying the strikers full salaries during the strike period. Some exhibitors in Mexico are of the opinion that certain elements of the employees were addicted to striking because the new federal labor law provides that if employers are found to be in the wrong in conflicts which result in strikes they must pay the strikers full wages during the time they are out.

The cinema strike last spring was an expensive one for the exhibitors. The strikers won their contention that business was not as bad as the exhibitors asserted. That victory for the strikers meant the exhibitors had to pay them for their month's lay-off. That payment and loss of business during the time of the strike put the exhibitors in the red to the extent of about $65,000, it is estimated. Exhibitors report, however, that they are getting along nicely with their help now and that it is not too optimistic to assert that such a satisfactory condition will be permanent. Satisfactory effects of the new attitude toward strikes are being felt not only in Mexico City but throughout the Republic, it is said.

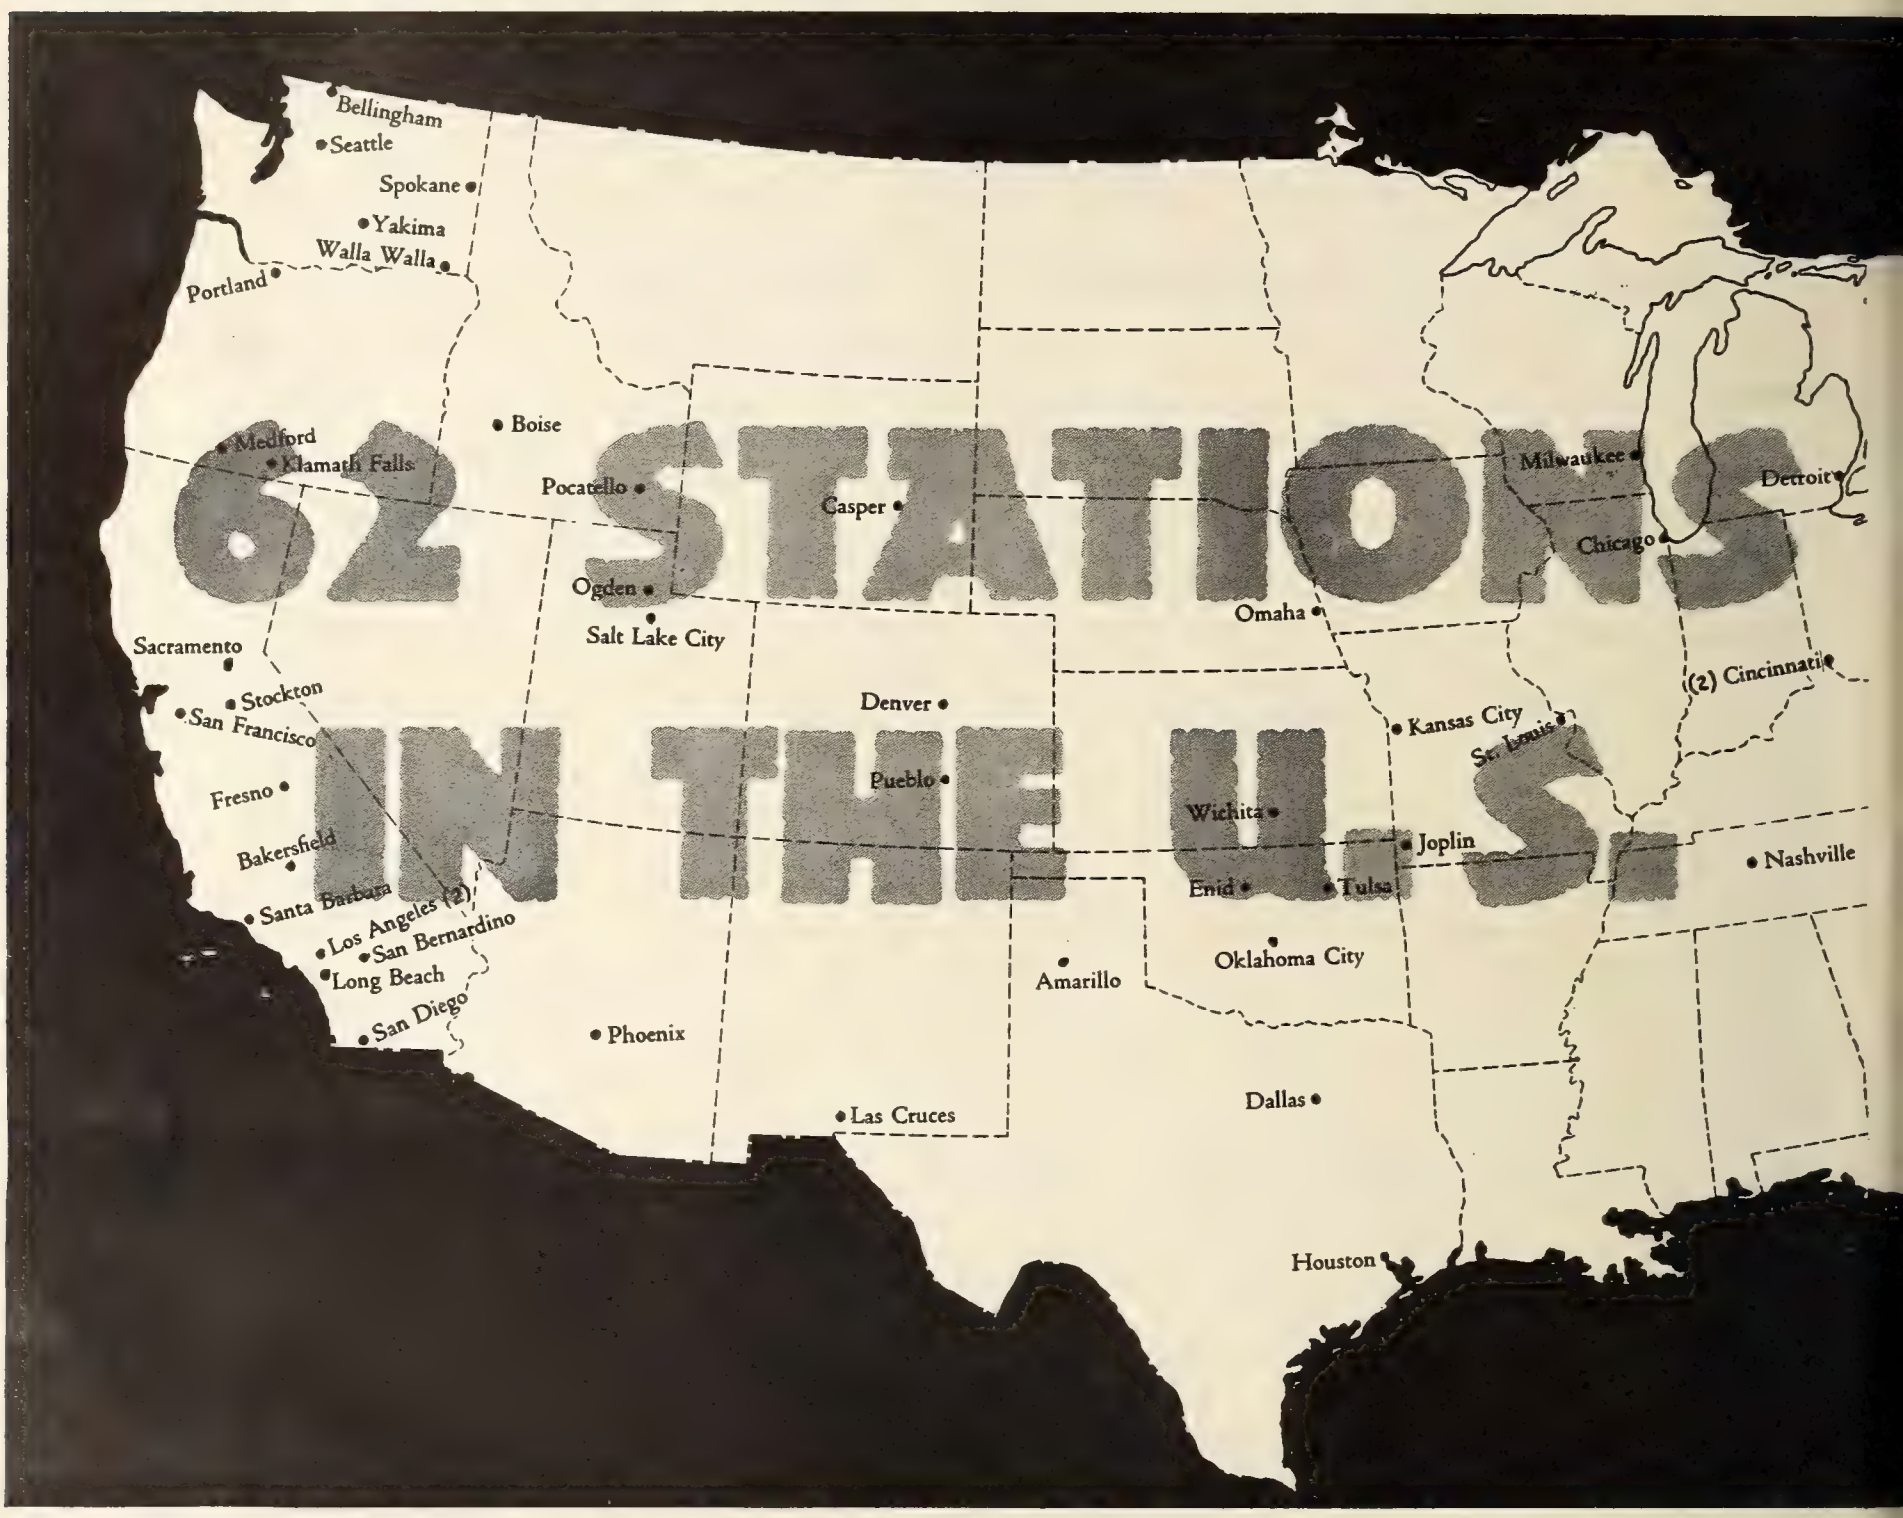
THEATRE RECEIPTS



The total of theatre receipts from 108 houses in 20 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended August 27, 1932, showed an increase of $95,587 over the preceding calendar week, ended August 20. Grosses reached an aggregate of $1,473,927 during the more recent week, which compares with $1,378,340 for the previous period. No new high individual figures were established during the later week, while six new low records were recorded. This compares with no new "highs" and five new "lows" for the preceding week.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 141.—(A) Does anyone know what the thing we call electricity is? (B) Steam loses its pressure by condensation or by expanding. Explain just in what way electricity loses its pressure. (C) Tell us what polarity is. (D) Would the effect be the same were you to connect your projection light source directly across the poles of the generator, or across the wires connected to the generator poles, but some distance from them?

Answer to Question No. 133

Bluebook School Question No. 133 was: "(A) What effect has increase in curvature of a mirror such as is used in connection with reflector type arc lamps? (B) Is there much loss through absorption when light is passed through clear, colorless glass of good grade? (C) Why is it impossible to focus a condenser beam to a point? What is a plano-meniscus lens, and what would be its effect upon light passed through it?"

The following made satisfactory answers (except that several were rather sketchy in their answer to Section C—look the published answer over carefully and see how much some of you missed):

S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, S. G. Williams, Tom Turk, J. Abrozzo, T. Van Vaulkenburg, H. B. Coates, D. L. Darrell, K. L. Knight, Bill Doe, A. Wells, D. L. Sampson, J. B. Landry, C. Peters, J. G. Evans, T. O. Thumb, F. B. Gamble, Lon Peters, G. Tinlin and L. Davis, M. Y. Thompson and D. O. Childres, A. Breaston, D. Holler, J. Wentworth and W. Sellers, B. H. Thomas, T. L. Danby, M. C. Itt, T. Garling, T. R. Peters and S. Peters, F. L. Langdon, P. T. Andrews and T. Blair, J. Williams, T. F. Brown and F. T. Gurbey, J. Cermak and G. Fairmann, J. G. Gates, D. Warren, F. Tinlow, G. Adams and B. Little, D. Goldberg, H. Love and J. Williams, L. D. Richards, F. F. Franks, A. L. Patry and D. M. Devoy, A. Wells, T. L. May and M. Bolles, A. Zerach, F. C. Hagmyer, H. B. Edwards, D. Mason, T. Davis and L. Lambert, W. Broadbent, D. L. Tinloew, G. Deckson, D. Lode and R. Micaels, P. H. Bondom, N. L. Daniels, D. L. Sinklow and B. Burt, L. H. Pickard, G. Daniels, M. D. Dove, C. Tamper, M. L. Kindrew, P. D. Thompson, R. Rathburn, A. Jones, R. Singleton, A. Sidelburg, C. Ray and T. Taylor, P. Jackson and B. Diglah, P. L. Toeping, D. Manuels,C. Tamper and L. Rond, S. T. Jones, H. B. Coates, L. Garling, R. J. Rinker and T. Haddon, D. Anderson, L. R. Timson and B. Mitchel, F. Ferguson, B. Davidson, A. Gibson, R. L. Davidson, G. T. Stanhope, P. K. Rontor and D. L. Simmons, T. Lavenburgh, H. Sicmann, D. M. Tollman, L. C. Abernathy and S. T. Jones.

Slowly the list of correct answers (or at least answers which are acceptably correct) grows, showing that the Bluebook School fans are studying more carefully and to better purpose. One Chicago projectionist appends this note to his answer this week: "Dear Rich: I have followed the School a long while now and can honestly say it has improved my work very much; also, it worked out to get me a much better job than I had. I say it has improved my work for the reason that through better basic understanding obtained through study of the various questions, I can handle the equipment very decidedly better and get better results from it. I therefore feel that some expression of my appreciation is due to you and the Motion Picture Herald, through which your work is carried on."

We will listen first to B. H. Thomas, who sets forth the answer to Section A perhaps best. He says: "Increase in curvature of a mirror such as is used with low intensity lamps would mean that focal length of the mirror would be reduced, that spherical aberration would be increased, that the distance of the light source from the mirror would be reduced, and that when the light source is in correct position the distance from mirror to aperture would be less. To increase the latter it would be necessary to reduce the distance of the light source from the mirror, which would overheat the mirror and in general not work at all well."

I believe S. G. Williams answers Section B best. He says: "This is best answered by the late Dr. Hermann Kellner of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company (Page 145, Vol. 1, Bluebook of Projection). He says: 'The loss by absorption depends on the nature of the glass and the thickness of the lenses. Good Crown glass will not absorb more than 0.5 to 1 per cent. per centimeter thickness, while good Flint glass of 1.61 refractive index will run a little higher, from 1 to 1.5 per cent per centimeter. The lighter varieties of flint glass, of indices between 1.54 and 1.61, have absorptions between these limits, while the absorption of poor glasses run as high as 3 and 4 per cent per centimeter.' "

I have consulted optics authorities and find the figures here quoted from the Bluebook still are official.

As to Section C, I think we will let Evans and Rau answer. They say: "The reason why it is impossible to focus the condenser beam to a point is because the condenser receives rays from the entire area of the floor of the crater, the crater does not set square with the condenser, and as the condenser is an uncorrected lens (which sets up spherical aberration), the actual image of the crater will be focused over a considerable distance. And since the crater has area, its image will also have area, so the beam cannot be focused to a point."

Which, if you ask me, is a very complete, as well as a most excellent, answer.

We will let Lester Borst answer Section D. He says: "A plano-meniscus lens, or more properly a plano-concave lens, is a lens having a plano (flat) surface on one side and a concave surface on the other. Such a lens is employed to correct spherical aberration in lens combinations. [I am not certain of the latter statement.—F. H. R.] It is seldom if ever used singly. Used alone, the effect would be to send the incident light forward in a diverging beam, the divergence being dependent upon the curvature of the convex side.

Rivkin Joins S.O.S. Company

J. Rivkin, formerly chief engineer of Polymet Manufacturing Corp. sound division, has joined the S. O. S. Corporation of New York, which, following a receivers' sale, will continue to manufacture amplifiers formerly made on contract for S. O. S. by Polymet, according to J. A. Tannenbaum, head of the S. O. S. Company.

British Executives to Coast

Maurice Ostrer and W. J. Gell, Gaumont British executives, who arrived in New York from London late last week, left this week for their first trip to Hollywood, where they will inspect American production methods. They will be accompanied by Arthur Lee, Gaumont British representative in New York.

Ohio Approves School Films

The state department of education at Columbus, Ohio, has officially approved sound and silent motion pictures in visual education. Thorough tests will be made, to be followed by adoption of films as a regular branch of the curricula, provided the tests come up to expectations.

RAVE REVIEWS Start

AS SWEET AS THEY COME

In the mystery-comedy division, this one is as sweet as they come. Mr. Humberstone is entitled to another laurel sprig for his fair brow and its producers can take several bows on a piece of merchandise that doesn't have to be apologized for in any company.

From start to finish this one is tailored for the laughs, yet the suspense and thrills have by no means been overlooked . . . . once the tachometer gets into the high figures, it never lets down.

Comedy and Thrills

Here is a comedy thrill picture that ought to prove better than average audience pleaser. Taking the old formula of "terror" pictures—a haunted house, a mysterious gang of criminals, weird characters, all kinds of trick doors, graveyards and strange goings on—the producers have loaded it up with a lot of foolish comedy supplied by James Gleason and Zasu Pitts that should alternately give your audiences the creeps and then send them into spasms of laughter.

As far as the story is concerned, any attempt to give it a logical description would be just as funny as the picture itself. It's so cleverly and smartly mixed up, with surprising developments and unanticipated events, that the element of suspense is maintained at high pitch.

The start is a little slow, creating the impression that another spine-tingling mystery picture—full of melodrama—is under way. But when the locale is moved to the haunted house and James Gleason as a dumb motor cop and Zasu Pitts go to work, then the fun begins. It's the kind of fun that kept a preview audience (that didn't know it was going to see a preview) sitting in tense suspense, then roaring with laughter, then breaking into the picture time after time with bursts of applause.

Because "The Crooked Circle" is such a clever mixture of squeamy mystery and downright farcical comedy, you should have no difficulty in selling it. The title is catchy and can be worked into all sorts of gags that will convey the nutty idea of the picture. Names are there a-plenty and, although Ben Lyon is billed as the headliner, he plays second fiddle to Gleason and Pitts. Yet they are the only ones who play "straight" all the way through. As far as the others are concerned, the story alternately puts them on both sides of the fence—right down to the final climax, which is a surprise that will confound all the amateur sleuths in your audience who know just how the picture is going to turn out before it is half over. They won't analyze this one—a thought which suggests a good idea for your interest-creating campaign. Defy them to figure it out.

"The Crooked Circle" can be shown to any type of audience any time. The kids should eat it up and it might be a good idea to have as many of them in the house as you can get at each performance to launch the enthusiasm. But the grownups, who are looking for something new and a little different, will find plenty to thrill them and plenty to make them laugh. Smart showmen, who are looking for something unique to offer their patrons, will get behind this one with a real campaign.—McCARTHY. Hollywood.

CHICAGO

Last week will probably go into the records as the "week of the big screenings." Exhibitors and the press were kept hopping from one showing to another. Educational-World Wide were hosts to more than 100 at a showing of "The Last Mile" at the Stevens. Warner screened eight features and a series of shorts to a crowd estimated at 500 on Monday and Tuesday. And Paramount and Balaban & Katz jammed the United Artists to the rafters with a doubleheader preview on Wednesday afternoon of "Movie Crazy" and "Love Me Tonight."

Which explains the "Oh Min" calls from the office of Jack Miller, head of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, while Myrtle Collins, his secretary, was embellishing the shore line in the Eagle River country in Wisconsin.

Aaron Saperstein finally got away on a frequently postponed vacation. He decided it would have to be now or Christmas and Aaron has no desire to loaf and rest while the snow flies and the wind whistles.

Harry Phillips, Jack Cohen and Ben Edelman have joined the sales staff of Exhibitors Screen Service, local offices of which are under the supervision of George West.

Mike Gerribb is making arrangements to reopen the Orpheum and Eagle theatres at Westville, Ill.

Eddie Grossman, manager of the United Artists exchange, has always been known for the even tenor of his comment on pictures. His enthusiasm, always tinged with a certain dignity, has of itself been sufficiently impressive. But he broke down completely the other day after seeing the first print of Doug Fairbanks' new picture, "Mr. Robinson Crusoe."

Jake Steininger is reopening the Park Manor theatre. He also operates the Crane theatre. The Park Manor was formerly operated by John Kempton.

Miss Emma Abplanalp, film board secretary, is vacationing in the East.

Irving Mack has joined in the movement to put over the new season's pictures with a bang by producing a series of special trailers.

Tom Mitchell and Jim Murtaugh are preparing to close the M. & M. film exchange which they operate.

Bog Long of the United Artists home office was in Chicago for the opening of "White Zombie," which pried the lid off the United Artists theatre after its period of darkness.

Louis de Wolfe is now managing the Crystal theatre. The Pickwick at Park Ridge has been reopened under the management of Harry Balaban.

Regal Takes Monogram Franchise for Canada

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, has concluded negotiations with Regal Films, Ltd., Canada, whereby Regal has acquired the Monogram franchise for the Dominion. Regal also has the Canadian franchise for MGM product. Twenty-four dramas and 16 westerns are included in the deal, for release the first year.

The agreement gives Monogram distribution through six Canadian exchanges, located in Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, Montreal and St. John. Monogram has 30 branches in the United States and has an outlet also through seven exchanges of P.D.C., Ltd., London.

Theatres Deny Conspiracy Charges

Denying that the conspiracy charges made against them in Baltimore by the Ideal and Astor theatres are true and asking that they be dismissed, the answer of the Horn, Columbia, Bridge, Hampden and Cluster theatres was filed through United States Attorney Simon E. Sobeloff in Circuit Court at Baltimore.

In their complaint, the Ideal and Astor claimed the five theatres mentioned had formed a booking combine and their tactics of getting pictures are unlawful and unfair competition, and asked an injunction to stop further activities.

According to Sobeloff, the Ideal and Astor theatres have no equity in the Circuit Court, but are required to appeal to the ordinary civil courts.

Opens Canadian Exchange

Harry Price, veteran motion picture man, has established offices in Montreal and Toronto of the Federal Film Company. The chief office is in Toronto. The company is handling the product of Principal Pictures Corporation and other state rights features.

Newsreel Theatres for Coast

A newsreel theatre, featuring news and short subjects exclusively, is about to make its appearance in San Francisco. The sponsor is N. Blache, owner of the Blache Film Laboratory which makes trailers and has just originated a local news reel, called "The California Talking Reporter." Blache plans to establish two theatres, one in San Francisco and one in Oakland, offering programs consisting of first-run national reels, regular issues of his "California Reporter" and shorts.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

OFF TO A FLYING START!

EVERY SHOWMAN WILL SOON be striving for a healthy start as fast as the new season gets under way. YOU should be ready, too.

Have you surrounded those swell box office productions with a good build-up? Have you been plugging them via trailers, lobby cards, special newspaper stories, etc.?

Get off on the right foot and the momentum will carry you a long way. Get off on the wrong foot and you'll be limping along trying to catch up for months to come.

It's been a long, long time since we were so enthused about a new season's product, but anyone who has been carefully following the various company announcements must be equally as enthused over the prospects of finally getting that S.R.O. sign dusted off and in use again.

Gauge your merchandising plans so as to get the maximum of results from your efforts. Vary them. Make them interesting. See that they tie in with the picture to be sold. BUT DO SOMETHING.

THE SUMMER CRYING SEASON is now approaching a finish. Light up that mugg of yours with a warm, bright smile and let the whole darn town know that so far as you are concerned the depression is over and you're out to prove it with a most formidable line-up of pictures.

If your local Chamber of Commerce has been dying on its feet, just stick a pin in them and wake 'em up. Show them how to put over a smashing campaign to start the fall buying season and then see that your theatre is the pivot for that entire campaign.

No more need you squawk about "weak sisters"; they are now in the minority, although we will admit that they were everywhere last season. It's one great picture after another now and here's hoping that Hollywood keeps on sending them on without a let-up. Out there they have learned the error of their ways. In your town you must get wise to yourself and turn over a couple of dozen new leaves that will give your theatre the chance it deserves to get off to a flying start of profits. You'll be surprised to see how it will remain in that class so long as you keep on plugging those marvelous shows.

THE Club is again fortunate in enlisting the aid of Floyd Fitzsimmons, for many years with Paramount-Publix, to write articles dealing with the proper way to handle special campaigns.

Floyd is well qualified to undertake this task by reason of his long experience with this kind of material. Besides setting forth the correct way to tackle special campaigns, Floyd can be depended upon to inject a new and original twist into each idea suggested.

His first, a complete manual on "Campaigning the New Season's Product," appears in this issue and will be followed up with similar articles on the proper handling of a Fall Fashion Revue and Fur Show, from beginning to end. Another on Stage Weddings, formation of Kiddie Clubs, promotion of local dancing school activities, etc., etc., will appear at frequent intervals or one each week, depending on the amount of time that Fitzsimmons can devote to this task.

This type of material has been in demand not only among our own members, but from exhibitors and managers all over the country. In the past, only the circuits were able to make up such manuals for their own theatres. Now MOTION PICTURE HERALD through the Club section will present them and in such form that the following out of the campaigns outlined will be a most simple task.

We know you will find the Fitzsimmons manuals most helpful and profitable, but if you desire some particular campaign do not hesitate to tell us what you want.

EDDIE HITCHCOCK'S NEW SERIES on newspaper ad construction via exchange mats caught on much quicker than we expected. This is being written but five days after last week's issue came off the press and we are already getting favorable comment.

This series will improve as it goes along, especially if the managers following it send along suggestions. Surely you must have some definite idea of what sort of material would help you on your ad work. Include your comments and suggestions in your next letter to Club headquarters and see if we can help you. "CHICK"

MAC WATTERS USED ENTIRE BACK PAGE FOR HIS WEEKLY AD

Managers who have to depend on weekly newspapers to get their messages before the public will be interested in a full page carried not long ago by Mac Watters, manager of the New Essex Theatre, Tappahannock, Va.

This ad occupied full space on the back page and could not fail to command attention. Over fifty per cent of space was devoted to a large exchange mat on "Sky Devils," name of theatre and a sandwiched-in line in large type, "Our Memorial Special." That picture was a Monday-Tuesday offering and attractions for the balance of the week were carried in the remainder of space. A foot streamer carried additional instutional copy. It was a whale of an ad that could not fail to command public attention.

We don't know just how often Mac buys a whole page to tell the news to his community but even if his pocketbook will only stand the strain once in awhile, it certainly is a forceful means of getting over a message. The paper also gave him a front page reader.

NANCE SENT LETTER OF CHEER TO EVERY MAN ON THE CIRCUIT

What this industry needs right now is a lot of pep and optimism, thought F. D. Nance, general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, Beesville, Texas, and he straightway knocked off a letter of cheer to all managers on the circuit.

In it he pointed out that none were going to be cut off the payroll, suffer salary reductions, etc., and entire contents were couched in phrases calculated to build up morale. Hardships of the past season were discussed, lack of outstanding product admitted as an additional handicap to generally bad conditions, and confidence was expressed that forthcoming attractions showed promise of real value at the box office.

Managers were asked to keep down expenses to a minimum during August and September as a special drive on overhead, Nance stating that he would personally write everyone of his men and let them know just who came through with flying colors. Work, smile and be optimistic was the keynote.

Nance believes the waning summer season an opportune time, particularly after going through a pretty tough season, to let go with a few cheers; and that a word to that effect from every employer would create interest and feeling among the entire industry which would reflect a more optimistic outlook and confidence in the coming season. There's no disputing his stand on the subject. As far as his thoughts and ours are concerned, a reassuring letter from employer to employees in times of stress is certainly a consoling gesture. However, there's a lot of nice folk down in Texas and they do things in a nice way. More power to Nance and his crew and we hope others will profit through his suggestions. His contributions to this department are always more than welcome.

A FEW NOTES ABOUT PERRY SPENCER AND THE LINDY THEATRE

The good, old retail custom of displaying wares in an attractive way is the motto of Perry Spencer, manager of the Lindy Theatre, Philadelphia; hence, he is always on the job of dressing his house in a style in keeping with the season. Lately he's been slapping on fresh paint here and there, putting up awnings and lattice work and working on his advance displays for the inner lobby frome one to two weeks ahead of openings.

That's not all, however, that has been occupying the attention of Manager Spencer the last few weeks. In connection with Managers' Popularity Week, a move made by all Warner men some time back and already touched upon in this department several times, he made a deal with a leading bus company to furnish six round-trips, good until used, to New York City and return. He also tied up with a New York hotel to furnish board and room for three days, arranged for one night's entertainment at a popular night club and free shows at the Strand and Paramount Theatres. The trips are good for thirty days and one is given away each night. It's surprising, reports Perry, how they still literally eat up this old stunt.

Reference to Spencer's old, reliable remedy of displaying wares attractively and well in advance, is one which will not hurt any of us to be reminded of from time to time. It's a simple but effective formula. Before signing off on the Lindy for this time, let us offer congratulations for the neat deal put over with the bus company. Keep up the good work, Perry, and let's hear more from you.

Roth Gets New Job

Jack Roth, former Publix district manager in the middle west and lately manager of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, has succeeded B. V. Sturdivant as general manager of Publix-Skouras houses in Indianapolis. Sturdivant, who has been associated with Publix in this city for several years, recently resigned and left for the South. It is said he is in line for supervision of a chain of theatres on the west coast.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME

ROUND TABLER WHYTE REQUESTS MEMBERS TO SEND IN WEEKLY ADS

Commenting on the series of ad layouts set up by Ken Long for this department, W. H. Whyte, manager of the Riverhead Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., N. Y., brings our attention to the fact that all these ads were designed for one attraction playing a week's stand, which, of course, is true.

Down in his neck of the Island a very excellent weekly newspaper is the sole advertising medium of its kind; hence, Whyte is interested in layouts that combine a number of attractions over the period of a week and suggests that other Round Tablers, similarly situated, send in some examples of their work. To start the ball a-rolling we are reproducing one of his own, an ad that registered well with his New York office.

For the amount of space used, we think it certainly shows up mighty well. The cool idea is expressed at the top portion and by use of a palm tree newspaper mat. Note the prominence of the current attraction, the two shaded boxes for next day's offerings and the use of small mats for the balance. The little ship mat, part of the tree mat, blends in nicely with the title of the last picture.

Well, Bill, your brother showmen may consider this an invitation to send along some of their weekly ads and you may rest assured that we'll only be too glad to publish helpful contributions. One of our staff passed through your town last Saturday and remarked upon the natty summer uniform worn by a young lady who happened to be standing near the box office, and the generally attractive appearance of your theatre. However, that Herald man was hell-bent for some fishing grounds. If it had been the writer, he would have stopped off to say howdy. Let's hear from you some more.

UNIQUE DISPLAY IN LOBBY BY PEARSON ATTRACTED PATRONS

The farm was certainly brought right into the theatre when "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was shown by Lloyd Pearson, manager of the Princess Theatre, Rushville, Ill., as you may note by the accompanying photo.

The reproduction may scarcely do justice to this fine display but we can see from the original that it was a corking bit of atmosphere. The old rails used for the pig sty were authentic in every respect, having been secured from a fence in the country district. Freshly gathered foliage, an old wagon wheel, sheaves of grain, a floor covering of straw and other accessories, all came from a farm, as did the litter of pigs and the several live chickens.

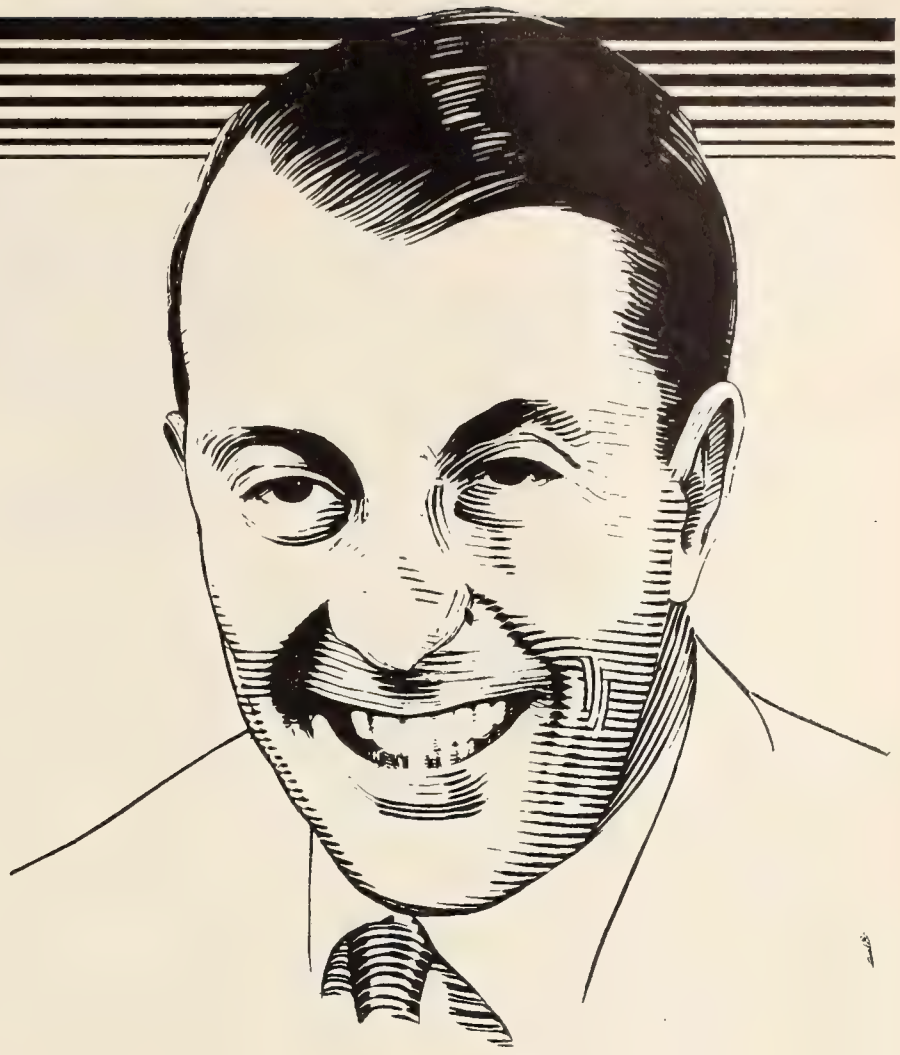
Pearson thinks his lobby display was pretty good for a 400-seat house in a town of 2,000 population and we're certainly inclined to agree with him. It sure was the real thing in farm atmosphere and undoubtedly made patrons sits up and take notice. That litter of pigs must have been a bally all by itself. Anyway, he's passing the stunt along for others to use, if they can secure the necessary trimmings.

CONGRATULATIONS, SCHMIDT!

William E. Schmidt, district manager for the Pottsville, Pa., district under George C. Walsh, has been given the Wilkes-Barre section in addition to the Pottsville houses in a new set up. The former Wilkes-Barre district manager, Robert Sternberg, has been transferred to Boston for Publix.



Wm. E. Schmidt

The Round Table Club first took notice of Schmidt's fine showmanship while he was manager of the Capitol in Hazelton for the Comerford interest. When Comerford sold out to Publix Schmidt went over to the newer outfit, where he soon established himself as one of the division's outstanding showmen.

Schmidt has appointed Jesse Blanchard of Sunbury his assistant to look after the houses in the southern part of his now enlarged district. They have worked together so long that perfect team-work should result from the present set-up.

SERIES OF REVUES STIMULATED TRADE FOR WM. R. ROWELL

A number of revues staged during the slack season proved good hot weather business boosters for W. R. Rowell, manager of the Fox-El Dorado Theatre, El Dorado, Kas.

When arranging for his Bathing Beauty Revue he "just picked the girls from city and country," instead of letting merchants enter them as representatives; however, the merchants did kick in with some interesting awards for participants, together with those donated by the theatre. Pictures of all girls were taken and arranged into an attractive lobby display. This stunt turned out to be an excellent business-getter.

Following the stunt described above he staged a Kiddie Pajama Revue, in which youngsters from two to ten years old took part. Kiddies were divided into two divisions—two to six years old and seven to ten years old. Awards were made for the best in separate divisions. The kids are interestingly cute at these ages, states Rowell, and public approval of the stunt was registered at the box office.

His next stunt, in force at the time this report was made, was a School Day Revue. He tied in with the merchants on this one and arranged to have on display children's model wear for school; in other words, a sort of a school children's fashion display to stimulate trade for the merchants. This was an innovation as far as Rowell and his town is concerned and the event stirred up a lot of interest. He holds his regular Fashion Show later on in the fall.

The above news from El Dorado is interesting and we think the School Show a particularly timely stunt; so we'll shove it right into type before it's too late for some of Rowell's fellow Club members to take advantage of it as a pre-school opening gag. As a matter of fact, it can be used after opening. Next time we report on his activities maybe we'll have some news on what he did to start off the new season.

Wills' Costless Stunt

When H. W. Wills, exploitation manager of the Palace Theatre, Petersburg, Va., opened with "When a Feller Needs a Friend," he staged a special matinee for children at 11 A. M., and through a tie-up with a local dairy secured enough popsicles to give one to each youngster who attended the show. He also secured from a chain grocery concern a large coaster wagon for a give-away in the usual fashion.

Total cost to Wills for popsicles and wagon amounted to a little screen advertising and a short address at presentation of the latter. The kids simply ate the gag up, popsicles and all. He's sending along another gag and we'll tell you about it soon.

HORNE AND FERRI PRAISED FOR WORK DONE IN THE EAST

Unstinted praise was recently bestowed by Harry Arthur, head of the Arthur Theatre Circuit in New England, upon producer-exhibitor cooperation in connection with exploitation on "White Zombie" and "Congorilla," and particularly for efforts made by Hal Horne, advertising chief, and Roger Ferri, exploiteer, in the cities of New Haven, Hartford, Bridgeport, Springfield and Worcester.

On "White Zombie," Horne, of the U. A. home office, personally attended a managers' meeting at circuit headquarters and outlined a campaign which was carried out to the letter. The same live "white zombies" used for the New York opening were again engaged for New England showings. They carried no signs, merely attracting the curiosity of people who followed them right to the box office.

Another stunt consisted of hooking a coffin box to the chassis of a truck in the business district. Cards announced that the zombie inside would be delivered at the theatre at a certain time. At the appointed time attendants unloaded the box and proceeded to unscrew the lid, arousing much interest from the crowd gathered around the entrance. Many were amazed when a "zombie walked out of the box.

From all accounts Ferri also excelled himself with efforts made in behalf of "Congorilla." All kinds of unique ideas resulted when he, Eddie Hitchcock and others put their heads together and unusual business resulted from the several engagements.

(See Data Below)

DATA ON ADS ILLUSTRATED ABOVE

In this ad series the accompanying page of "Zombie" ads is purposely emphasized to show you that a complete ad campaign can be developed into something worth while by just a little thought and patience.

Out of that layout you have your choice of an ad for any day of the week, according to the manner in which you gauge your advertising schedule. Since most theatres using press sheet mats are generally on a split-week policy, the series presented offers a varied amount to select from. In a case where an exhibitor figures it will run six or seven days, the layout is elastic enough to suit the emergency.

"White Zombie" is a thriller that has only recently opened on Broadway and started off to surprising good business. It will leave your audience gasping, and most surprising of all is the fact that it has served to upset accepted precepts concerning newspaper reviews. "White Zombie" drew mediocre newspaper comment on its New York opening, and in spite of it packed them in from the very beginning. There isn't much question but what it will do likewise wherever it plays if properly sold, especially through your newspaper ads. "White Zombie" has two advertising campaigns on which mats are available. One is the regular press sheet and the other is a separate supplement of the New York ads.

Eddie is rapidly catching up on the newer product so don't be discouraged because you may have already run some of the pictures. We have the layout for the next few weeks before us and they look mighty good.

Another point we want to get across to you is. be sure and provide the play dates and added subjects when framing ads along the lines suggested above. They were not intentionally left out but Hitchcock assumed that you would understand that these ads are ONLY suggestions upon which you could work out your own material.

HERE'S THE WAY FRED NAIFY PROMOTED HIS WEDDING IN THEATRE

In response to many inquiries received by this department to supply details of a public wedding on a theatre stage, we are submitting a plan that worked out successfully for Fred Naify, manager of the Senator Theatre, Chico, Calif.

First of all he runs a slide on the screen asking for information from patrons concerning a couple who wish to be married on the stage. This generally results in a number of applicants a few days later, from which is selected an attractive and popular prospective bride and groom. Then the announcement is published in both of his newspapers, naming date, etc. His next move is to go out among the merchants for the promotion of wedding gifts.

For special entertainment he generally ties up with a local dancing teacher to put on a Tom Thumb wedding, in which a youthful couple, minister, ring bearer, bridesmaids, flower girls and about fifteen other tiny youngsters take part. He arranges to have the public wedding take place under a beautifully decorated arch, with huge bell hung above, and a profusion of flowers promoted from a local florist. The groom, best man and justice of the peace wait under the canopy for the bride to arrive, who is then escorted down the aisle by her sister or some other relative. The bridesmaids and flower girls follow, while the organist plays the wedding march. Another little touch given this part of the ceremony is a vocal rendition of "I Love You Truly" by some local singer with aspirations to perform in public. After the ceremony the couple are presented with the gifts.

As in many other instances of stage weddings recounted in this department, Naify's affairs always draw capacity. The stunt appears to get results for any manager who will take the necessary steps to put it over.

GOOD NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING YOUR SHORT-CUT TO PROFITS!

Importance of Newspaper Ads Is Second to None in Your Show-Selling Activities; Watch Your Layouts Closely!

ONE of the chief purposes for all the space we have been devoting to ad construction via exchange mats, is to clearly point out what so many showmen apparently do NOT know. Namely, that the use of exchange mats are very flexible and can be played around with in so many different ways that no two ads need necessarily be alike.

This is a decidedly valuable slant because it is teaching the average theatre manager that he can take any mat and break it up, or cut it up, to suit his conception of how it ought to fit into a newspaper ad.

Even the smallest of small-town newspapers are today equipped to cast mats and in so casting to eliminate such portions as the manager deems unnecessary for his use. So if you use your scissors and paste pot the local composing room should experience little or no difficulty in following out your ideas or instructions.

Simplicity Most Effective!

Stick to simplicity. Avoid complicated layouts or layouts that are not easy to read. No ad ever carried a punch when it was so crammed full of needless copy so as to confuse the reader. Theatre-goers who shop for their entertainment will unquestionably be attracted by the ad that is most attractive and gets its message over with conviction.

But then you have another class of newspaper reader. The man or wife who thumbs through the paper without any definite thought that they want to see a movie that night. Can you inject that "something" into your ad that will, first, attract their attention when they see it. Second, make them read the ad, and third, decide to come and see the show because of what you have conveyed to them in your ad?

If you keep such thought in back of your mind when laying out your newspaper advertising you will soon find that you are constantly doping out new "punch" lines and slants that will gradually distinguish your theatre's advertising from every other theatre in town. And you can get that way by applying yourself diligently to the task of ad make-up through the medium of exchange mats, ordinary rule and good display type.

A Valuable Knowledge!

Not so very long ago I was introduced to the man in complete charge of layout work for a large and nationally known advertising agency. I had always assumed that a man holding down such a position must have been a student of advertising for many, many years and then worked his was up from errand or copy boy.

Strange as it may sound he was once the owner of a small town theatre. But a man who took extreme delight in doping out attractive newspaper ads; selling medium which he considered, as do thousands of others, his most important selling slant in towns of average size. As far back as 1918 he was breaking up cuts and mats and making then fit into his local newspaper advertising. It was no cinch, he told me, to do such things in those days because it was new work for the newspaper. But he succeeded and soon attracted plenty of attention for his seat-selling copy.

Having applied himself to this particular line of work, he made a study of type faces and their relative values and relationship to each other so far as theatre advertising was concerned. This, too, was important but not impossible. He started off with a proof sheet of all type faces then in use at his local newspaper. Then, through the local editor, he secured books on type faces from the various foundries specializing in type casting, etc.

In the meantime his little "shooting gallery" was replaced by a larger and more modern theatre and his advertising advanced accordingly. Then he formed a partnership with two other independents in which they combined eleven theatres in nine towns.

The work was divided up among the three men and he took over the advertising and publicity work for all the houses. It was while so engaged that he attracted the attention of the agency he is now connected with and he joined them the following year.

Improve Your Education!

We are citing this instance not because we want to feel that you are going to become a world-beater, but merely to show the tremendous possibilities for improving your theatre's newspaper advertising through giving more than passing thought and attention to the make-up of your newspaper ads. Try to learn a little more about what goes into an ad. Get acquainted with every type face available at your newspaper. Find out what can be accomplished through the use of simple rule and white space judiciously used. Get the knack of taking a corner, or head, or title from an exchange mat and work it into an attractive ad for your theatre.

Showbusiness is an industry of specialization. Not as specialists are classified among doctors, but on the theory that a theatre manager must be a student of every portion of his theatre's equipment and merchandising without necessarily being an expert in any one department. His knowledge must not be too limited, yet he must know enough about every detail to actually supervise the entire operation and still retain the respect of his employees, who will never respect a man who doesn't know what he is talking about.

But there is no single phase of theatre operation in the average situation that can match, in importance, that of newspaper ad layouts. Here we have the theatre's first point of indirect contact with the population of the town. Here we have the first medium of salesmanship between manager and prospective patron. And many a time a theatre has been classified by its newspaper advertising. I, personally, always look through a local paper before calling on a manager. Invariably I can get a good mental picture of him from, first, his newspaper advertising; second, the appearance of his theatre, and third, the way his show is run off.

One Reflects the Other!

Nine times out of ten when I find sloppy, unattractive and old-fashioned newspaper advertising I find the second and third points just as closely related and then the manager himself looks the part. Why not? A progressive, live-wire, competent theatre man would never be content with advertising that was not in perfect harmony with the theatre. Neither would he stand for an unattractive or dirty entrance or lobby, no more than he would stand for a show projected poorly or indifferently.

One thing connects with the other and forms the perfect or imperfect operation. But as I have said, his newspaper advertising can be generally accepted as a reflection of the man himself. And in this connection we might point out that several of the biggest executives of the national chains judge their managers exactly according to these standards. One of them in particular will stick by any manager on the circuit if that manager's newspaper advertising is above average.

It was not our intention to enter into so long a discourse on this subject, but after all it is a topic that has endless possibilities and a phase of your job that is second to none of your other duties or responsibilities. Never before, in the four and a half years that we have been piloting the Round Table Club through troubled waters and storms, as well as calms and smooth sailing, have we found a single angle so well received and so really necessary than guidance and instruction in newspaper advertising. Especially so where so many managers were relying on straight type and rule when they were anxious for something like a scene or star head to enliven it or to inject some much needed appeal.

Use the Exchange Mats!

That the regulation exchange mat would answer this purpose many of them knew, but they did not know to what extent they could take those exchange mats and break them up to suit their own individual ideas.

We are hopeful that this series, and others to follow, will leave no further room for doubt on this subject, and that every showman not employing an ad artist will be making up fine newspaper ads through this method. If you have some suggestion to offer or want some particular style illustrated, drop us a line and you will soon find that if your request is practical it will be acted upon quickly.

EDWARDS HAS STUNT TO KEEP OUT OF RED DURING SLACK WEEKS

Like the accepted theory that there's more than one way to kill a cat, it appears that there's more than one system in force for annihilation of the summer bugaboo in showbusiness, according to the way a scheme is working out for Charles S. Edwards, manager of the Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas.

He claims that this is the first summer his house has ever been out of the w. k. red, yet he shows but one day each week (Saturday) and his 300-seat theatre registers an average gate of 2,000 for the several shows. His marquee sign is the only advertising medium used, yet it does not advertise any picture. Following is the copy it carries:

"Free Talking Pictures Every Saturday Afternoon and Night": and there you are. say readers. "We knew there was a catch to this one." On the contrary, it's all on the up-and-up—the result of a bit of serious thinking on the part of Mr. Edwards.

Each year the merchants in Pilot have been pooling a considerable sum of money to draw people to town on Saturday in order to attract the shopping trade. Since it was largely a matter of providing entertainment for the out of town element, Edwards convinced the business men that free talking pictures would be a far better stunt than scattering funds for this and that attraction, figuring at the same time that many people would form the movie-going habit while attending the summer shows and return for more when he resumed his regular schedule in the Fall.

To sum it all up, the Chamber of Commerce collects the money and pays Edwards for his shows, and he cooperates by using advertising slides at the theatre. As stated above, his main reason for going in for a deal of this sort was to keep in the black during the slack season and to build future patronage, and he believes the folk are being sold on attending the theatre regularly. About time the last two shows are due he intends to start a heavy advertising campaign and run a couple of episodes of a new serial, as a means of paving the way for a "Grand Fall Opening." Then, as he states, "if I don't get out of the red and stay that way, I'm no showman and may as well go back to selling shoes, etc."

It may be a bit late in the season for those situated the same as Edwards to sound out the merchants on a scheme such as outlined above, but it will certainly not be amiss to keep the idea in mind for future consideration. He is sincerely enthusiastic as to the feasibility of such a move in like communities and wants to help out some other showman who has faced and is facing the annual loss at the box office during the slack weeks in summer. We're sure he will be glad to furnish additional details to anyone who will drop him a line.

Big Hearted Louis!

Louis Charninsky, well known Kansas City exhibitor, recently played Santa Claus at his Mission Vale Theatre when, through a tie-up made with a local newspaper, he extended invitations for whole families to attend shows free of charge any day except Saturday and Sunday. It was also announced in the paper that the coupon clippers could call at the office for additional tickets to bring along their next door neighbor.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

We were particularly enthused over this week's selections for the poster art series because they represent something really outstanding in this sort of work. Our many poster friends, will, we are sure, agree with our opinion about these fine displays?

Through the courtesy of O. T. Taylor, manager, these examples of poster art came from the shop of Erling Espedal, artist for the O. & R. and Weir Theatres in Aberdeen, Wash.

The first, "Mata Hari"—Garbo, clearly shows an artist can inject a real deep study of a star and still stick to the high-light method. Many artists are under the impression that little or no depth of feeling can be conveyed via this method, therefore, we are glad to prove that it CAN be done.

The two smaller pictures on "Miracle Man" were made up as display panels for either side of a lobby. They certainly do impress and must have drew unusual attention from the patrons of the theatre.

Espedal is by no means a new in this series. His previous contributions have always been well received and we hope he continues to send us his material. We are also grateful to Mr. Taylor for his cooperation.

EASSON USED CLUB IDEA TO PUT OVER A SERIAL PICTURE

The scouts club idea was recently adapted to a sales campaign made on the serial "Heroes of the West" by A. Easson, manager of the St. Clair Theatre, Toronto, Canada, and as a result he now has approximately one thousand boys and girls attending Saturday showings of the chapters.

He first announced formation of the club with special trailer; then he distributed application blanks around the swimming pools, playgrounds, etc., and made a one-sheet announcement for the lobby. To start the serial off with a bang he staged a parade offering free admission to the first chapter to all children appearing in cowboy or Indian costumes. He also used membership cards with punch mark for consecutive attendance, granting free admission to the last chapter if all of the rest of the dates were punched. The birthday tickler file was also used for the sending of cards and invitations to club members, which are good for free admission for member and parents.

The above club scheme was outlined in the press book prepared for the above mentioned serial and is similar to other serial exploitation set down from time to time in this department. As in Easson's case, it appears to still be the means of building up Saturday serial trade.

PIERCE AND DOUGLAS THOUGHT UP A NOVEL "DEPRESSION" STUNT

In connection with a drive made to inaugurate RKO Greater Show Season by L. R. Pierce, manager of the RKO Majestic Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, he and his publicity manager, Roland Douglas, thought up a novel little gag that bears all the earmarks of originality.

The reproduction of the throwaway pictured here originally measured approximately eight inches by four inches and the copy tells the story. That black dot down in the left hand corner represents a glued-on-penny—and maybe the cards didn't get attention! You can figure that out for yourselves.

Local merchants were also sold the idea of sponsoring the RKO Season stunt to extent of placing one-sheet cards in windows and inserting hand-bills in packages. The bills carried a list of all forthcoming attractions at local RKO houses. The city authorities also permitted the placing of 4x3 foot shields on all light poles.

The last time we had a line on activities of Roland Douglas he was located in Sioux City, Iowa, where he accomplished some outstanding publicity work. That penny gag put over by Doug and Boss Pierce was certainly a neat one for these tough times. Thanks to both of them for passing it along and we'll be on the lookout for other news from San Antone.

BROADWAY ESKIMOS!

Lo and behold the Eskimos of Broadway! A strange sight, indeed, for the simple New York City folk who crane their necks at less than this. And get an eyeful of the "mushers" and their team of "huskies." We'll gamble the drivers came from either Brooklyn or the Bronx; but those dogs! Maybe the pound? The leader admits police dog ancestry; the second in line is a "sooner" of some kind, and the third someone's pet collie. (The Club dog editor is our authority.) But aside from all that, the bally went over big for "Igloo" at the Rivoli Theatre.

LARGE CELEBRATION STAGED BY COLLINS ON TOM BROWN FILM

A forty-two piece band playing in front of the theatre, fireworks and firing of a brass cannon featured the opening night of "Tom Brown of Culver" at the Apollo Theatre, an Indianapolis, Ind., house managed by Kenneth Collins.

During the concert twenty-five cans of red fire were burned on the marquee and a like number of railroad flares were set off. A giant searchlight played up and down the main street, resting occasionally on persons in automobiles and street cars blocked in the heavy traffic. Floods bathed the front of the theatre in a white light and running fire from a shot gun and explosion of two dozen "dago bombs" added to the excitement. It might be well to add that the city granted a permit to stage the racket.

The celebration outlined above was part of a ten-day campaign to find local boys most closely resembling the boys in the cast of the picture. A local newspaper sponsored the move and the Culver Military Academy offered prizes of vacations at the school. Opening night was also Culver Night and was attended by the Academy alumni in a large body. The accompanying photo shows the Legion band lined up in front of the house.

Other effort included a tie-up with the local railway company for advertisement of the picture in all stations within a hundred mile radius; the mailing of letters to Scouts, Legion posts, luncheon clubs, Y. M. C. A.'s and hotels; arrangements made with citizens' military camp to send 100 men each night to see the picture at regular admission; a serenade on the fourth night of picture by a local 56-piece newsboys' band; a tie-up with a chain drug company for featuring of a "Tom Brown" sundae; the holding of a Tom Brown swimming contest, and 26 window displays with special tie-up stills.

Manager Collins certainly put across a most colorful opening and he and Andy Sharick, "U" exploiteer, are to be congratulated for their effective work. Undoubtedly the picture offers some excellent exploitation possibilities and we'll be on the watch for campaigns from the many Club members who will play it.

NO DEPRESSION SAYS BENJAMIN; JUST GET OUT AND SELL SHOWS

The so-called "depression" does not mean a great deal to live merchants and likewise-inclined theatre men, believes Ed Benjamin, manager of the Fox-Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., if they'll just put their shoulders to the wheel and make it turn around.

Not long ago Ed proved his worth as a promoter of no mean ability by lining up several concerns in his city for the give-away of an $800 automobile. Each one of them kicked in to the tune of $100 and the entire affair didn't set the house back anything except cost of tickets and lobby credit cards. The affair was handled in the usual fashion. Merchants were entirely satisfied with their deal

CAMPAIGNING THE NEW SEASON'S PRODUCT FOR MAXIMUM RESULTS!

This Should Prove to Be the Greatest Show Season for Everyone; Box Office Receipts Dependent Upon Sales Effort!

How to Best Tackle the Selling of This Event to the Public Is Outlined in This, the First of the Fitzsimmons Articles!

by FLOYD FITZSIMMONS

THAT producers are turning out an outstanding array of box-office hits this season is certain. Enthusiastic comment is being heralded by critics who have seen advanced previews. Earyl showings in big cities have been received with overwhelming acclaim as the greatest line-up of pictures ever to come out of Hollywood. All of which promises a bright and cheerful future to the exhibitor who gets behind the gun.

Having marshalled the distinctive merits of the product, let's pick out some one dominant theme for advertising appeal—some "big idea" for the whole campaign. BETTER PICTURES, that's it!

Now, it's up to you to sell them, not only individually, but collectively. It is not necessary that the theme of campaign be formulated in words. Better Pictures is the basis for a slogan to be used in your campaign. For the sake of example, we'll say, "Greatest Show Season." It might be one of a number. . . . Season of Hits! . . . Greater Movie Season! . . . Greatest Entertainment Season! . . . Parade of Hits! . . . No matter, because it's the idea that you want to bang over.

Following is a brief campaign outline. It is suggested for those exhibitors who intend getting the most for their money.

Theatre

After a decision has been made on a selling phrase or slogan, jot down the places where it can be driven home. Start with the theatre. Trailers, lobby, marquee, the theatre front, attraction boards and employees.

Obviously, trailers present the most direct selling contact. Play up your coming attractions in a special "Greatest Show Season" trailer. Arrange to have all lobby boards and coming attraction boards carry your slogan, for example, "One of the Strand's Greatest Show Season Hits!" or "Here it is! The first of the Strand's Greatest Show Season Hits!" For a special lobby display, list the names of ten outstanding attractions coming to your theatre. Number them, following this out in your trailer, newspaper and attraction board advertising.

Your marquee can be used to sell each picture individually as one of the group of "Greatest Show Season Hits." Where location warrants the use of banners, pennants, etc., carrying the campaign slogan, use them. It is needless to say that they add the necessary flash to this type of sales effort. Many theatre fronts, above and below the marquee, are adaptable for this sort of display.

Don't fail to sell the theatre staff on the importance of their help in putting over "Greatest Show Season." Get them talking about it at home and on the streets. Supply them with information regarding coming pictures so they may be in a position to answer readily any questions about future programs. Impress them with the fact that their jobs are dependent upon the success of the campaign. Supply your doormen and cashiers with cap bands, buttons, or ribbons imprinted with the campaign slogan or if you prefer a supplementary slogan, "The Strand for Entertainment."

Newspapers

Make sure all ads carry your slogan. As a suggestion, box the battle-cry in the border of the ad for emphasis. Give it space in any event. See that all publicity carries similar copy. Where possible, an extremely interesting advance story can be written about the coming new season's pictures which will play your theatre. If you are "in" at the newspaper, try it. There's advance press material enough on the early fall releases for pages.

Newspapers have been "chiseled" to the bone, as have the stores and shops for no-cost advertising. Agreed. However, because of location and the point of your campaign, an earnest endeavor on your part may result in a page or more of no-cost advertising. Theatres in shopping districts do bring business. A mutual tie-up for better business can be made between shops, theatre and newspaper whereby the gamble for profit is equally shared. Sanction of the local Chamber of Commerce is desirable, the idea being to make a "community splurge" of greater shows and greater business season. The thought here is not unlike the cooperation of business houses in an urgent sales drive. No-cost space can be promoted through contests directing attention to merchants ads, windows and special departments. Your picture title will suggest the proper stores to solicit.

The combined efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, merchants, newspaper and theatre in arranging a parade on the opening day of the first of your Greatest Show Season hits, would start any campaign off in glorious fashion.

Out-of-town and neighborhood papers should be supplied with general announcement stories. They may be only weeklies, but get them anyhow. The combined circulations of these neighborhood papers is worth the slight effort and cost.

Previews for newspaper critics can be held where they have already proven themselves valuable. Good will publicity can be generously secured where the theatre invites newsboys to a special party. Likewise, special shows for orphans, crippled children and institutions, sponsored by the paper, will automatically attract attention to your Greatest Show Season campaign.

Inasmuch as this type of campaign is general, contests of a general nature creating theatre patronage and newspaper circulation should be used. As press book material comes through on each picture you will find abundant suggestions for selling that particular attraction. However, your aim during this campaign is to create more business through those mediums, which, while getting over Greatest Show Season, brings new and old faces back to the box-office. More specific outlines of various contests will be given in subsequent issues of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Billing

No doubt past experience has taught you the value of this type of advertising for your particular operation. It does add punch to any campaign. It may be set down as an axiom that the easiest and best way to interest the reader in your message is to put that message before him. Repetition does it—and bill posting is one of the main factors of repetition in show business. True, your prospective patron may not be picture-minded, at the moment, but a consistent pounding home of "Greatest Show Season Hits" is going to make him say, "Well, there must be something to it." And . . . does he like Joan Crawford!

The Round Table Club has again scored a "bull's-eye" in the enlistment of Floyd Fitzsimmons as special exploitation writer for our pages. The material to be written by Floyd is to be complete manuals on the various subjects offered. But each one will carry some new and original twist.

Fitzsimmons is particularly well qualified for this work because he has spent many years doing nothing else. His exploitation suggestions in Paramount's press books were always considered outstanding and very often followed to the letter by managers all over the country.

He has been connected in trade paper work in the various branches of show business and handled the special opening campaigns for more than six Publix theatres. He was home office contact man for the Saenger division and Southwest territories and more recently had been working on the Paramount merchandising manuals which are now used extensively not only on the Publix circuit but by all theatres using Paramount product.

We feel certain that Floyd's special articles dealing with different phases of seasonal activity will meet your need for material of this kind which will be written and presented in a clear-cut and simple manner so as to make the following of his suggestions an easy task.

If you would like him to lay out some special form of campaign such as for Fashion Shows, Kiddie Clubs, Stage Weddings, etc., etc., please drop us a line and we will immediately take steps to give you what you want. "CHICK"

ABOUT "LIFE BEGINS"!

When I first read Terry Ramsaye's review on "Life Begins," I was all set to enter into a heated debate with him, especially where he admonishes showmen to religiously avoid mentioning the theme of the picture.

How was it possible for anyone to give such advice? Take a title alone and make it count for box office results? Impossible, I thought. Not to depend on the good, old fashioned adjectives and descriptive copy? Something must be all wet.

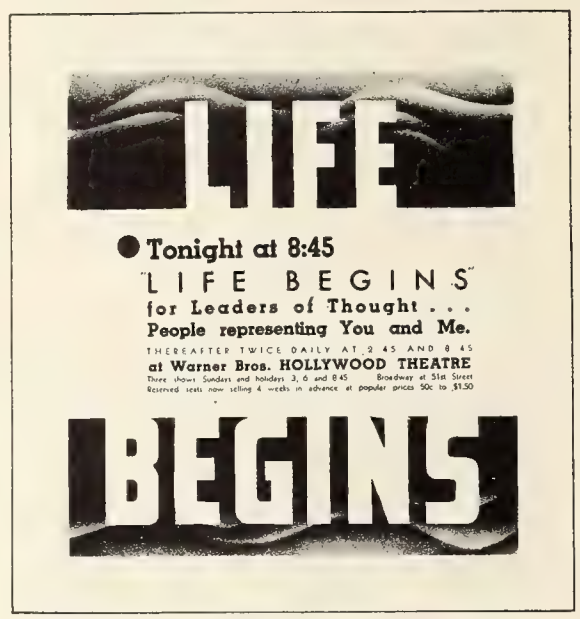
Now I'm glad that I kept my counsel until I saw the picture myself. Because I must readily admit that Mr. Ramsaye gave you some doggoned fine advice in his review. Read it over again if you don't quite get the drift of what I am driving at.

Charlie Einfeld, the Warner-First National advertising chief, has framed a most impressive campaign along the only lines that common sense showmanship could possibly dictate. He has built up his entire newspaper ad layout on the title itself and the word-of-mouth comment that a picture like "Life Begins" must surely evoke.

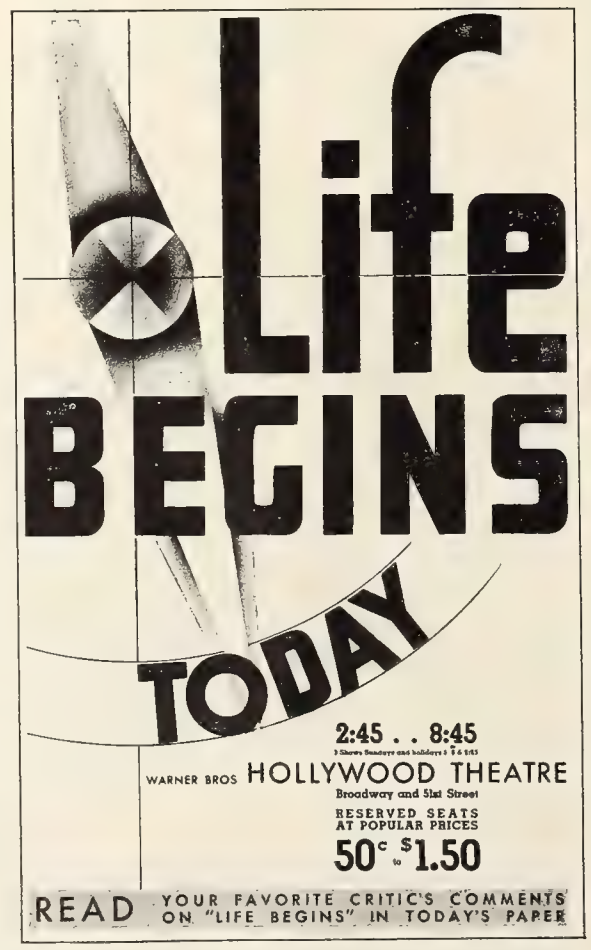
We are reproducing three of the ads which will bring home to you exactly what we are trying to convey. Note the absence of anything regarding the background, plot or theme of the picture. Note the dignified appearance of these ads. See how they cleverly, and sensibly, avoid anything in the way of rave advance promises. All of these points are highly significant because they have a direct bearing on a most unusual situation in modern show-selling.

Up to this time we have always been told to sell the picture through the medium of smart copy. To give them interesting catch-lines referring to the picture and the plot. To whet their appetites for something that their mind conjures by reason of such advertising.

Now, along comes a picture with a theme that must not even be hinted at under penalty of ruining the box office possibilities of the picture. Any attempt to let the public in on what this is all about may prove to be the biggest mistake you ever made. We suppose there will be some smart-aleck showmen here and there who are going to ignore this kind of advice, but they will regret it for many months after.



This picture IS different. So much so that to go out and fill your seats when showing it you must make up your mind that great care will have to be exercised everywhere along the line of merchandising. To accomplish the proper selling of this picture to YOUR public, the Warner-First National office has turned out a most helpful press book that was designed from beginning to end with the thought in mind that most of the managers will need some special guidance.



We urge every showman to get that press book just as fast as he can after he definitely knows that his theatre will run this picture.

"Life Begins" is the beginning of a brand new era in show-selling and will be either a S.R.O. proposition or a distinct flop, depending on how each individual showman tackles it. This is one time, however, that you need not lay awake nights doping out smart catch-lines. The title is going to create all the interest necessary and the word-of-mouth advertising after the opening should do the rest.

."CHICK"

FITZSIMMON'S MANUAL ON NEW SEASON'S PRODUCT!

Check over available boards in your neighborhood. Where conspicuously located, use them. Be sure your theme or slogan dominates the copy. For example:

GREATEST SHOW SEASON
STRAND
See a Movie Today!

If you wish, set the copy so a Now Playing snipe can be used to offset the purely institutional value of the paper. The coming new season's product justifies the use of illuminated 24's—or even larger, depending upon the size of your community, theatre, etc. No more effective medium can be used. You may find a single painted board available. Here again, is the opportunity of forcefully selling Greatest Show Season at your theatre. Its dominant location on Main Street has a method all its own. It sells! Sells your confidence to the public!

Many of the coming new season's pictures have song hits. Prominent music shops afford excellent tie-ups. You might possibly arrange to have these songs played over the air by local orchestras. Theatre plug is given in the usual manner. For example, "This song is taken from the latest Maurice Chevalier hit, 'Love Me Tonight' which will be shown at the Strand Theatre in (town) soon or (dates)."

There are other angles of approach to the radio, all of which are familiar to you. Local stations in search for "fillers" are often willing to use up-to-the-minute news of Hollywood—gossip concerning the stars —or the style of dresses the women are wearing. Here you have the possibility of a tie-up with a fashion shop. Publicity departments of the various producing companies will be only too glad to furnish you with suitable material along these lines.

Contests providing opportunities for would-be radio and stage stars offer other angles of approach.

Contact the schools at this time. Appropriateness to the subject is essential here. But there is no reason why they cannot be sold on "Greatest Show Season" and your theatre for better entertainment.

Other pertinent sales angles may be mustered from your usual plan of attack. Bear in mind your main object is to get the public picture-minded. The theme of your campaign is BETTER PICTURES! Profit is your aim. So start immediately instilling confidence into an incredulous public by honest, enthusiastic selling of your theatre and the new season's product.

RANDFORCE ACTIVITIES!

Large City Circuit Showing Fine Organization Spirit in the Merchandising of Many Outstanding Pictures!

CHIEF among recent activities on the Randforce Circuit, a well organized theatre organization over in Brooklyn, N. Y., headed by Louis Frisch and Samuel Rinzler, was the campaign made on "Bring 'Em Back Alive." It was designed for use in standardized form over a majority of houses on the circuit and mapped out considerably in advance by Publicity Director Monty MacLevy and the managerial staff, to which all credit must be given for the excellent average results obtained throughout run of the picture. Following are some notes on the campaign:

Exterior of Erwin Gold's House!

A tie-up with the I. J. Fox Company, one of the city's leading furriers, netted the circuit without cost a total of 50 skins and stuffed animals for display purposes. In return for this loan the theatres gave the furrier credit cards in the lobby, advertising to the thousands of patrons that the displays had been made possible through courtesy of the furrier.

A budget of $1,000 was set aside to cover the cost of cutouts, art-work and foliage for the 38 houses scheduled for the picture which, when pro-rated among all houses, brought down individual cost for those items to approximately $26 each.

Extensive use was made of exchange 24, 6, 3 and 1-sheets, and another economical move that well lent itself to the building of signs atop marquees, was the adaptation of old marquee letters for that purpose.

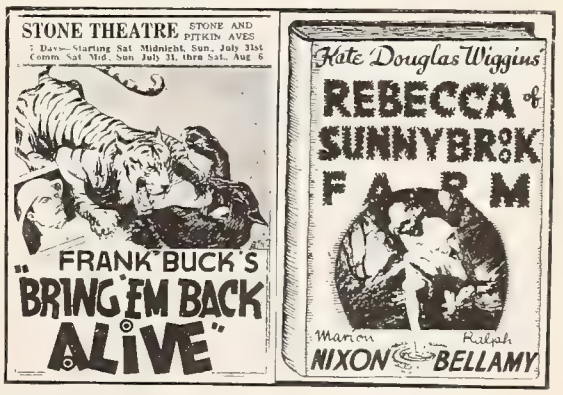
All ushers were rigged in African hunt costume and special printed matter describing the picture was made up by MacLevy and his artist for the occasion. A sample reproduced on this page shows how a pleasing variation of the old type folder can be fashioned from exchange mats, interesting copy and blue ink.

Fleishman's Seat-Selling Front!

Two other photos on this page illustrate the attractive front made for the Walker Theatre by Erwin Gold, manager of that house and one of the circuit supervisors. The spacious foyer of the house admirably lent itself to the large display, as did the marquee.

Not content with merely stuffed animals and skins, Harvey Fleischman, manager of the Embassy Theatre, went his associates one better in that respect and tied-up with a pet shop proprietor for the loan of a live, fourteen foot cobra and four live monkeys. We are also showing a shot of his front, with one of the ushers in regulation comtume standing at the entrance. An interior shot was too faint for reproduction.

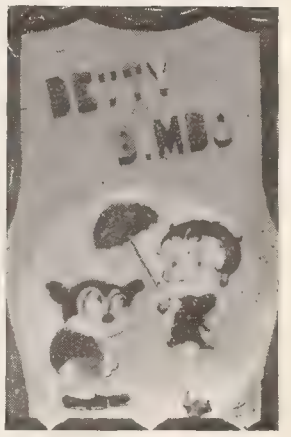
Irving Berman, manager of the Alba Theatre, also had a most interesting display atop the marquee of his house, but once again we are forced to state that lack of sharpness in the photo prohibits its reproduction. Berman also adapted old marquee letters for an extra sign over the display. He also had a fine innner lobby display but that photo, too, with its profusion of foliage, etc., would only produce a jumbled mass if we attempted to make a cut of it.



Sidney Falk's Parade Ballyhoo!

AN INVITATION

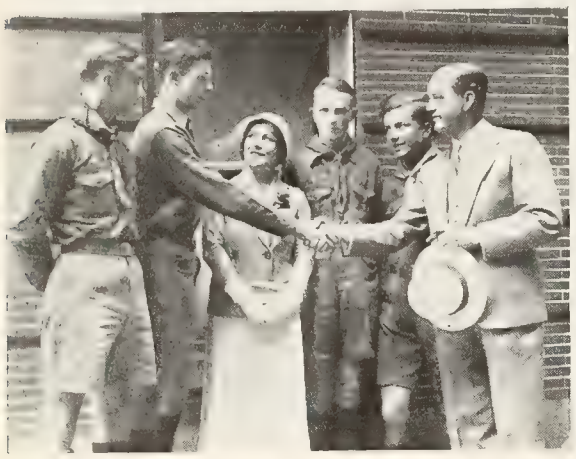
Supervisors of other circuits are extended a cordial invitation by this department to group activities of their men, as outlined in the accompanying resume of work done by several managers on the Randforce Circuit. A brief description of all stunts and some photographic evidence of fronts, displays, posters, etc., will make acceptable material.



Unusually Effective Interior Treatment Achieved by Gold!

Examples of MacLevy's Heralds!

Sidney Falk, manager of the Stone Theatre, also arranged for some extra trimmings for his presentation by tying up with an automobile dealer, the Legion Band and Junior Naval Militia. For another stunt he made a deal with a photographer for the taking of pictures of people in neighborhood crowds. These were later published in a community paper and were good for guest tickets. One of the accompanying photos shows the parade of Legionaires and Militia passing the theatre. Marquee and lobby were dressed in the standard method.



Trailing the batch of material gathered from Monty MacLevy and sent personally by John F. Mackenzie, manager of the Cross Bay Theatre, came a couple of snap-shots to Club headquarters showing what that Randforce man did to stir up interest in his neighborhood. The photos are small and lack detail but we can see that Mack also had a dandy inner lobby display. In addition to the jungle foliage, etc., he, too, managed to secure live pythons, alligators, monkeys, and a pair of large birds. This was made possible by contact with an importer of live animals, birds and

AFRICAN FILM WAS EFFECTIVELY SOLD BY ROBERT PORTLE

A large percentage of the excellent business resulting from the campaign made on "Congorilla" by Robert Portle, manager of the Poli Elm Street Theatre, Worcester, Conn., is attributed to the manner in which he sold Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson to his public.

In addition to the personal appearance of the two adventurers at the theatre, Portle arranged to have them arrive in town by plane and be greeted by a throng of local Boy Scouts, who acted as an escort to the theatre. Needless to state, the personal appearance garnered a lot of free newspaper space. A tie-up with a dealer representing the same kind of truck used by the Johnsons in Africa also netted the theatre some excellent ballyhoo advertising for the picture.

Portle is one of Harry Arthur's managers and we're indebted to Eddie Hitchcock for sending in the above information. We will look forward to hearing more about Portle's methods of selling shows.

Was He "Guilty As Hell"?

Righteous souls in Birmingham, Ala., didn't care whether "Guilty As Hell" was the name of a new picture coming to town or not, they told city fathers when it was explained that Rollin Stonebrook, manager of the Publix-Alabama Theatre had innocently caused flaming red imprints of the title to be stenciled on sidewalks of the city. As the result an officer placed Manager Stonebrook under arrest and he'll have to tell it to the judge.

STOFFER MADE LOAN OF SKINS SERVE FOR TWO LOBBY DISPLAYS

A number of handsome skins, originally promoted by Publicity Director Monty MacLevy from a leading furrier in New York City for use in an extensive campaign made on "Bring 'Em Back Alive," again served their purpose in a lobby display made by Edward Stoffer, manager of the Marcy Theatre, Brooklyn, on "Before the White Man Came."

and other trimmings, only cost the theatre $1.50. Stoffer and his staff associates did the work. A credit card for the furrier took care of that end of the tie-up.

Stoffer certainly took advantage of material on hand to make up an effective, low-cost display, a policy that is being followed by all his fellow managers on the Randforce Circuit. These Brooklyn showmen are gaining a reputation for being able to put over a lot of fine campaigns and attractive displays at extremely low cost.

reptiles and the display was a sensation.

Getting away from the animal theme for awhile, let us call attention to the small cut on the other page. It may not show up any too well on account of its size; however, it's a snap of a poster made for Max Alster, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, and is a good sample of what Max thinks of Betty Boop as a draw in his neighborhood. He plugs this cartoon at every opportunity and we hear he gets results.

Still off the animals for the moment, we note that Harry Davey, manager of the Lefferts Theatre, is still using his old reliable lobby fountain for attractive displays. During the hot weather months he built a lattice work effect around it and decorated the framework with flowers, foliage and stills on several coming attractions.

Returning to the policy of exploitation adopted by Randforce on "Bring 'Em Back," it was the first time since the organization of the circuit that a standardized campaign of its proportions was used. Now that the Savoy and other Randforce houses have reached an agreement with RKO to play day and date with the first run RKO theatres over in Brooklyn, we'll be looking for many other aggressive selling campaigns. In the campaign outlined above the Embassy, Walker, Stone and Alba all played day and date with the RKO first runs. In addition to the many attractive displays, all managers arranged for many fine window tie-ups, and house-to-house distribution of special literature on the picture.

EXAMPLE OF LOW-COST DISPLAY FRONT

Above is another example of the low-cost fronts and other displays turned out by house-staffs of Randforce theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y. With a few exceptions, practically all material shown in photo came out of the workshop. The Savoy is managed by Monty MacLevy, who also acts as publicity director for the entire circuit.

LAWRENCE STAGED ANOTHER STUNT AT NO COST TO HOUSE

Following up his Pony stunt, which we described a short time ago, H. L. Lawrence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., came through with another box office booster that didn't set the house back any extra expense.

This time it was a Beauty Pageant and again the merchants were taxed $1 each to take care of advertising, window cards and hand bills. Approximately fifty of the leading commercial men in the town sponsored the occasion on which the "Queen of Paris" was chosen.

Other inducements to patrons to attend the theatre during the slack season recently used by Lawrence included a "Pal Night," on which anytone buying a regular ticket may bring along a pal; in other words, a two-for-one gag with a different name. He has also been using a Family Night every Friday, when one 40-cent ticket will admit the whole family.

As Lawrence and many others have pointed out from time to time, times have been tough the past summer in many communities and it has taken a lot of these kind of stunts to stimulate box office trade. Putting them over on a cost-free basis is a feather in the cap of any manager.

VARIETY OF EFFORT FEATURED CAMPAIGN WAGED BY S. TUCKER

Numerous advance activities and an attractive lobby display featured the campaign made on "Bring 'Em Back Alive" by S. B. Tucker, manager of the Byrd Theatre, Richmond, Va., and his efforts brought gratifying returns to the box office.

Four weeks prior to opening, an announcement was made via special trailer made for the occasion, and the theatre's broadcasting time over a local NBC station was devoted every morning and twice a week at night to plugs for the picture. Organist Art Brown, who does his own announcing, had charge of that end of the campaign. The radio station also gave two gratis broadcasts of the Frank Buck electrical transcription, once at night and on the morning of opening day.

The town was papered with 24s, 6s and 1s and window cards covered every town within a radius of 25 miles. Plenty of reaction was obtained from a tie-up made with a leading book store for a window exhibit of animals and stills of picture.

An animal picture coloring contest sponsored by a leading local newspaper ran every morning for eight days, with preliminary announcement, pictures of entries and winners stretching out the deal for twelve days.

The winning displays were exhibited in the lobby. The entire contest only cost the theatre ten dollars in cash for 1st, 2nd and 3d awards and twenty-five guest tickets. An afternoon paper also contributed two special stories and pictures.

It happened that the Bostock Circus played the town at that time and that event was used for distribution of 1,000 heralds among patrons. Ten thousand additional heralds were handed out house to house. Special banners were made for display on sides of the theatre truck, which is always on the move around town, and the lobby display pictured on this page created a lot of comment. Reviews of the picture by critics were also played up in newspaper ads.

Other recent activities at the Byrd included the holding of the first Sunday midnight show, an event that turned away several hundred patrons and taxed the aisle space in the theatre. Fight pictures and a World's Premiere of "Roar of the Dragon" were the attractions. Another recent stunt, pulled a day in advance of "Is My Face Red?" was the sending of two small darky musicians, dressed in beach pajamas, to the annual Police "Twilight" on the beach. A cloth sign on the back of each darky read, "Is My Face Red?" En route on the train they played and sung their numbers. This gag took the gathering by storm and was good for a corking story in the papers next day. "Was His Face Red!" Tucker states.

It's easy enough to observe that Manager Tucker and his crew at the Byrd have been on the job of selling shows, even though this is the first report the Club has received in some time on their activities. Perhaps we may look for more regular contributions in the future. However, in any event, we're sure his fellow Round Tablers will appreciate his suggestions outlined above.

TAYLOR AND HOMER McCALLON SUGGEST STUNT THEY USED

The stunt pictured below is considered one of the most effective means of attracting public attention ever employed by the present staff of the State Theatre, a house in Houston, Texas, managed by W. V. Taylor. Homer McCallon was the publicity director behind the move. Decision to use the stunt was reached after due deliberation on its possible reaction to Houstonians.

The photo of blonde girl in cage speaks for itself, but for your further information we wish to lay stress on proffered advice of the State management. By all means pick an unknown or out-of-town girl for your subject, your brother showmen advise.

They did and had hundreds of inquiries concerning her identity (and it is said she wasn't any prize package either).

Outside of the above stunt the campaign was circussed along the sames lines as Trader and Tarzan. A local game hunter contributed a lobby display of some 500 stuffed birds of all description that did much to attract sidewalk prospects; however, it was the caged blonde that turned the trick.

Mack tells us he doesn't see how anybody can miss on this one if it's sold along lines outlined above; nor, he continues, should anyone be afraid of harmful reaction through its use. The State is probably the largest and most luxurious house in Houston and the management isn't taking any step that would stir up adverse criticism. Okay, McCallon, and thanks for sending the gag and explanation along for your fellow showmen. We're glad you like our department and hope you, Taylor and Nahaz will become active contributors.

MAX SILVERWATCH HITTING THE BALL IN A NEW LOCATION

It didn't take Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waverly, Mass., very long to find his way 'round in his new home town after being transferred there from Amesbury, evidence at hand disclosing that he has already made a good impression on newspaper editor and merchants.

It's not any too easy to grab a lot of free space from a weekly paper but we note that his ad on "Mouthpiece" also carried an equal amount (48 inches) of free space. The fact that it appeared right next to the ad rounded out a full three columns and made the entire display most effective.

Not long after his arrival in town Max also contacted a leading merchant and promoted an oil-burner range for a giveaway that resulted in a sell-out for the theatre on the night award was made. It was a torrid evening, states Max, and the oil burner saved the day.

INTRODUCING MORE NEW MEMBERS!

JOHNNIE STANFILL filled out his application for membership while at the St. Paul Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., and before he got a chance to mail it transfer orders came for him to proceed to the Paramount Theatre in the same city, where he takes up the job of publicity director. That's showbusiness, Johnnie; here today and somewhere else tomorrow. However, you didn't have to travel far—and that's something. Anyway, we're glad to have you with us and hope that in the time to come you'll do your share to keeping this department the livest thing of its kind in existence.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE D. BITTINGER is the assistant manager of the Strand, Rialto and Savoy Theatres, Sunbury, Pa., which is quite enough of a job to keep any young fellow out of mischief. George helps Manager J. M. Blanchard carry on at the aforementioned houses and we know the latter's name will be familiar to many members of this organization. Now that we have two able representatives in Sunbury, there's good reason to hope that the town will receive plenty of mention. Regards to your boss, George, and remind him that we'd like to know what's going on down your way in the show-selling line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HENRY A. CLARK manages the Central Theatreover in West Hartford, Conn., and we're taking this opportunity to introduce him to his fellow Club members. Connecticut is another state to which the Club is greatly indebted for valuable contributions from the many members located there and we sincerely hope that Clark will fall in line with the other fellows. Let us know what you are doing to boost box office receipts, Henry, so we can pass a few tips along to the rest of the gang.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HYMAN RODMAN is located over in Dorchester, Mass., where he manages the Dorchester Theatre. His is another name to add to the constantly increasing Club roster and we're glad to have the opportunity to put his application for membership into effect. Get the Club "spirit," Hyman, and jot down some news about what you and your associates are doing to bring in business. Then shoot the dope to Round Table headquarters. We'll see that it's passed along the line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. E. SPERLING is the manager of the Strand Theatre, an independently operated house down in Moundsville, West Va., and we're also extending a cordial welcome to this new member of our Club. Step up and meet the rest of the fellows, Sperling, and then show that you're a real live Round Tabler by sending in some show-selling gags that we can pass along. What happened in show business in your town the past season? Drop the Club a line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. CUMERLIN hails from Three Rivers, Mass., where he manages the Idle Hour Theatre. We also have his application at hand and he tells us that he, too, is heartily in accord with the aims and spirit of this organization. Okay, Cumerlin, that's the way we like to have members come across. We'll be on the watch for news from your neck of the country, so shoot along some information on what you've been doing to sell your shows.

HOWARD B. SCHUESSLER is in charge of the Lafayette Theatre down South in Lafayette, Alabama, and he's another recruit to the Alabama contingent of this outfit. Many a good tip has come from the several representatives around his section of this country and so we'll count on Howard to help keep up the good work. What was that last stunt you used, Schuessler, to bolster up the box office? Let the rest of the gang in on it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN W. TRIPP manages the Tulare Theatre, Tulare, Calif., and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his fellow Club members. We believe he is the first representative this organization ever had in his town and we're glad to have him with us. Now, if John will just take enough time now and then to let the rest of the gang know what's going on over his way, everything will be hotsy-totsy.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SOL J. LEVOY manages the State Theatre down in the city of Uniontown, Pa., and he's another welcome addition to this great organization of showmen. Sol states in his application for membership that he's a Publix man and in charge of an 1,800-seat house. We want to let him know that there's a whole flock of brother Publix managers in this Club who have contributed many fine ideas to this department. We hope that LeVoy will help keep up the good work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM A. GUINAN manages the Fox-Lyric Theatre in Salem, Ill., and we also have his application at hand. He has been following Club pages for quite some time and has found many of the ideas submitted by other members of help to him. Now he proposes to share in the good work by sending in some of his own. We hope he will follow up his good intentions with concrete evidence of stunts he has been using to bring in extra trade.

HARRY HIRSH is the manager of the Spruce Theatre, a Hirsh Amusement Company house at 60th and Spruce Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. Judging from his name Harry is also concerned with ownership of his outfit and, if so, he's another one of the many owner-managers who have recently joined this organization. Now that he's with us we hope he'll pass along some information on what stunts, etc., he's using to put shows over the top. Shoot along some ideas, Harry, and we'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD GOLDEN is the assistant manager of the Idle Hour Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., and his boss, E. R. Golden, tells us that Harold is efficient, a hard worker and does not shirk at any task. Certainly these are gilt-edged qualifications for any rising young manager to possess and there can be no doubt that the younger Golden will be at the helm of his own house some day. He climbed up to his present assignment from an usher's job. We're glad to have him with us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MALCOLM TANNER hails from down South in Eddyville, Kentucky, suh, where he manages the Strand Theatre. He's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his fellow members and we're happy to have his application at hand. We do not recall Eddyville having representation in this department before Tanner joined and his membership will be a welcome addition. Now that he's one of us we'll be looking for some information about his methods of boosting up the box office.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SIDNEY LEVINE is the manager of the Palace Theatre up in Oneonta, New York, and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of this great organization of showmen. His fellow members will all be interested to hear how business is going along up his way and so we'll count on Levine to send along the information. If he has hit on any good ideas to increase receipts the past season, we are sure he will share them with the rest of this outfit. Let's hear from you, Sid.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CECIL H. HOUCK has the job of assisting Earle St. John with management of the Smalley Theatre in Walton, N. Y., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. Men on the Smalley circuit all have the reputation of being hard-hitting showmen and we're pleased to include Houck's name on the ever-increasing list. Now that we have two representatives at Walton, news of what these two showmen are doing ought to be coming in. Tell St. John hello, Cecil, and let's see if the two of you can make a report.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK JONES is in charge of the New Gates Theatre, Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., and he's another New York City manager to join our Club. We hope that Frank's contributions to these columns will add further proof that there are a lot of showmen in the Metropolitan district who still believe that there are a lot of ways to exploit pictures in large city neighborhoods. Week to week we receive evidence of this from other members and we'll be on the watch for what methods Jones uses in his section.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Lincoln, Nebraska

Dear HERALD:

Yesterday we stopped in to call on Mr. W. N. Youngclaus of Madison. You will recall that Mr. Youngclaus is the man who brought suit against the producers in that protection and zoning case in which judgment was rendered in his favor. Mr. Youngclaus told us that since that decision was rendered he has been unable to get service for his house.

He says the exchanges will not answer his letters or telegrams and that there seems to be a concerted move on the part of the distributors to keep him from getting service. We know nothing about the merits of the case, but if we understand correctly the law against combinations in restraint of trade, we venture the guess that the producers are inviting a law suit for damages, and if we know Mr. Youngclaus, as we think we do, he will accept the invitation.

Lincoln has eight theatres, one amusement park, four golf courses, six hot dog stands and the state capitol building, all open and pretending to do business. George Monroe and Cal Bard own the Rialto and State theatres and Bob Livingston owns the Strand. The others belong to Publix.

The Rialto was comfortably filled the night we called.

You will always find Bob Livingston perched on a bicycle rack on the sidewalk in front of the Strand. Bob says that's his office. We asked him why he was always sitting on the rack and he said he did that to keep the dogs from using it. Bob plays all of his pictures second-run to Publix, and he says he does that because Publix needs the money and he doesn't, that's why he is known in Lincoln as "Big-hearted Bob."

While we were visiting with him a lady came along and Bob stopped her and said, "Lady, I am offering a ninety-cent picture in there tonight for fifteen cents." The lady turned and looked at the billing out in front and then said, "Well, you are just ten cents too high," then she went on down the street and turned in at a hot dog stand and Bob said, "There, do you see that? People think more of their stomachs nowadays than they do of their intellects." Presently another lady came along and stopped and asked Bob what the price of the show was and he told her fifteen cents. Then she asked him if he was giving dishes with each ticket and Bob replied, "No, Madam, not now. We did, but we are out of dishes now. The hired girl broke the last dish we had this morning."

Bob said he had taken the HERALD ever since its first publication, but that he never read it, and we said, "Well, Bob, we occasionally find one who can't, but not often. But you won't need to read it, for if you will sit out here with a copy of the HERALD in your hand so the public can see it it will lend dignity and class to your joint and the people will say, "Well, there's a guy who knows the show business; guess we'll go in and see the show." Then Bob called one of the ushers and told him to bring him a copy of the HERALD, and the last we saw of him he was sitting on the rack with the HERALD in his hand and the people were turning into the Strand.

Every time we call on Mr. and Mrs. Bailey of the Linwood theatre at Pawnee City we have to hire someone with a ball bat to drive us away, they are such delightful people. You can hardly see Pawnee City for the tall corn that surrounds the town, and if the Linwood doesn't enjoy good business this fall it will be because the corn cribs will be so thick the people can't get into town. We wish there were more people like Mr. and Mrs. Bailey.

Crete has two theatres. The Iris, owned by Mr. Burris, and the Lyric by Mr. Person. Both of these theatres are well managed but two theatres is one too many for Crete. However, that's Crete's business. We hope they both win, for they are both entitled to, as they are both excellent people.

There are two theatres in Havelock. Lincoln, you know, is a suburb of Havelock. The two Hedrick brothers manage the Lyric, and Clarence Frasier manages the Joyo. Business is not so good in Havelock as it once was, due to the removal of the B. & M. shops and the laying off of many employees, but in spite of that these theatres are getting by and are living in hopes for better times. Stick to 'er, boys.

Falls City

Oscar Johnson owns all three theatres here in Falls City. Oscar owns one too many, but that's some more of Oscar's business. While we are on the subject of corn, we might say that Nebraska will harvest the largest corn crop in her history, and we have known her corn crops for forty-nine years in all forms, raw, ground and liquid, and we think we are a judge of corn. The Nebraska farmers will have to rent space in Kansas and South Dakota to store the crop, and if this doesn't bring prosperity then there haint no such animal in the menagerie.

When stocks go up people say it's politics; that it's done to boost Hoover. When they go down they say it's done to hurt Roosevelt. All of which is a lot of hooey. The man who has money to invest and a thimbleful of brains will invest it in good real estate anywhere in the good old U. S. A., preferably in Nebraska.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

DANCERS

Burly Lubos and Chicos
New Orleans Orpheum

This is a dance act consisting of a pretty young woman who does solo work, a man and girl team, a pianist and a harpist, all of which share the spotlight at one time or other. The dancers are conventional, usual, poor selection of music making one of the dances almost funny, with the orchestra jumping continually from a Gypsy number to a Hungarian dance. The pianist takes a spot at the harp with another harpist, playing popular numbers for closing.

Harris Twins and Loretta
Denver Orpheum

The twins open the act with a "twin" idea, a novelty dance number, each duplicating the other. In perfect unison, the same effect could have been produced by one only with the aid of a huge mirror. They escort Loretta to the stage, and she does a dance that calls for bends and twists that prove she is plenty limber. The twins and she, scantily dressed, do a smart adagio act, and while standing on the head of a twin she puts one leg up her back at better than right angle. A graceful trio, with an act possibly more beautiful than spectacular, although much of it is difficult.

Bernice and Emily
New York Capitol

These two girls offer a dance, which includes taps, kicks and acrobatic flips, all done on a flight of stairs. They finale by walking down the stairs on their hands in a spread-eagle. Well-applauded.—H. P.

Roy and Romeo Revue
Omaha Orpheum

This act includes four girls and two men. Their feature number is a duo waltz. Ballroom and tap dancing features; costumes are changed often and color is added in proportion. Athletic dancing is not at all overdone; cartwheels and springs and flips seem to fit gracefully, and not forced, where they are used.

Muriel Gardner
San Francisco Fox

Muriel Gardner, blonde and statuesque, appears with the Collenette Ballet and demonstrates that the art of high kicking has not been entirely forgotten. Her well rounded offering is received with considerable enthusiasm.

Art Henry and Company
Detroit Michigan

Two clowns and a doll-girl offer a charming dance fantasy of the type not seen here for many a moon. The act is principally picturresque pantomime, but before it closes there is a brief bit of comedy, also in pantomime, that amuses the audience. Good for audiences of the average or better than average taste.

Tampa Solution In Stage Shows

Vaudeville in midsummer has been decidedly unusual in Florida, until this year. When the public protested plans to close the Tampa theatre, Jesse Clark, district manager for the Sparks circuit, rounded up a jazz orchestra and sufficient acts for a revue. It was held over. Then Clark booked in a number of companies, but the Tampa has a comparatively small stage, so the vaudeville was shifted to the Victory. The companies were played in other cities after the Victory and then returned to other houses working in conjunction with the circuit.

The stage shows proceeded to pull business from the other houses and were moved next to the Park, a mile away, and the Victory was closed.

Today practically every theatre in Tampa is playing some kind of stage entertainment.

"Beer Garden" Theatre at Canton

Five acts of vaudeville, with the possible inclusion of pictures, will be featured at an outdoor theatre soon to be opened at Canton, Ohio, by George Marlowe, who has just returned from abroad. The plan of operation will be similar to the beer gardens of Europe. Canton has been without vaudeville for over two years.

Oakland Orpheum Drops Vaudeville

The RKO-Orpheum, of Oakland, Cal., has eliminated vaudeville acts and is offering an augmented bill of film subjects and music. Owen Sweeten and his orchestra have been given a more important place on the bill and are offering overtures with scenic effects.

"Bootblack Blues," by Rainger

"Bootblack Blues" has been composed by Ralph Rainger, who wrote the tunes for Paramount's "The Big Broadcast."

Returns to N. Y. Paramount

After a week at the Brooklyn Paramount, the George Jessel-Norma Talmadge-Burns and Allen stage show returns for another week at the New York Paramount.

This sets a precedent for return engagements.

Vitaphone Signs Creager Band

Willie Creager and his band is the latest musical aggregation to join the list of orchestras signed by Vitaphone.

SINGERS

Nick Lucas
New Orleans Orpheum

Working in a straight, legitimate manner, with his guitar, Nick Lucas demonstrated that another vogue of crooners has not displaced him in the popularity of audiences here and that he can still hold the featured spot and have the audience asking for more. Lucas offered "One Hour With You," interpolating a hot guitar chorus, "Lullaby of the Leaves," which scored heavily, and then, by request, "Tip Toe Through the Tulips." Called back for more, he asked for suggestions and sang "Mardi Gras," then as a heckler insisted upon "Side by Side," he obliged, much, apparently to the heckler's embarrassment, since whenever Lucas reached the line "side by side," he would gaze slyly to the spot where the heckler sat.

Aileen Stanley
New York Capitol

Miss Stanley, accompanied by two pianists, offers "Jimmy and Me," "I'll Never Be the Same" and "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby." Miss Stanley possesses a pleasant voice and her efforts were well received.—H. P.

Anna May Wong (2)
Baltimore Century

Miss Wong appeared with "Hollywood on Parade" and has an act, with piano accompaniment, in which she gives some dramatic as well as comedy and jazz work. She starts with a dramatic Chinese specialty song, and recitation in Chinese and then a translation. Then she goes into her "An American Girl" song and "Boys Will Be Girls and Girls Will Be Boys," thanking the audience in Chinese, French, German and Jewish.

Winifred LeBlanc
New Orleans Orpheum

This charming young miss with the demure smile did not even win a place in the RKO amateur contest, probably because she forgot to have her crowd there to applaud, but someone connected with the house was impressed by her work, with the result that she was booked for a week to sing with the orchestra. Working in an aisle, under the glare of a white spot and handicapped by a weak opening routine, she manages through sheer charm to put over "Mardi Gras." The customers are walking in and out as she sings and her voice is not of the strongest, but her appearance, the almost shy manner in which she sings, goes a long way to putting her over. She phrases nicely and with a showman to train her should become a strong act.

Frank Stever
Baltimore Century

Stever sang effectively the opening song of "Chains" in a prison scene. He was dressed as a ragged jailer. The chorus of girls, in chains, went into a dance, Stever finishing the song.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

Dave Jones and Peggy
Denver Orpheum

The act is introduced by two unprogrammed girls who act as mistresses of ceremony and also assist in the act. After a comedy entrance, Dave and Peggy dance together and are followed by Dave Kraft, who does an acrobatic dance on a twin set of stairs. Jones and Peggy do thir ballroom tap number, which they introduced in "The Little Show." All five are on for the finale and the applause is heavy.

Jean and Lynta
Detroit Fisher

This pair offer a rag doll dance and from all appearances the girl has several times her share of joints. Her partner is an attractive boy whose appearance is a considerable addition to the act. One for any audience.

Fritz and Jean Hubert
Detroit Michigan

Here is a bit of inebriate pantomime that is a riot. Thunderous applause followed the exit of Fritz and his sister, who returned for a bow and a thank-you speech.

Wallin and Barnes
San Francisco Fox

This dumb but limber pair, in the guise of sailors, get a lot of laughs with their listless air. They wobble aimlessly about the stage with no apparent effort but keep perfect time to the music.

Ivan Livoff
Detroit Michigan

This is a brief acrobatic bit worked into the final. What there is of it is good entertainment.

Lewis Twins
New Orleans State

The blondes do a precision tap which is rather the usual thing.

Lita Grey Chaplin
Omaha Orpheum

Lita Grey Chaplin displays her talents as a blues singer. The singer opens her act with a recitative song impersonation from the earlier days. She tells in song what impressions Ted Lewis, Ethel Barrymore, Bing Crosby and Sophie Tucker had on her. To impersonate Ted Lewis she uses a small crushed topper hat and a cane. "Walking on Air" and "Without a Man" are the two songs which bring her a round of applause. She has her own accompanist. Her stage appearance is generally very pleasing, but the reception from the house is not particularly pronounced over that for the other acts.

Arthur (Street Singer) Tracy
New York Palace

Opening with his well known theme song, "Marta," Tracy gets a fine reception on his entrance, and, accompanied by his pianist, proceeds to sing several popular songs into a "mike." His rendition of "Paradise Lost," with a most effective recitation, proves his ace and clicks. Called back, Tracy favors with "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." This name act should draw anywhere.—H. P.

Frank DeVoe
New Orleans Orpheum

This personable young man with the witty remarks and the confident manner lets the audience speak for him. After singing over twenty minutes of song, stopping the show and singing some more, he still had them wanting more. The majority of his songs are light affairs, done in a comical manner, with laugh-getting remarks interpolated, but he does pull out the sob stops for one. His "Mama's Growing Young, Papa's Growing Old," despite its age, took the house. It's surefire entertainment.

The Funnyboners (3)
Baltimore Hippodrome

The trio went into their act around a microphone; one at the piano. Songs were "Theme Song," "Down in Mexico," an imitation of Stoopnagle and Budd, then "Ding Dong Daddy," some old jokes and another song.

INSTRUMENTAL

Alex Hyde and Orchestra (13)
New York Palace

The efforts of Hyde and his all-girl orchestra of talented musicians, and a charming singer named Ruth Burns, were well received. The pianist offers a tap dance while playing, followed by a trio singing the "Scat Song." Alex then follows with a violin solo of "My Silent Love," the repeat chorus a la Fritz Kreisler, receiving a nice hand. In the finale the band plays Tschaikowsky's "Fourth Symphony." It's an entertaining act, capably directed by the likable Alex Hyde.—H. P.

Buddy Rogers
New York Capitol

Opening with his radio theme song, Buddy takes to the drum for a hot rendition of "Somebody Stole My Gal," during which one member offers a comical bit at the xylophone. John W. Green, popular composer, is then introduced, and plays a selection of his own compositions including "Coquette," "I'm Yours," "Out of Nowhere," "Living in Dreams," "Rain, Rain Go Away," and "Body and Soul," earning himself an enthusiastic reception. Raymond Baird then offers a difficult clarinet solo to a nice hand, after which Buddy offers a travesty on Hollywood. In the finale Rogers proves that he plays several instruments well. This act should please anywhere.—H. P.

AND CIRILLINO
"The Happy Hooligans"
FAMOUS ITALIAN CLOWNS
FEATURED ON THE REOPENING BILL AND HELD OVER FOR SECOND WEEK
ROXY THEATRE
NEW YORK CITY
Direction—WEBER-SIMON

COMEDY

Leon Errol (2)
New York Capitol

After a three year absence from Broadway, Errol proves that his "inebriate business and rubber legs" still make the customers laugh. Assisted by a man who acts as a butler, Leon proceeds to wreck a number of antiques, this business funny throughout. Later in the show, Errol's letter-mailing bit is sure-fire for laugh. —H. P.

Daphne Pollard
New York Palace

Miss Pollard is a throwback to the comediennes of oldtime vaudeville and her efforts, in hick costume, provide plenty of laughs. In the finale, her love scene with a policeman on a park bench is sure-fire. This audience liked her immensely.—H. P.

Florence Robinson
San Francisco Golden Gate

Petite and saucy Florence Robinson, with a wealth of freckles and titian hair, adds gaiety to this week's bill. She dances, and this is enjoyed, but it is her clever verbal sallies and extemporaneous fun that really make the hit.

Jay C. Flippen
New York Capitol

Flippen, with his famous cigar manipulations, acts as master of ceremonies for the show and is liked. His offerings include several gags and anecdotes which are funny. A good man for any bill.—H. P.

NOVELTY

Three Olympics
New York Palace

Two boys and a girl offer a routine of acrobatics on roller skates. This flash act should be a good opener for any bill.—H. P.

Monroe Bros. (2)
Denver Denver

This starts as a tramp act, with the brothers asleep. Using a huge spring tank they get the laughs with their antics. One peels off his "coat" and finds it is a pair of pants. The other enters with music in hand, and mouth moving as though singing. He turns and shows a portable phonograph strapped to his back.

Vernon Rathburn (5)
Baltimore Hippodrome

This starts with a novelty dance of funny figures in radium against a black drop, turning to a dance of a skeleton that removes its head and is revealed as a girl, when the lights on on. Next comes a man with a bass saxophone in solo with comedy interruption by another with a baby sax. This is followed by a girl in a burlesque ballet and toe dancer. Then comes a younger sax player in some fast scale work. The act winds up with all members in a sax rendition of "St. Louis Blues." It went over well.

Evans and Mayer
Denver Orpheum

Ray Mayer is a red-shirted cowboy with a two-gallon hat, and an only average foil for Edith Evans. They try a line of chatter that's not so hot, and she sings "That's My Idea of Heaven," with a pleasing voice.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

TED CRAWFORD (Phoenix Orpheum), recently presented perhaps the funniest organ solo that he ever has offered. It introduced the last word in wild tongue-twister. Using the idea that women are braver than men, Crawford called his solo "Heroes Are Born, Not Made." To prove his theory, Ted called upon the women separately, likewise the men, to sing the almost impossible lyrics and parodies to currently popular songs. It took real bravery to sing the "Fish-Sauce-Shop" parody to "Blue Heaven," and from the hearty way in which the women, especially, participated, Ted had to admit their superiority, though the men joined in equally heartily with their applause at the finish.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans Loew's State) is doing organ solos again after they had been abandoned for several weeks. Her short little offering, entitled "It's the Bunk," proves to be genuinely funny. Based on the fact that song writers write for money, not art, she opens with an explanation of her purpose to the melody of "It's the Girl." Follows a song which a night watchman must have written, says Miss Rives, going into "O Lord, You Made the Night Too Long." A husband whose wife deserted him writes "Humming to Myself," while the audience sings it, and the close comes from the pen of a presumably homesick lyricist, being "Lullaby of the Leaves."

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing RKO). The "Adopted Son of Flushing" put over another of his entertaining organ novelties and as usual had the entire audience joining in the fun. The song, "Voice of the RKO," which Bernie always uses to open his programs, is sort of a paean to this audience and the finish of it always calls for lusty applause.

Bernie opened his "singing class" with a clever parody to "Roll On, Mississippi," and followed it up with an oral introduction and talk on the balance of the program. The numbers used for singing were "Night When Love Was Born," "Clouds Will Soon Roll By," and then a group of three numbers, "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Covered by the Moon" and "Good Night Sweetheart." The "Merry Widow Waltz" was played by Bernie, rhythmically, softly, and in varied and pleasing combinations for the finale. Bernie rates and receives good applause as usual.

FRANCIS "GUSS" FARNEY (Salt Lake City Capitol), brought back to this house for the anniversary program, proved to everyone's satisfaction that he is just as popular with this audience as the day he was let out for the summer, and from the way the patrons responded with applause at the close of each of his solos, he most certainly should be back before long as the featured attraction at this house.

His solo for this week was a novelty of the composition "Dizzy Fingers," which he played terrifically fast. This type number, with its tricky passages, is seldom heard correctly presented on the organ. Farney is undoubtedly the best organist in this section, from a standpoint of musicianship, personality and ability.

ARMIN FRANZ (Detroit Fox) calls a solo "Ship Ahoy," and then on slides between lyrics attempts to cajole his audience into singing with rough, sea-going language, all in the best of humor, of course. His program includes "I'm Hummin' to Myself"; "Lies," an oldtimer; "Night Shall Be Filled with Music," and "My Mom." His efforts brought fair response and a good hand.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

The first concentrated step toward repopulating the vaudeville stages of America has been undertaken by Radio-Keith-Orpheum in its recent "Opportunity Revues," which were presented for the past six weeks in RKO theatres throughout the United States. . . . To date thirty-five winners have been given contracts and within a fortnight they'll all be in New York for a two-weeks' rehearsal for the "National Opportunity Revue," which will open in one of RKO's New York theatres for a 40 weeks' booking. . . . Bobby Connolly is scheduled to stage the revue. . . .

Sophie Tucker, the "Last of the Red-Hot Mammas," currently playing the Capitol, has been breaking attendance records in every spot in which she has played. . . . Yes, sir, even in these hectic days. . . . Just prior to this engagement, Miss Tucker's appearances called for five record breaking weeks at the Dells in Chicago. . . . Following her appearances at the Capitol she goes to the Paradise and other Loew circuit houses. . . .

The newest Fred and Dorothy Stone musical show, "Smiling Faces," which relighted the Shubert theatre last Tuesday, has in its cast a troupe of the world-famous Murrial Abbott Dancers. . . .

An orchestra leader and an organist were standing in idle conversation at the stage entrance of their theatre. . . . Asked the ritualistic "Is business pretty good here?" they chorused speedily and in no soft tones, "We Hope Not!" . . . At the time, both artists were out because of a temporary straight picture policy which explains. . . .

All you out-of-town members of the world renowned "Noon Day Club" will be happy to hear that Childs' 46th witnessed a foregathering of many of the old clan. . . . Ted Meyn (the name is Mine) flew in from Kansas City to have lunch with us. . . . Herbie, formerly of the Saenger and for the past five months featured at Shea's Buffalo, and over WBEN, drove down with his charming wife's brother, a Mr. Miller, and is back on the job by this time. . . . Last week Arthur Gutow of Detroit dropped in for lunch, as did Leo Weber, who just returned from Europe. . . . Arlo Hults, who was also in K. C., is back in town with his beauteous better half who, incidentally, is the girl who posed for a number of well known national advertisements. . . .

OVERTURES

HARRY SILVERSTADT (Brooklyn Metropolitan) capably directed his orchestra through the difficult overture, "Slavische Rhapsodie." It is surprising to note the great job an orchestra of only 12 musicians can do when they are under good leadership. It is due to the clever arrangements of Silverstadt that this small orchestra plays as if it were much larger. This stirring concoction of Slavic melodies gave the audience an entertaining ten minutes and earned a grand reception for the popular leader and his orchestra.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) and Arsene Siegel, organist, resort to one of their old favorites for stirring up interest, in a program entitled "A Musical Debate." Benavie opens with a brilliant presentation of "Dance of the Hours." Siegel's slide tells the audience he can surpass that with one hand, and as proof offers "By the Waters of the Minnetonka" with one hand behind his back. Benavie requests the audience to sing "Hummin' To Myself" with the orchestra, and they respond well. Siegel then takes over the audience's voices with "In My Hideaway." The return of the orchestra is "The Bells of St. Mary's," given a touch of originality through the distribution of the chimes. Siegel declares novelty is his forte, and proceeds to give imitations of various things. Then orchestra and organ combine in "The Pilgrim Chorus" from Tannhäuser.

JOE FULCO (New Orleans Loew's State) offers a short overture consisting of "It's So Beautiful" and "You're in the Palm of My Hand." Fulco and his orchestra work in the pit earnestly, not displaying much showmanship but doing their work well, catering to the rabid type of jazz which the customers seem to like.

FRED SCHMITT, (Denver, Denver) celebrated his 7,000th appearance at this house as orchestra leader last week, and pleased the audiences with some of his violin solos. The introduction was comprised of his own cadenzas, and was followed by "Sweet Mystery of Life," a "Mazurka," and the closing was also his own composition. He used "End of a Perfect Day" for a fadeout. Schmitt and his orchestra are one of the best and most consistent draws the Denver has. He has led the orchestra from the opening of the theatre.

Vivienne Fay Heads Roxy Ballet

Vivian Fay of the "Vanities" has been selected as premiere ballerina to head the Roxy theatre ballet corps. Albertina Rasch will act as consultant to Frank Cambria, and other dance numbers will be presented by Russell Markert's 32 Roxyettes.

Radio Team at Theatres

Stoopnagle and Budd, radio comedy team, will engage in an extended tour of personal appearances at Midwest theatres in St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Detroit and other cities. The team begins a new series of radio engagements on Labor Day over a national WABC-Columbia network.

Another Station for NBC Chain

Station KDYL in Salt Lake City has became an associate station of the National Broadcasting Company. KDYL replaces KSL as the NBC Salt Lake outlet.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 11 — September 10, 1932

PLEASE, MR. OCHS!

THE New York Times is a great and fine newspaper, and that is why we can get so hotly annoyed by it. Someone who writes for the editorial page thinks very little of the motion picture, and continually lays upon the whole of the art the sins of the individuals. We might as fairly credit Mr. Adolph Ochs with what Mr. Bernarr Macfadden does. Now comes The Times, and this writer, quoting the while from two great Organs of Bellyache, the New Republic and The Nation, to say that the "movies have corralled the majority which prefers the obvious and the stereotyped" so that ". . . the people who want drama which is original, stimulating and related to life are surely going to get it. The movies are actually forcing inspiration and initiative on the theatre." This under date of September 2, 1932.

The New York Times editorial would have been much to the point and very correct, in some few respects, if it had been written about 1914.

The difficulty with the standard editorial page utterance of the New York Times on the subject of the motion picture is that it is written with an attitude which assumes that there is something sacred about the art of the stage.

Now we ask you, if the stage can be made intelligent only by having the masses taken away from it, who gets the credit and the glory—and if any, what?

THE unhappy passing of Paul Bern takes from the creative forces of the motion picture one who can ill be spared. He made the final exit in his forty-second year, the eighteenth of his motion picture career, with a rich background of experience and attainment and the bright prospect of important contribution and progress to come. Mr. Bern was very considerably more the scholar and the thoughtful student of the screen than some of his more spectacular contemporaries. A charter member of what may be called the Hollywood production community, he could laugh at its foibles while defending it. His most earnest assertion was: "Anyway, Hollywood is the best producing machine evolved, thus far."

A SPECIALIZED AUDIENCE

THE use of the motion picture, all too often thought of as exclusively the servant of the amusement business, goes quietly along extending its fields of application as an instrument of publication. Just now at hand are the new figures from Mr. M. F. Leopold on the circulation of the Bureau of Mines film library for the fiscal year ending June 30, last. The 1,817 reels served 26,103 audiences, or 3,037,795 persons.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN DAYS

SEPTEMBER, golden rod and schooldays are here again, and in this issue the first of the new season's School and Screen sections, in which Rita C. McGoldrick resumes and continues Motion Picture Herald's endeavour to adequately inter-relate the interests of this industry of the motion picture and the purposes of education in those products and sectors of activity which are in sympathy. The first year of School and Screen achieved the most substantial success which has ever attended any such effort. Building upon that now, it is to be anticipated that the motion picture exhibitor and the educator will find a wider appreciation of the possibilities and an increasingly ready acceptance. The motion picture industry can find School and Screen, and the line of public relations involved, of large service.

UP-STAGE, BACKWARDS

MR. LAWRENCE LANGNER, a director of the Theatre Guild, and a producer, speaking to the Silvermine Guild of Artists up in Connecticut the other night, made a plea for the return of scene painting in the theatre, "to liberate it from the interior decorators." Mr. Langner is annoyed at the realism of the three dimensional set. Anything he may be able to do further to flatten and conventionalize the stage will be a service to the screen.

COINCIDENCE

A FEW weeks ago we came back to the office one sultry afternoon from a banking house confab way "downtown," where our advice had been sought on a project which contemplated inspiring a motion picture calculated to speed recovery from "the depression" by holding certain business falsehoods and foibles up to ridicule, along with some economic exposition. On the desk was an announcement and synopsis of "American Madness" from Columbia. We folded it up and mailed it to the bank with the notation: "Quick results, your picture is now made!"

Now Mr. George Brown of Columbia Pictures Corporation has assembled a most impressive array of editorial utterances from across the nation indicating that the picture is proving a service to the public and a contribution to the status of the screen. For instance, The Daily Times of Chicago remarks:

"American Madness" proves that the hopes once entertained of the film as a means of education may someday be realized. Without any effort at preaching or propaganda and as naturally as a man learns by talking with his pals, the audience gets the real lowdown on such subjects (usually considered abstruse) as credit, liquidity, bank reserves and the social functions of banking.

Zulu Show-Business

DURBAN Principal seaport of Natal, east coast of British South Africa. Population 146,000 (57,000 Europeans). Climate, hot and humid. Natives of Zulu family. Chief exports are maize, wattle bark and wool. Also important in sugar and whaling industries. First permanent white settlement in Natal made in 1824 by British. Dutch later attempted an independent state. Durban flourishes as a seaside resort.

IN a communication from a branch of the motion picture industry 'way off in Natal, a British colony in South Africa, Mr. C. Moylan of the African Consolidated Theatres' Princess theatre in Durban, scans the local scene and muses over the distinctions between it and the main body of the industry with which he is constantly in professional contact. It is a letter patently written with a chuckle, as he thought of his brother exhibitors in the Western world—and also, apparently, of daintily frocked, pink and white girls as they might step from their motor cars on Broadway and Main Street to shop sophisticatedly for their entertainment. Mr. Moylan employs his present material to advantage in its natural habitat—but what he'd do with it in New York or London!—

"I often think of the abundance of material for good publicity an overseas manager could make use of, either in America or England, if only a few of the sights commonplace in this town of Durban could suddenly be transplanted to New York or to the West End of London.

"It is quite an ordinary occurrence to see a few Zulu belles in their native costumes studying the stills outside the theatre. Here, of course, they can be seen in any part of the town, at any time, and nobody takes any notice of them. I like to imagine, however, the excitement they would cause outside one of New York's leading cinemas.

"Many patrons also arrive and depart in the kind of conveyance shown on this page. What would happen if half a dozen of them suddenly drew up and unloaded passengers outside the Capitol in New York? I'm sure the manager would rope them in for a week or two for publicity purposes.

"A good vestibule display could be made out of a 'Zulu Wurlitzer' (native performing on a local make of xylophone), particularly if a native Jesse Crawford could be found to play it, with a well-known conductor doing a war dance and conducting with an assegai at the same time."

RADIO TAX INCLUDES SOUND PARTS; ELECTRICS PLAN TO APPEAL RULING

Five Per Cent Tax Would Raise Cost of Parts to Exhibitor; RCA, Erpi to Plead Radio and Theatre Are Separate Fields

Would Affect Vacuum Tubes, Reproducing Units, Power Packs, Electric Transcription, Amplifiers, Speakers

The Federal government has declared that the five per cent radio manufacturers' tax is also applicable to certain parts used in theatre sound reproducers and RCA Photophone and Electrical Research Products are preparing to appeal to Washington for relief. If the electrics are successful, exhibitors will be relieved of a burden in the nature of increased costs on vacuum tubes, reproducing units, power packs and electrical transcription records, amplifiers and speakers.

The taxability of these parts hinged on a single phrase of Section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1932, which levied a five per cent manufacturers' tax on apparatus "suitable for use in connection with or as part of radio receiving sets." On July 29, a manufacturer requested a ruling by the Federal Revenue Bureau as to the interpretation of the words "suitable for." The government agency replied the other day that "where it is found that any of the articles enumerated in section 607 of the Act have been or are being used in a radio receiving set, they are considered as 'suitable for' use in connection with or as a part of such sets and are taxable." Tubes, reproducing units, power packs and other parts are mentioned in Section 607.

Complete theatre sound reproducing systems are not taxable as such, but the ruling said that "if electrical transcription records or phonograph records are used in such systems, they are subject to tax," and continuing, "also, any parts used therein such as the tubes, power packs and reproducing units enumerated and specifically taxed by section 607."

It is further stated that "the fact that vacuum tubes are sold for a nontaxable use"—as for theatre systems—"does not exempt them from tax."

The legal departments immediately commenced a study of the recent ruling and found that the government made itself quite clear in the matter. It was then decided by RCA Photophone to appeal in an attempt to convince the authorities that radio and theatres are different amusement mediums and in view of the fact that the last Congress definitely mentioned radio exclusively in the tax bill, theatre parts should not be included. In the meantime, according to an RCA official, it was decided to interest ERPI in making a joint appeal, which will be taken within a few days.

Although the five per cent is a levy on manufacturers, it is understood that they will pass along the tax to theatres and others by increasing factory prices to dealers, which in turn would raise prices to consumers accordingly. It is illegal to pass on as such a manufacturers' tax to dealers or theatres, but apparently the factories may get around this merely by raising factory prices on the grounds of an increase in manufacturing costs.

Tax experts and legal departments and executives of important manufacturers and the motion picture electrical companies were quietly debating the situation for many weeks before a ruling was sought at Washington. Interpretation of the tax measure differed insofar as the taxability or suitability of theatre sound parts is concerned. When the problem was first presented to officials, they pointed out that where theatrical vacuum tubes, amplifiers, speakers and other parts are not suitable for radios, even though manufactured by a combination radio and sound system company like RCA, they are not subject to taxation. However, at that time some few weeks ago, Washington authorities pointed out that the "suitability" of the apparatus and not the use to which it is put controls its taxable status. Officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau then went into a huddle and the new ruling is the result.

While omission of the word "suitable" would have made possible the exemption of theatre parts, it was explained last month by the Bureau that such action would have greatly intensified the difficulties of tax administration, since it then would have been necessary to follow each piece of apparatus from original manufacturer to final user to determine the use made of it. By applying the tax to all material "suitable for," the work of collecting revenues under Section 607 has been simplified. In the meantime, theatre owners may be compelled to pay added charges for accessories.

In reporting preliminary discussions of the situation, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in the issue of August 6, said, in part:

"The bureau is not 'hard boiled.' Officials are said to recognize that if two theatre sound systems are manufactured, one of which uses parts suitable for radio purposes and the other employs material which cannot be so used, the former is at a great disadvantage if held subject to tax. They have no desire to work a hardship on anybody, it was learned, but they are faced with the task of interpreting the law in conformity with the apparent intent of Congress—if they fail to do so, Congress will censure them or the United States Supreme court will hold their action invalid.

"Because Electrical Research Products cannot engage in radio merchandising, having been barred from the home field by terms of a patents agreement of the large electrics, that company makes few vacuum tubes for theatre systems which are also adaptable to radios. But RCA Photophone, which is one of the largest radio manufacturers, makes several theatre tubes which are suitable for radios and vice versa.

"An executive of one important tube distributor declared that in the event the Government ruled to include theatre vacuums, his concern would be forced to pass on the levy to exhibitors in the form of increased costs of manufacturing because competition in the field is so keen, he said, that an additional 5 per cent might spell the difference between profit and loss."

Warners May Try Exclusive Runs

The latest in the exclusive run movement involves Warners and RKO, with the former understood to have a desire to study the plan for possible use in at least a few situations, and RKO definitely voicing opposition against it.

Whether Warners will adopt a broader policy on exclusives depends entirely on the success of a possible try-out in two or three key Warner houses in the east. Loew's-Metro, first to adopt the selling and playing of certain films exclusively to selected theatres, is understood to have designated Richmond, Virginia, as a situation.

General discussion among exhibitors regarding the possible effect was followed this week by word coming unofficially from RKO that the plan will not be considered for theatres of that circuit.

Loew's Declares Dividend

Loew's, Inc., has declared a quarterly dividend of 70 cents on the common stock, payable September 30 to stockholders of record September 5. This is the dividend action postponed a few weeks ago when lack of a quorum prevented directors from meeting.

EXHIBITORS NAME STORIES

Sex Conspicuous by Its Absence Among the Dramatic Types Cited in the HERALD's Survey of the Nation's Theatres

Out of all suggestions for motion picture story material made by American exhibitors, the "sexiest" is William Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

Having been willing to approach that close to the erotic, ostensibly under the protection of academic classicism, these retailers of the motion picture veer away from all such, and with certain casual nods toward the romantically adventurous, assert their faith in the appeal of sentiment.

Those long conversant with the likes and dislikes of the American exhibitor, in business and elsewhere, will recognize this expression of his attitude toward story material as merely a confirmation. It has come in response to a survey conducted by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, in which the exhibitors were asked to name any books or plays which they would like to see produced for the screen. It comes also at the beginning of a new season, and at the end of one during which the exhibition branch of the industry frequently found itself engaged in condemning what Hollywood was giving it to sell.

Criticism Is Constructive

To appreciate the true tenor of the responses, of course, one must understand that the suggestions were not made in direct criticism of any group of product. The inquiry was arranged to obtain only a positive result. Many of the stories cited are typified in pictures being constantly released, while a few were produced in the days of the silent film. What analysis of the replies interprets these exhibitors as saying is simply this:

"Let us have pictures exploiting the variety of emotions common to all of us and experienced daily in the normal pursuit of Life's great experience."

In this interpretation, the love interest restrict itself to its generally accepted social aspects, at the same time extending itself to those other manifestations of the emotion which civilization has given us. Parental and filial love. Friendship. The love of man and woman predominant, of course, but less as the sheer biological urge that it has come to be in certain schools of post-war thought.

Against the Sensational

The absence of titles suggesting stories dependent for their appeal upon sensational love interests, however, is not the only phase of the survey permitting interpretation. One notes abundant taste for action built around a strong or picturesque character, for narrative elements drawn from the soil. Perhaps these exhibitors have noted an ascendancy of superficial plots concocted to exploit some passing public interest reflected in the day's news, or built upon phenomena merely modern. One senses that they wish to express in their suggestions a desire for stories more concerned with the eternal. One exhibitor goes so far as to fear the present Hollywood technique in this respect entirely. "I wouldn't want to see my favorite the way they are making them now," is his sole comment.

Many of the titles were accompanied by interpretive or explanatory comment, and this has been taken into account in the general analysis of the returns. With specific reference to the love interest, one exhibitor remarks: "I would be delighted to see the filth cut out of pictures as was promised

With Few Exceptions, Selections Reflect Showman's Desire for Pictures Based on the More Permanent Values of Life

. . . "More home-spun yarns." . . . "Action without the absurdly impossible; more children pictures, less foreign, gangster and Broadway settings." . . . "Forget cycle pictures." . . . "Give us pictures with musical background."

This last remark is eminently representative. The suggestions that more pictures incorporate in their narration some type of musical performance, amount to a general appeal. "We're bleeding for a cheerful type of feature and music," declares one showman, and he has plenty of supporters, both in thought and emphasis.

Concerning the titles listed elsewhere, it is to be noted that they were chosen as typical examples of all those cited. In many cases the same story was suggested by a number of exhibitors.

by Will Hays—the drunkenness, the bedroom and bath scenes of nude women and the illicit love of some other men's wives. There never was a stronger demand than now to clean up the screen. No wonder the small town theatres are going broke."

Other typical comment is: "It's the stars and the good company that make pictures B. O." . . . "Cut out the problem plays; give us more romance with plenty of comedy injected into the stories." . . . "Less slow love dramas and wild-eyed women."

MGM Arranges Exclusive Runs

All M-G-M feature product is to be shown exclusively in Loew's Midland, Kansas City, according to an announcement by John McManus, manager of the house. Negotiations are in progress with United Artists, as well, to obtain the productions of that company for exclusive runs.

The policy will become effective on September 16, with the opening at the theatre of "Grand Hotel." Certain pictures may be given extended runs at higher admission prices, in accordance with the plan, it is understood. Under the arrangement no other Kansas City theatre except the Midland will show M-G-M product, and no other theatre elsewhere in the territory will show that product until 90 days after the run at the Midland.

Hippodrome on Way Out

The Hippodrome, large and once most spectacular theatre in New York, will be sold for commercial purposes in the near future, thus concluding its interesting career. RKO's negotiations to renew its lease on the house have failed, and the City Bank-Farmers Trust Company will dispose of the property.

Publix Merges Districts

Publix theatre and real estate departments supervising a large portion of the Midwest territory, are being centralized at Des Moines. The Kansas City real estate office has been moved there. Evert S. Cummings, Publix Omaha district manager, has been transferred to Des Moines with the merging of the two districts.

Sidney Kent to Coast

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, will leave New York on Saturday for the Coast studio.

EXHIBITORS MAY MEET IN CHICAGO SEPT. 18 OR 19

Lightman in New York to Confer With Myers on Proposed Harmony Gathering of MPTOA and Allied States

The proposed harmony meeting between leaders of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by M. A. Lightman, of Memphis, and Allied States Association, of which W. A. Steffes, of Minneapolis, is president, will in all probability be held in Chicago on September 18 or 19, when these two exhibitor organizations jointly will discuss theatre conditions and attempt to launch concerted efforts to effect better relations with distributors.

Mr. Lightman arrived in New York Wednesday to arrange for the attendance of MPTOA leaders from the East and also to confer with Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied, regarding a program for the Chicago conference. There has been no definite understanding as to subjects which will be discussed, but Allied intimated some few weeks ago that its platform of eight planks concerning so-called "evils" and "ills" of the industry would be brought before the delegates.

The MPTOA officials have been particularly active of late seeking adoption of the 5-5-5 uniform contract, and following inability of Mr. Lightman to convince distributors that the agreement should be offered theatres as an alternate form, it is expected he will go to Chicago with an outline for "a new deal," contractually, which he said his organization will demand.

Following a formal invitation by the Allied board of directors to Mr. Lightman and his organization to meet jointly in what will be virtually a "peace conference," Mr. Myers last week telegraphed Mr. Lightman that he believes an "informal discussion between representatives of the two organizations may be productive of good, and certainly can do no harm." In the meantime, Lightman is attempting to induce state exhibitor associations not affiliated with either MPTOA or Allied to join in the Chicago conferences.

One important phase of the discussions may revolve around the answers to a detailed questionnaire which Allied has sent to all state affiliates. From the information to be gathered, Allied hopes to effect rental reductions on new product and to determine sales policies of large distributors. The questionnaire asks Allied exhibitors for the following information concerning Columbia, Educational, Warner-First National, Fox, Universal, MGM, Paramount-Publix, RKO and United Artists:

"What companies are demanding increased rental for their 1932-33 product?

"What companies have lowered their prices for 1932-33 product?

"What film companies are attempting to sell you percentage pictures?

"Have you been approached on any exclusive runs? If so, by what companies?

"What companies' product have you purchased for 1932-33?

"What film companies are insisting that you buy their complete block of pictures?

"Are there any film companies insisting that you purchase shorts or newsreels before accepting contracts? If so, which ones?

"What companies have cooperated with you with adjustments on 1931-32 contracts?

"What companies refused adjustments on 1931-32 contracts?

"State briefly whether any company is giving protection to chain theatres over your theatre."

Member exhibitors also are being provided with form sheets which they are invited to return to Allied headquarters with comment on the nature and performance of specific productions.

Sisk Announces Appointment Of Eckles to Studio Post

Eddy Eckles this week assumed the duties of publicity and advertising director at Radio studios in Hollywood, succeeding Don Eddy, according to Robert F. Sisk, in charge of advertising and publicity for the various RKO interests, who arrived in New York from Hollywood on Tuesday.

Mr. Eckles was editor of the RKO theatre house organ, which he instituted four months ago, and recently was appointed exploitation director at the studio. Perry Lieber, in charge of fan magazine publicity, succeeds Mr. Eckles in charge of coast exploitation.

Court Upholds Chaplin

Winfield Sheehan said that Fox had entered into contract with Lita Grey Chaplin in good faith when informed on the Coast that the Los Angeles court had banned the appearance of her two sons in pictures as asked by Charlie Chaplin, their father. W. I. Gilbert, attorney for Mrs. Chaplin, is considering an appeal.

Wilson, Stunt Flier, Killed

Al Wilson, noted screen stunt flier, was killed in an airplane crash at Cleveland on Labor Day when his machine locked with an autogyro in midair. He had doubled for screen stars in Hollywood for the past 13 years and served the Canadian air forces during the World War.

Louisiana Tax Effective

A new Louisiana corporation franchise tax went into effect last week. The levy is at the rate of $1 for each $1,000 capital, surplus and undivided profits of each corporation, provided that the minimum tax be not less than $10. Returns must be made as of August 1 each year.

Jack Fuld with United Artists

Jack Fuld, previously associated with Paramount, United Artists and Columbia in exploitation work, has returned to Hal Horne's staff at United Artists to assist in a special drive on the Mickey Mouse cartoons released by the company.

QUIGLEY GOLF TOURNEY AT LAKESIDE OCT. 15-16

The sixth annual Hollywood Motion Picture Golf Tournament sponsored by the Quigley Publications will be held at Lakeside Country Club October 15 and 16. Jack L. Warner is general chairman and George Marshall is treasurer. Entries should be sent to Quigley Publications, 6305 Yucca Street, Hollywood.

Wilby, Kincey Take 20 Publix Houses in South

R. B. Wilby of Atlanta and H. F. Kincey of Charlotte, N. C. have completed an operating deal with Publix in the southeast whereby they take over the operating management of all Publix houses in 14 southern cities, effective September 17.

Publix will continue actual operation in only two towns of the entire southeastern district, Miami and West Palm Beach, Fla., as a result of the deal, which is in reality an extension of the present operating agreement between Publix and Mr. Kincey. Approximately 20 additional Publix theatres now come under the operating control of Kincey and Wilby. Publix will retain its ownership interest in all the houses, however, according to R. J. O'Donnell, Publix southern director.

Kincey and Wilby, operating under the temporary firm name of Kincey and Wilby Company, now have an operating interest in more than 100 theatres in 37 cities in the southeast.

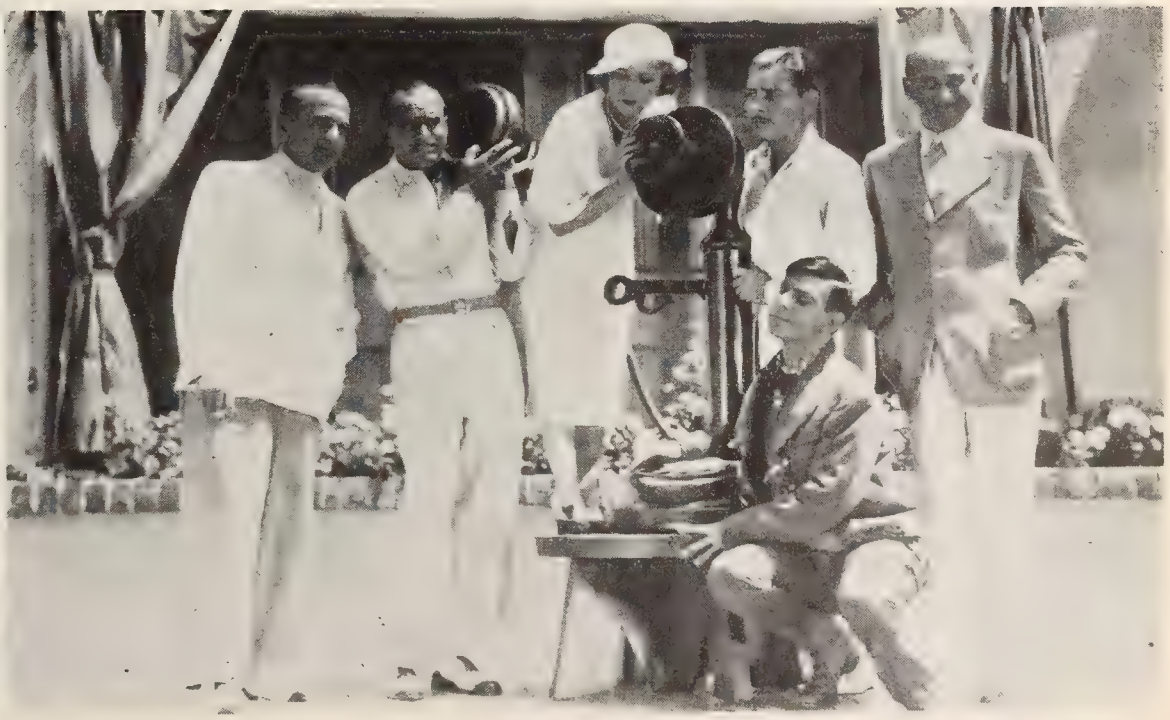
The theatres involved in the deal include the Paramount, Atlanta; Tivoli, Rialto and State in Chattanooga; Alabama, Birmingham; Tennessee, Riviera and Strand, Knoxville; Paramount, Nashville; Paramount and Strand, Bristol, Va.; Paramount, Charlottesville, Va.; Paramount and Strand, Lynchburg, Va.; Paramount, Newport News, Va.

Myers to Aid Prosecution In Federal Restraint Suit

Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of Allied States Association, national exhibitor organization, will appear in New Orleans in the fall to assist the federal government in the prosecution of the restraint of trade cases recently filed against United Theatres and major distributors. The appearance of Mr. Myers was confirmed by Henry Lazarus, secretary of the Allied Theatre Owners of Louisiana, on his return to New Orleans from a board meeting of the national organization in Chicago.

Hugh Wilkinson, celebrated locally as a criminal lawyer, and attorney for Allied, who returned with Mr. Lazarus, will also assist in the prosecution, it is understood. Mr. Wilkinson is a partner and personal friend of Huey P. Long, senator from Louisiana.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

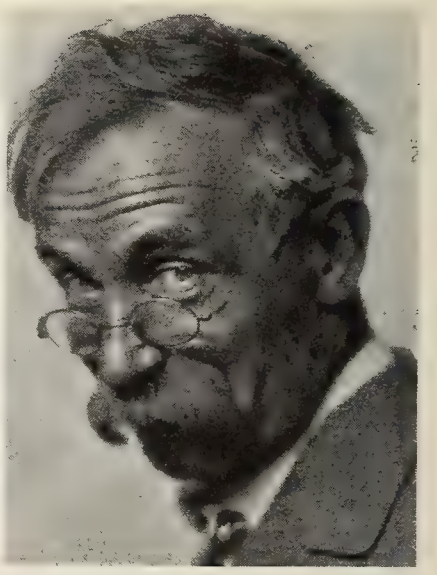


APPRECIATION. (Above) Betokened in a placque presented by the Fox sales organization to James R. Grainger, general sales manager. Harry Buxbaum, New York manager, made the presentation. Others: Joe Lee, New Jersey sales manager; George Blenderman, New York booker; Felix Jenkins, assistant secretary of Fox; Jack Sichelman, assistant sales manager; George A. Roberts, personnel director; E. C. Grainger, Eastern divisional sales manager; Glenn Griswold, vice-president in charge of public relations; I. J. Schmertz, Cleveland; Moe Sanders, office manager; E. H. Collins, exchange supervisor; Irving Maas, foreign department; and Clayton P. Sheehan, general foreign manager.

GIVEN CONTRACT. (Below) Thus becoming another new feminine personality of the screen assured of regular assignment. She is Lorena Layson, who has been signed to a long-term agreement by Warners'.

EUROPE BOUND. Katherine Hepburn, stage star recently signed by RKO Radio, as she arrived in New York the other day to sail for a vacation abroad.

OKAY, LONDON. By way of celebrating the announcement of a three-year agreement between United Artists and the British and Dominions Film Corporation, these U. A. folk tele-talked the other day with Jack Buchanan and other London stars. Shown making an event of it are Al Jolson, Douglas Fairbanks, Eddie Cantor, Ronald Colman, Mary Pickford and Joseph M. Schenck.



MOULDERS OF OPINION. One as a maker of the world's entertainer-instructor; the other as a great newspaper editor. They are Carl Laemmle, head of Universal; and Arthur Brisbane of the Hearst organization, a recent Coast visitor.

OCEAN FLYER. (Above) Capt. James A. Mollison, shown with his bride, Amy Johnson, also a flyer, as in "Dual Control," which they made for Powers Productions.

GETTIN' WED. (Right) Andy Clyde (shown here as he appears in Educational comedies), who has announced his engagement to Elsie Tarron, dancer and singer.

EXOTIC. (Below) And that's why Lupe Velez is so naturally native in "Kongo," MGM story of tropical romance with Walter Huston.

PREVIEW IN JAIL. As city officials and fiilm people attended a special showing of World Wide's "The Last Mile" at the Los Angeles county jail. In the foreground are shown Ben Verschleiser, World Wide producer; Tony Archer, exchange manager; Eugene Biscaliuz, under-sheriff; William I. Traeger, sheriff; Mayor John C. Porter; Roy E. Steckel, chief of police; and Samuel Bischoff, director of "The Last Mile."

WINSOME. (Left) A mild word for it, of course, since she is Tallulah Bankhead. Miss Bankhead's latest is "Tinfoil," MGM picture with Robert Montgomery in the male lead.

RECOVERED. (Below) Mae Clarke, now recovered from her recent illness, as she appears in the feminine lead of World Wide's "Breach of Promise."

SMILIN' THROUGH. To another birthday. Production on "Smilin' Through" was halted at the MGM studio for this party, which was in tribute to the star of that picture, Norma Shearer. And with her around the big cake (can you count the candles?) are Donald Ogden Stewart, writer; Fredric March, Mrs. Howard Hawks, Irving Thalberg, MGM production executive and Miss Shearer's husband; Sidney Franklin, Albert Lewin and Leslie Howard.

HUGE SUMS SAVED EXHIBITORS AS RESULT OF NEW UNION AGREEMENTS

Salary Reductions Ranging from 5 to 25 Per Cent Agreed Upon by Operators, Stagehands and Musicians Locals

Negotiations Undertaken Without the Strife of Other Years; Keen Competitive Employment Situation Is One Factor

Economic conditions and a keen competitive employment situation which has been created by so-called "outlaw" unions not affiliated with the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators (AFL), has compelled union projectionists and stage hands and musicians to agree to reductions in salary scales throughout the country. In practically every situation where labor contracts with theatres expired on September 1, or Labor Day, as is customary, exhibitors were successful in gaining reductions ranging from 5 to 25 per cent.

For the first time in many years, the unions negotiated without stormy strife which has marked previous contract discussions and adjustments. This year, the unions appear to have a full realization that prolonged general business conditions of the past have influenced box office receipts accordingly, and that theatre owners in many territories are no longer reluctant to engage members of the socalled "rump" locals when they are unable to come to terms with the IATSE affiliates. Generally, theatre owners submitted demands and the unions were found receptive. There was little thought on either side of strike or lockout. Both appeared to be actuated only by a desire to reach a compromise fair to all under the present trying conditions. While union employes and theatre managers and operators for circuits have been engaged in negotiations for a few weeks, men in the booth, in the pit or backstage continued at their posts awaiting conclusion of negotiations.

While no definite combined figure is available representing yearly savings to theatres, it is apparent that enormous sums will be gained in theatre operation and overhead as a result of the new union contractual relations, a factor in readjustment of the economic structure of theatre operation.

The one-man-to-a-booth agitation of last year did not appear in negotiations this season. About 2,500 projectionists were involved in the dispute in August and September, 1931, when exhibitors in 15 large cities, representing some 1,100 theatres, fought to reduce the compulsory staff of operators, many being successful in their demands.

At the outset of discussions this season, William C. Elliot, president of the IATSE, sounded a keynote for the 695 affiliated locals to follow in their negotiations with exhibitors. Diplomacy and caution to avoid strikes was urged by Mr. Elliot, who pointed out that while no general formula for adjustment could be applied to negotiations generally, all unions should take into consideration local business conditions. That the unions did give thought to conditions is obvious, what with Baltimore unions accepting a 15 per cent reduction in wages, Allied obtaining a 25 per cent reduction from the scale originally demanded in Cincinnati territory, theatres in Columbus expecting a 10 per cent cut, Detroit theatres having agreed to a new scale whereby reductions are made in existing contracts, and further reductions expected at Houston.

When Kansas City houses negotiate a contract in November, they hope to lower the present scale. Negotiations are under way in Los Angeles. Labor Day found Milwaukee houses operating on a reduced scale. New Haven unions have been in dispute and there the matter stands on a picket basis. New Orleans circuit and independent houses expect a 20 per cent reduction. The situation in New York is tense, what with a hectic battle under way between rival unions.

Houses in many Ohio towns secured reductions, and so did others at Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Minneapolis and Tampa.

The situation in Philadelphia affects musicians, principally. Portland, Ore., operators are negotiating with indications of cuts resulting. Contracts were signed at Providence. At Racine, Wis., competitive unions have begun to picket each other's theatres. Richmond operators and others in Virginia have accepted a 5 per cent cut. Picketing is causing minor difficulty at St. Louis, while a new scale at San Antonio calls for a 20 per cent reduction. All is quiet along the San Francisco labor front, after a 10 per cent reduction. Unions at Washington, D. C., quietly agreed to reduced scales. Wilmington contracts have expired, but negotiations have not been launched. The situation throughout Canada is practically the same as in the United States.

The status of the labor situation throughout the country and in Canada follows in detail:

Baltimore Operators Take 15 Per Cent Cut

At Baltimore new contracts were signed with the AFL operators' and musicians' unions, by which the operators receive a 15 per cent cut and the musicians a 10 per cent reduction, starting September 1. Negotiations with the stage hands come up for final settlement September 7. The musicians for the Century and Keith's became $75 for seven days with a minimum of 10 orchestra men. Leaders' scale is $112, but George Wild, at the Century, receives more.

Most residential houses employ operators in the local Independent Operators' Union, not affiliated with AFL.

Birmingham Contracts Do Not Expire Until January 1

There is little to report in the matter of Birmingham projectionist contracts. Most houses will make contracts January 1. Only two or three of the second-run houses have made new contracts for September 1. In each case union projectionists will be used at practically same wage scale.

Several months ago the union projectionists of the city met with theatre owners and accepted a voluntary cut of about 10 per cent.

Chicago Situation Quiet After 20 Per Cent Cut

Following an agreement reached last January when operators took a 20 per cent cut and agreed to one man in each booth for smaller houses, which was preceded by lockouts and bombing of 16 theatres, the situation at Chicago has since been peaceful. Any discussion of changes in existing agreements are not due until December.

Ohio Houses Go In Heavily For Lower Wage Scales

The labor situation at subsequent runs in Cleveland is not an issue. Early in June a new wage scale was signed providing for a reduction ranging from 17 per cent to 22 per cent.

The first-run situation in Cleveland is reported to be in process of negotiation at present. It is understood Harland Holmden, of the operators' union, is in New York now working on a deal for the new season, which will cover all Cleveland affiliated circuit houses.

Frank Phelps, Warner theatre division manager, reports that deals have been closed in Massillon, Lima, Portsmouth, Elyria, Findlay and Canton providing for lowered wages. C. E. Prinsen, district manager of Publix theatres, joined Phelps in securing settlements.

Mansfield and Youngstown are still open. No deals have been closed. It is stated that operators in these two towns have taken no cuts and are unwilling to consider a reduction.

Toledo started going non-union last spring and has been getting more so ever since. The Fleischman houses, many of the Charnas houses and the O'Connell houses are being operated with non-union operators. Occasional stench bombs have been thrown, but the disturbance has been slight.

Steubenville has been a troublesome spot. It is reported that inability to reach a wage agreement with operators early in the summer was the cause of closing three major houses in the town. These theatres are reopening.

Akron has also been operating many houses with non-union operators, but stench bombs, explosions and picketing have been the answer to this practice. Some houses are still persisting in the policy, but the majority changed to union operators.

Allied Gets 25 Per Cent Cut Under Demands of Cincinnati Men

Cincinnati exhibitor members of Allied, after a 10-day conference with Clyde Weston and E. J. Tinney, vice-presidents of the IATSE, agreed upon a settlement whereby operators are to be employed at $62.50 weekly for Class A houses, $50 for Class B, and $45 for Class C, one man in the booth. They represent an average reduction of 25 per cent from the scale originally demanded, which resulted in employment of operators from the Movie Projectionists' Union of America, a local organization, the outgrowth of a Cincinnati trade school. Members of the operators' local sent out pickets. In several cases stench bombs were hurled.

IATSE headquarters ordered the operators' local to withdraw pickets, and when this was not done, the charter of Local 165 was revoked, and more than a dozen members, including the president, vice-president and business agent, were expelled. The local now has been reorganized and rechartered as Local 327.

Isaac Libson, independent theatre operator

not affiliated with Allied, has come to terms with the local for his downtown subsequent-grind houses. The new scale is $55 weekly for the Star and Bijou, and $62.50 for Gifts, as compared with $60 and $65 respectively. The contract is for two men in the booth, double shifts. Keith's, downtown first-run operated by Mr. Libson, is to continue with a double shift of two men each, although a sizeable wage cut is understood to have been agreed upon.

In a reported agreement between RKO and the IATSE, eight stagehands will be retained for the "vaudefilm" houses, and two maintenance men backstage at the straight picture houses, in addition to the operators. It is understood that the circuit houses will participate in the wage cut.

Columbus Houses Expected to Work on 10 Per Cent Cut

A satisfactory agreement for next season is reported to have been reached with the operators' union at Columbus by J. Real Neth, who controls one downtown and five suburban independent houses. Nothing definite is reported from RKO and Loew's, each operating two houses. However, under a temporary agreement, operators in the downtown houses are working under a 10 per cent cut for a 10-week period, which expires soon. Such an arrangement in a new contract is said to have the approval of Mr. Elliott.

Dallas Seeking 100 Non-Union Operators

Efforts were made at Dallas by theatre circuits to line up at least 100 non-union projectionists to man their machines in case an unmendable breach comes between the unions and the theatres. It is probable that the unions will work out a satisfactory working agreement and wage scale, but this time theatre circuits and individual owners are going to be prepared.

Operators at Denver Take A Five Per Cent Cut

Labor conditions at present are not serious in the Rocky Mountain region. Operators signed for another year with Harry Huffman and his four houses in the RKO-Huffman pool and also Huffman's two neighborhoods. Publix also has signed in Denver. The contract with the four Fox houses has a year or so to go. The operators took a five per cent cut, but the same number will be employed. The Tabor, Rialto and Aladdin wanted to cut to one operator on a shift. Most of the neighborhood houses are using one.

At Colorado Springs Publix wants to cut their booth cost by eliminating a man a day, keeping two on, in their three theatres there, the Paramount, Rialto and America, at $50, $45 and $40 per man respectively.

At Pueblo the Rialto asked for $42 scale for seven days of eight hours and one preview a week at no extra cost.

Publix is also negotiating for cuts and other concessions in Greeley, and Grand Junction, Colo. Fox wants reduction in Cheyenne and Rawlins, Wyo., and Ft. Collins, Colo.

The Orpheum and Denver are negotiating with the musicians and stage hands and both sides are optimistic in regards to a settlement.

Des Moines Theatre Owners Operate Own Projectors

In three instances in Des Moines machines in suburban houses are being operated by owners of the theatres, who in turn are hiring men to act as managers. Harry Mitznick, owner of the Ritz, has been in the booth since August 1, when the contract with the operator ran out. Park Roebuck, owner of the Ideal, has been in the booth since fall, and Sam Ellman, of the Grand, East Des Moines, has been operator at his house since June 1.

In a number of Iowa cities union operators have agreed upon a cut. At Boone operators took a 20 per cent cut on June 1. Operators at Fort Dodge agreed on August 1 to a 15 per cent cut.

Detroit Working Harmoniously After Cuts Were Agreed To

Satisfactory negotiations have been completed between the Detroit projectionists' union and all local theatre owners, except Publix-Michigan Theatres, a group ordinarily employing 40 to 50 projectionists, which demands a 20 per cent reduction but is expected to compromise at 10 per cent. Publix contracts expired August 31.

Terms of new contracts between projectionists and owners are:

RKO Uptown, employing four projectionists at $102.50 each, a reduction of $2.50 a week per operator; RKO Downtown, employing four at $109 each, a reduction of $11 a week per operator; Fox theatre, employing seven projectionists at $102 each, a reduction of $8. This theatre will continue to operate on a straight picture policy until differences with the stagehands' organization have cleared.

Allied and independent theatres (contracts signed in July) have signed old contracts with a rider carrying a 20 per cent reduction until November. This affects more than 100 projectionists.

Further Reductions Expected At Houston Theatres

Negotiations have been under way at Houston for several days, with contracts announced as set by the RKO Majestic, and still pending for the Metropolitan, Loew's State, Kirby, and three Horwitz theatres.

The start of vaudeville at the RKO Majestic September 30 necessitated adjustments with musicians as well.

No trouble is anticipated by Houston exhibitors. Sixty days ago Houston operators voluntarily took a 10 per cent cut, creating a new scale, from $56.50 to $70. They probably will be asked to take another 10 per cent cut before new contracts are signed September 30.

Stagehands' scale is now from $56.50 down, and musicians from $58 down, with leaders drawing 25 per cent more. Exhibitors say stagehands will be asked to take a further cut.

Kansas City Contracts Stand; Independents See Another Cut

The labor situation in the Kansas City territory has been comparatively quiet since the settlement last fall, preceded by bombings, one death and the breaking up of a "rump" union.

Last year, a settlement with neighborhoods was not effected until November 25. New proposals will be submitted November 1, with about 30 days for discussion.

Projectionists' union contracts with the four downtown first-runs in Kansas City terminate January 1, which also is later than usual because of the extended discussions required last fall on salary reductions. The Kansas City IATSE accepted a wage cut last year and circuit and independent exhibitors indicate a further reduction will be asked this year.

Musicians' and stagehands' contracts with Kansas City houses expired September 1. Negotiations are now in progress.

In Kansas City and most larger towns two men in a booth is the rule. In Kansas City, Kan., the IATSE local has branded four neighborhood houses "unfair" and there is some picketing. The Gauntier has obtained a federal injunction against picketing. In Wichita, Kan., the Crawford has applied for an injunction against the operators' union, affiliated with the IATSE.

Negotiations Now On in Los Angeles; Independents Awaiting Results

Circuit contracts with operators at Los Angeles, involving RKO and Fox Wesco, principally, expired on September 1 and negotiations are expected to lower present scales. Independent operators are awaiting termination of the circuit discussions.

There has been no labor trouble during the past year, with the exception of some minor disturbance between the operators and the former Hughes-Franklin circuit, which petered out when H-F disbanded.

Milwaukee Working Under Reduced Salary Scale

Milwaukee exhibitors and IATSE operators reached an agreement providing for a reduced scale beginning last May 1, of approximately 10 per cent for first-runs, to about 30 per cent for outlying houses.

Under the new contract, which will run for another year, operators in the Milwaukee first-runs, except the Wisconsin theatre, are receiving $77.70 for a 42-hour week. The Wisconsin scale is $81.90. Theatres in class 1B, including the Majestic, Miller and Princess, second-run downtown, are paying $65.10 and the Whitehouse, also a downtown second-run, $63.

In Class 2, which includes de luxe neighborhood houses, the old scale of $2.05 an hour was reduced to $1.75, and Class 3 from $1.85 to $1.50 with a $49.50 week minimum. Theatres in Class 4 are paying $52.80 for booth costs, and $42.90 is the Class 5 figure.

Four Publix Theatres at Minneapolis Seek Cuts

Four Publix theatres at Minneapolis demanded operator wage reductions. They are the Aster, loop house; the Empress, Arion and Rialto. A number of other Publix houses and 17 independent theatres are concerned in the present controversy.

Negotiations for wage reductions have been carried on over a period of months.

Unions Lose Ground in New Haven After Dispute

Harry Arthur's circuit in the New Haven territory is expected to go non-union September 12. Mr. Arthur obtained an anti-picketing injunction against the union which refused to arbitrate differences following a strike.

New Orleans Negotiating 20 Per Cent Cut for All

Twenty per cent cut in all salaries with the same working conditions as last year—these are the terms the New Orleans Associated Theatre Managers are presenting musicians, operators and stagehands unions. At present, operators receive $50 to $65, with two men to a booth in the larger houses; stagehands average $70; musicians, employed only in Loew's State and RKO Orpheum, receive $77 for 28 shows a week.

It is said that managers are demanding a 20 per cent cut from musicians and projectionists.

Independents are handling their situations separately, but their problem is not serious.

New Orleans stagehands signed a contract for a 7 per cent salary cut, but retaining the regular number of men to a crew.

Projectionists are understood to have made some kind of concession already to circuits.

Present salaries and working conditions are: Stagehands, $70 a week for six days and six-hour days, size of crew varying. Projection-

Musicians, $75 a week; minimum number of men clause, working hours about six.

New York Situation Difficult Between Competitive Unions

The situation in New York is tense, with IATSE union locals at odds with members of the non-affiliated Empire State Operators' organization formed some time ago. The IATSE affiliates have taken their fight before the public in a vigorous newspaper campaign in leading dailies, in which an appeal is made to theatregoers for support on the ground that houses operated by IATSE locals are in the hands of "safety crews."

Some 260 circuit and independent theatres in boroughs have signed new contracts to continue with Local 306, and the names of these theatres are listed daily in newspapers as "fair to organized labor." The Empire State organization also is vigorously presenting its case to exhibitors. The leading circuits, including RKO, Loew's, Skouras, Warner, Paramount Publix and others, agreed to continue as heretofore.

House-for-house picketing was started this week by Empire State union for every theatre in which its men are working and is being picketed by its rival, Local 306.

It is understood that approximately $515,000 will be saved by Century, Manhattan and Lee Ochs circuits in switching from Local 306 to Empire State union. The contract with the circuits is for five years. Under terms of the deal, Century will save $255,000; Manhattan Playhouses, $190,000, and Lee Ochs, $70,000.

Pickets of 306 are parading Century's 26 houses.

In the last week, Empire has replaced Local 306 men in 105 theatres. Practically all independent exhibitors in New York are dickering with Empire, and it is said that although Randforce signed with Local 306 for another year, the circuit is willing to switch to Empire at the end of the new agreement.

Instrumental in the move for change in union affiliations is said to be the success of Springer & Cocalis in fighting Local 306 in 26 of its theatres. The circuit recently won an injunction against open-air shows in neighborhoods where it was represented and is a defendant of the suit filed by Local 306 against the local exchanges, the Hays organization and the New York Film Board of Trade.

Arguments for a preliminary injunction to restrain distributors from further alleged boycotting of open-air theatres operated by Local 306, were heard the other day before Supreme Court Justice Alfred M. Frankenthaler.

Local 306 charges the distributors and several independent theatre operators with restraint of trade and discrimination. It seeks to compel the distributors to service its three open-air theatres, and also seeks $200,000 damages from the defendants.

Musicians and Stagehands Problem at Philadelphia

On October the 30-day deadline for negotiations will be reached at Philadelphia. Because of musicians' difficulties last season, the new contracts are dated from November 1.

The problem this year concerns musicians and stagehands, the projectionists apparently being satisfied with present arrangements. The musicians will be especially hard hit with the closing of the Mastbaum theatre, which employed 65 to 80 in the pit. With the exception of the Earle, no house in the Stanley-Warner circuit has any definite need for musicians, though the melody men undoubtedly will fight to hold the 130 men contracted for last season by this company for Philadelphia and Camden. William M. Goldman has tendered the musicians' union an offer for the coming season. The agreement calls for a cut in personnel, it is understood, and the outlook is for a long period of arbitration.

Hamrick to Negotiate With Portland Operators

Negotiations will be opened soon between John Hamrick and the union operators at Seattle to decide on rates and hours at his various houses, which now include one first-run, the Oriental, and three subsequent-run houses, the Blue Mouse, Alder and Music Box.

Situation Peaceful at Providence Showhouses

Contracts with operators at Providence already have been signed and stagehands and exhibitors now are in a huddle to fix the new schedules.

Downtown theatres experience little labor trouble, whatever flare-ups come usually are in small neighborhood houses, where a few stench bombs have been placed, but these could not be attributed directly to labor difficulties.

Competitive Unions Picket Each Other's Houses at Racine

Racine, Wis., theatregoers were treated to an interesting spectacle recently as the result of four neighborhood houses reopening with projectionists belonging to a local Wisconsin union. Operators of IATSE Local 460 immediately started picketing, whereupon members of the opposing union, Local No. 110, picketed two downtown theatres employing IATSE operators.

Police sought in vain to stop Local 110 from picketing the downtown theatres. Finally an agreement was reached whereby Local 460 indicated it would call off its pickets if 110 did likewise.

In Racine five neighborhood houses closed July 2 when operators of the IATSE refused a cut of 33 1-3 per cent. Four theatres, the Crown, Douglas, Granada and Uptown, reopened August 13 on a six months' contract employing members of Local 110. Picketing by both organizations followed.

Richmond, Other Virginia Operators Take Cut

In the Richmond area all is calm. Elmer Brient, manager of Loew's, acted as chief arbiter when operators virtually declined to accept a proposed 20 per cent pay reduction. They finally offered to accept a 5 per cent reduction, effective September 1, and continuing until the expiration of the two-year contract. Operators in the Petersburg and Hopewell areas did not fare so well. It is reported the Petersburg local has accepted three cuts in pay in the last six months, a total of 25 per cent. In other areas cuts were made earlier.

Picketing Causes Trouble In St. Louis Territory

At St. Louis union projectionists and stage hands continue to picket the Gayety theatre in large numbers. The pickets pass out handbills announcing the show is "unfair" and yell that pronouncement rather lustily as police look on.

New Scale at San Antonio Calls for 20 Per Cent Cut

Peace reigned in San Antonio, operators, stagehands and musicians signed new wage contracts a few weeks ago, the unions taking as much as a 20 per cent wage slash.

Under the new scale four operators remain in all theatres with a weekly wage of $55 and $50. The old scale was $65 and $62.50.

Stagehands took a cut from $72.50 to $55. Each theatre is working one stagehand, all houses being under a straight picture policy.

San Francisco Quiet After 10 Per Cent Cut

San Francisco is now enjoying the most harmonious situation it has had in years. There are no theatres employing non-union help. A few months ago projectionists and stagehands accepted a general 10 per cent reduction in salaries.

The musicians union is continuing the arrangement of the past few years as to salaries and numbers of men employed.

Tampa Houses Sign New Deal With 10 Per Cent Cut

All Tampa theatres except one, which has been operating with non-union operators, have signed a new contract with union operators, or have signified intentions of signing.

Early in the summer the union agreed to a 10% cut, though contracts did not expire until September 1st, and the new contracts call for a continuation of the present scale.

Washington Unions Cooperate And Take Salary Reduction

Theatrical employees in the District of Columbia will work during the coming 12 months at considerably lower wages.

The projectionists have already settled, accepting cuts of 10 to 15 per cent, and stagehands in the legitimate houses have agreed to a reduction of 7 per cent.

Negotiations are still under way, however, between officials of the stagehands' and electricians' unions and officials of the Loew and Warner circuits. The stagehands are being asked to agree to a cut of approximately 25 per cent and there is also a suggestion of a 50 per cent reduction in personnel. It was indicated that lesser cuts would be acceptable.

Musicians are also being asked to take heavy cuts and are attempting to work out a less onerous schedule.

Wilmington Contracts Expire, But No Arrangements Discussed

A. B. Williams, of Brack-Ex, Delaware, business agent of the operators' Local 473, of Wilmington, said neither the projectionists nor theatre owners have negotiated new labor contracts as yet, nor has a date been set. No trouble is expected.

Labor Difficulties Do Not Exist In Canada, Checkup Shows

No theatre labor difficulties are in prospect anywhere in Canada, but some disputes of a year or more standing still hold, such as a lockout of operators at Ottawa and Hamilton by independent owners. Last spring Famous Players negotiated new wage scales with operators providing a second cut within a year for this circuit. Allied exhibitors of Ontario threaten to demand a reduction to one operator in the booth, but this battle may not develop until the provincial legislature meets at Toronto next February. Some disputes have been noted among small theatres where owners decided to take over projection themselves when holding government license.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

UNCLE SAM'S official photographer "muffed" the taking of motion pictures for the records of the B. E. F. rioting and eviction at Washington. This part of Government business is handled by the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps which dispatched an officer to New York last week to negotiate with certain newsreel companies for the acquisition of prints of the evacuation. The newsreels frequently help out the Government, and in return they are given inside tracks which bring them pictures of air or fleet manoeuvers, and so on.

One newsreel crew, permanently stationed at Washington, was covering some affair at the White House when the B. E. F. battle broke out and failed to arrive on the scene until it was nearly over, obtaining only a few mild shots of the close of the dramatic episode. The company then tried to sell its competitors and the Government the idea that it would be a good thing for all to hold out scenes of the actual battling, supposedly because of the effect it "might" have on the public and the possible antagonistic reaction toward the administration for ordering troops to the scene. When the competitive reels heard what prompted the "suggestion" they gave the rival a "Bronx cheer" and left the tardy newsreel to its grief.

A young and aspiring exploitation man for one of the large theatre circuits wrote a letter to Governor Roosevelt the other day telling the Democratic presidential candidate that he would serve the cause by "stump" speechmaking in his territory. "The purpose of this letter," he told us, "was to get a finger in the political pie. This will make my job easier, because when you have a finger in the political pie you can get anything you want—perhaps additional patrons for our theatres!" What an appetite for pastry is possessed by that boy, Al Zimbalist, who works for Warners out Jersey way!

"Of course," said the actor, "they have things there that everybody can't see, special bodies of kings and such stuff, that they showed me specially."

It is a replica of the International Music Hall.

MICKY FREE PICQUET CAROLINA'S HANDY MAN

Likened to Micky Free, handy man of the dragoons in one of Charles Lever's stories, to whom the commander remarked, "We did not know what in the devil to do with you when we took you on, but now we realize that we would not know what in the devil to do without you," tribute is paid editorially to Charles W. Picquet, president of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, in The Pilot, Aberdeen and South Pines, North Carolina.

"The ideal Micky Free, the man who creates happiness every time he smiles," is how the editorial writer describes Mr. Picquet, who finds time for his exhibitor organization while operating the deluxe Carolina theatre at Pinehurst, N. C., polo center and winter playground of America.

OLIVER HARDY, who returned from Europe the other day with Stan Laurel aboard the steamer Paris, did not fall for the racketeering line of the alleged French steamship baggage master who called him at his New York hotel trying to sell him "real stuff, right off the same boat" which brought the pair back from a vacation. But Mr. Laurel did—and how! Stan, who, by the way, is the "business" man of the team, paid $18 for the contents of three authentic looking Heidsieck Champagne bottles, which upon investigation proved to be nothing stronger than carbonated water.

The next day, another schemer phoned Mr. Laurel and read to him a flowery and highly flattering editorial which had been supposedly written for publication in an important periodical. Mr. Laurel was highly appreciative and said he would accept a few copies which the caller offered. Later, a messenger arrived at the hotel and handed Stan an envelope containing rough galley proofs and a bill for $17.50. No money changed hands this time.

We visited with the Metro comedians before they returned to Hollywood and learned that they have never bought a story in their somewhat lengthy and successful career on the screen as a team. They write their own material and Mr. Hardy said 80 per cent of the situations develop on the set.

The thrilling race between Gar Wood and Kaye Don on Lake St. Clair in the two fastest speedboats in the world brings to mind the excitement which followed the first Harmsworth Trophy races in this country on Huntington Bay, Long Island, in 1908, when E. C. Schroeder, of Jersey City, attained the astounding speed of 36.11 miles per hour, and J. Stuart Blackton, then a pioneer motion picture producer, heading Vitagraph in Brooklyn, predicted that powerboats might some day go a mile a minute. They laughed at Mr. Blackton, but before he quit he had the satisfaction of going at the unbelievable speed of 40 miles an hour. Wood and Don have done better than 100, with ease.

ADOLPHE MENJOU doesn't look half so bored with the world in real life as he does on the screen, and maybe that's a lot better. There was even a kindly expression in his blue eyes as he sat talking to reporters down in New Orleans the other day, while en route to New York and Europe. He refused to discuss his "public" and even went so far as to say that he doesn't care a whoop for fan mail on the grounds that few are intelligent while most are silly. Whether others in Hollywood agree is another matter.

Stars should be kept from the public, particularly from personal appearances, he believes, because of all things, they find out "you are just an every day person like them." Then bingo goes the glamour!

Another thing, Mr. Menjou said, "I have become a type." Of the "few characters" in Hollywood, he mentioned Douglas Fairbanks, for his "jumping"; Mary Pickford, for her "curls"; Charles Chaplin, for his "foolishness," and Harold Lloyd, for his "glasses."

The talk about Constance Bennett receiving the highest salary in Hollywood was "all the bunk," the actor insisted. Miss Bennett, he explained to the press, merely got $30,000 a week for ten weeks and this only made $300,000 a year. Evidently a mere trifle; others were much better paid, he concluded.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

SEPTEMBER! The gates of the new theatrical season have swung open. At the same time, the children of the nation are assembled and organized to answer the classroom bell. The parents and teachers of Young America with a new awareness of the importance of selected entertainment as well as scholastic education in the programs of their boys and girls are developing ways and means to correlate the two. Within the past two years three thousand film councils have sprung into being. Each council represents a combination of clubs ranging in membership from 10 to 350 units. This whole activity expresses an anxiety on the part of the intelligent American mother and dad to see that the family's entertainment is highgrade as well as brightly entertaining.

On the other hand, the theatre managers of the country, well aware of the growing force of the organized groups, have expressed themselves in conventions and at club meetings as being eager to offer the fullest measure of cooperation. The average manager is happier and more successful when his community leaders are with him in his enterprise. He considers it important to give to his town or city something of constructive value. He wants to be a useful respected citizen.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD through the School and Screen service presents a plan to bring these factors into closer synchronization. It offers each month an advance study of the current motion pictures that are important to the student, with an analysis of each picture for the use of parent, or teacher, in the home or the classroom. Simple questionnaires on outstanding films are designed to enlarge the young person's experience by making him conscious of the fact that his entertainment may contribute directly to his education. For the child mind is, in itself, a highly sensitized film. It records impressions of sounds and words; but it is particularly susceptible to visualized information. The screen, used with wise guidance, is the greatest teacher of them all. The South Sea Islands, the igloos of the frightening north, a trans-Atlantic flight, the Olympic games, the technically perfect pictured record of a solar eclipse, the laughter and tears of the fundamental human values in daily living are best translated and presented through the motion picture.

The screen is rich in mental calories and vitamines. It has its indigestible bits as well as its caviar and stimulants. But the answer to growth lies in the regulation of diet; and this task has been recognized and accepted by the Parent-Teacher Associations, the teaching profession as a unit, by Films Councils, church and club groups and thoughtful citizens. Through the endorsed lists distributed monthly by various national organizations, and the cross section list of selections offered by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, public groups and theatre men may select with new assurances the type of entertainment for the millions of young people who are to be the idealists, the builders, the voting citizens of this nation's next generation.

Down to Earth

At this moment of psychological turning point in world economics it is typically American to rebound with a philosophy of acceptance and a willingness for laughter. And so the new theatrical season has opened in a burst of comedies, all needed and each one clever and acceptable for family audience entertainment.

Will Rogers has sounded the keynote in his delicious bit of film satire, "Down to Earth." In this, he is the tired business man and indulgent father to a highly expensive family. The banks with which he is connected fail. He cannot accomplish the necessary loans. His son gambles with the few securities that have weathered the storm, and loses them. The father has to face the discharge of servants and the breaking up of magnificence. From an inflated life of luxury his family have to come down to earth! All this is accomplished in the best Will Rogers manner, in a humorous play that is punctuated by his soundly sensible, barbed comments on a situation that has affected every family. Will Rogers as a buffoon may have made funnier pictures, but he has never appeared more truly in his own role than in this delightful family audience picture. There is a highly important lesson in it for young people.

Mr. Robinson Crusoe

Most important in the current month is Douglas Fairbanks' adventure story of the South Seas, which he has titled with proper grace, "Mr. Robinson Crusoe." The genius that made Mr. Fairbanks famous has come to the top again, like good cream. Only he could have done it, and he achieved his objective with consummate skill.

The film tells the story of a group of sportsmen yachting in southern waters bound for Sumatra in quest of big game. As the boat finds its way among the dreamy, uninhabited islands of the South Seas, Mr. Fairbanks, as Steve Drexel, wagers he could live like a king on one of these islands without any assistance but Dame Nature's. The wager is taken. Steve takes off his wrist watch and shoes, poises for a moment on the ship's rail and dives for the lonely shore. His dog plunges after him and they are off on a grand adventure.

The tropical island is a paradise of wild beauty. There are parrots and monkeys, a luxuriance of wild fruits. The intrepid Steve has to find fresh water, make tools, plan a habitation. This part of the film is a classic, not only in photographic splendor, but in delightful entertainment quality. From a great shell, a strong young tree and a sturdy vine he makes his ax. He collects a monkey, a parrot, whose monosyllabic lines are the best in the picture, two goats, a giant turtle and, of course, his dog. He puts them all to work for him and with a grand inventive genius sets about to harness all sorts of gadgets to bring him the comforts of Park avenue.

Movie Crazy

Harold Lloyd has contributed his biennial feature which he has styled "Movie Crazy." This picture in no way compares with some of the other things he has done. It smacks of sophistication. It moves slowly in spots, but, like all his pictures, it has gay moments and a few new, hilariously original situations. It tells the story of the small-town boy who dreams of being a motion picture star. Through an accidental mailing he sends the picture of a good looking friend to Hollywood instead of his own. He is invited to go on for a screen test. His blunderings in and out of the studios and the predicaments into which he manages to get himself provide the laughs for a trite story. "Movie Crazy" does not lend itself to the questionnaire purposes of School and Screen, but it is worth noting as one more type of acceptable screen comedy.

Seeing the U. S. A. by States

A highly important series of educational two-reel subjects is in course of production by Motion Picture Classics. In these bright and entertaining little features each state tells its own dramatic story, historically, geographically and pictorially. The map of the state is shown on the screen and then one adventures up and down its highways and lovelier romantic byways. Each state becomes an individual personality with its battlefields and great institutions; its garden spots and rivers; the agricultural pursuits peculiar to its own territory and the factory pursuits that make the state an important link in the nation's chain.

Two pictures of the series are complete, Georgia and Maryland. Georgia has lent itself with beautiful grace to dramatization. Clever cameras have caught something of its gentle, quiet beauty. Its surprising, teeming cities are placed in sharp contrast to its woods draped in hanging moss. Here is the land of the Suwanee River of song and legend; of forgotten gold mines; of important commercial activities. In this film the charm, poetry and importance of Georgia are brought to the screen with a new quality of interpretation. The picture is synchronized with a finely chosen musical score of semi-classical and patriotic selections. This series of pictures is definitely important for Junior Shows and Family Friday Nights. They will lend themselves to important classroom discussion and to composition.

The Newsreels

There is no phase of screen entertainment more important, educationally, than the newsreels. We are inclined to accept so casually the tremendous thing that they offer to us. Within the past week we have been privileged to see, in all our theatres, the exciting pictures of a complete solar eclipse.

Newsreels of this type deserve a longer life. They provide invaluable material for Junior Shows and for classroom discussion. School and Screen will point out in each issue of the coming year the newsreels that should not be overlooked by those groups constructively interested in the intelligent development of their young people.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CLASSROOM

Down to Earth

Fox Films

Will Rogers, Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich, Matty Kemp.

This is a delicious bit of satire on economic conditions as expressed in the humorous and barbed comments of Will Rogers. It tells the story of the harassed financier whose family has been living in magnificent luxury. When the crash comes and he cannot get the necessary loans to save him from wreckage he is obliged to tell his family that the time has come to "Get Down to Earth." Here is a delightful family audience picture with a background of important, plain philosophy.

Describe the following types of comedy:

1. Satire.
2. Musical comedy.
3. "Slap Stick."
4. Broad comedy.
5. Name four motion pictures that you have seen, or read about, which represent the above types.
6. In which class would you place Will Rogers' latest picture, "Down to Earth"?
7. Why do you think Will Rogers is popular as a screen personality?
8. What is meant by the title "Down to Earth"?
9. Why is this picture important at this time?
10. Has this picture a plot?
11. Tell the story of the picture briefly.
12. Describe one "set" of the picture that interested you.
13. Tell three quotable things that Will Rogers said.
14. Why did these seem important to you?
15. What did you consider the best bit of acting in the picture?
16. What did you consider the funniest moment in the picture?
17. What did you consider the picture's climax?
18. Will Rogers is famous for his dry wit and human philosophy. What do these terms mean to you?
19. What part of the picture did you think was exaggerated? Why?
20. What moment of the picture seemed most true?

Write a 250-word composition on "Getting Down to Earth."

Mr. Robinson Crusoe

United Artists

Douglas Fairbanks, William Farnum, Earle Browne, Maria Alba . . . and native chiefs, tribesmen and native girls.

This is one of the most entertaining pictures that Douglas Fairbanks has made. Adventuring into the South Seas, he makes a wager that he could get off the yacht and live on an uninhabited island in comfort without the assistance of any modern or mechanical help. He and his dog fare forth to an island that is a jungle paradise. His inventive genius, the comedy provided by the animals he collects about him and the magnificence of the background make this one of the most entertaining pictures that he has ever made.

1. Where are the South Sea Islands?
2. Name some of the group.
3. Where is Sumatra?

Will Hays and Levee Attend Academy Finance Meeting

The finance committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences meet in Hollywood Tuesday afternoon, with M. C. Levee presiding and Will H. Hays in attendance. Finances of the organization were arranged for and Mr. Levee after the session that "everything is satisfactory financially in Academy affairs."

The Academy has admitted several new members to the actor group. They are Tullulah Bankhead, Lionel Barrymore, El Brendel, June Clyde, Kay Francis, Minna Gombel, Clark Gable, Walter Huston, Alexander Kirkland, Myrna Loy, Polly Moran and Elizabeth Paterson.

MAYBE we're too modest

What do YOU think?

There's been so much shouting around the trade that we were beginning to wonder just how good we are . . . until we took a peep at the records.

- And what a comfort that was.
- "THE FIRST YEAR"... you know what it did in your town for you or (God forbid!) your opposition.
- "CONGORILLA"... hold-out crowds to a land-office business everywhere.
- "REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM" tied with "Bring 'Em Back Alive" as top national grosser for July (M.P. Herald figures).
- FOX STARS copping three out of the first six places in M. P. Herald's box-office star survey.

• WILL ROGERS in "Down to Earth"—going great guns in Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Portland, Cincinnati and Chicago.

• "CHANDU the Magician" with Edmund Lowe and Bela Lugosi coming up. Tremendous openings guaranteed by a ten million dollar radio broadcast (62 stations in 40 states) with bang up thrills to sustain tremendous interest.

• And "HAT CHECK GIRL" with Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon, Ginger Rogers. It shows the heart behind Broadway's flash. Eilers is glorious.

• Maybe we're too modest. But we know you know that the barrel with the honey in it doesn't make the most noise.

A "SILENT" SOLUTION

Milwaukee Exchange Manager Sees Reversion to Silents a Remedy for Present Weakness

That the industry must come back to the silent picture because sound denies the patron that relaxation for which he goes to the theatre, is the suggestion advanced by Charles Koehler, office manager for the B. N. Judell exchange, in Milwaukee, and connected with the picture business for the past 25 years.

Mr. Koehler contends that before the industry will again be able to enjoy business comparable with that in past years, it will have to revert to the silent picture. People, he maintains, come to a theatre for entertainment and an opportunity to relax, but the "talkies" do not permit them to do this. They are obliged to concentrate in order to hear and see and consequently do not derive the enjoyment from the motion picture that they did during the silent days.

Other angles enter the situation, according to Mr. Koehler. There is the matter of people who are deficient in hearing and who as a result do not attend because they cannot completely comprehend or enjoy the picture. The fact that dialogue, rather than action, plays an important part in pictures today does not simplify this problem.

The Whitehouse theatre, in Milwaukee, next to the last house in that city to go to sound, played to as many as 200 to 300 deaf persons per day. This is pointed out as only one example. Mr. Koehler believes there are many others. Then there are the hundreds of foreigners who, before the "talkies," knew enough English to grasp the plot from the titles, but who today are hopelessly at sea when they attempt to follow sound dialogue.

Mr. Koehler is quite emphatic in his contention that if producers returned to making silent films, it would result in the reopening of hundreds of theatres which have been forced to close since the advent of sound. He admits that certain of the larger cities are overseated, but at the same time there are sections without theatres at all. He cites as an example a route from Menominee, Mich., to Norway, Mich., a distance of approximately 50 miles.

Along this route there are such towns as Stephenson, Daggett, Bagley, Powers, Hermansville, Vesper and Vulcan, all of which boasted theatres during the silent days but which today are without houses. It is significant that there is a considerable foreign element in this district and that there are few people driving their own cars. Other situations are comparable in other sections of Michigan as well as in sections of Wisconsin, according to Mr. Koehler.

The exhibitor did not want sound pictures; they were foisted upon him by the producers, and they have driven hundreds of people away from the theatre as a result, says Mr. Koehler.

Sees Increase in Business With Dropping of Bargains

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois, has announced a definite increase in gross theatre receipts since the complete abandonment of "penny-nites" and other bargain arrangements by all houses in the St. Louis district. It was discovered that these artificial stimuli to business failed to conclusively improve business in the long run.

Mr. Wehrenberg and other exhibitor leaders of the territory prevailed upon the owners involved to discontinue the practice. The MPTO president is at the moment concentrating his attention on the elimination of the triple-feature condition, currently threatening St. Louis. He has requested distributors to join the fight against the practice.

Government Action Against Warner Postponed 3 Months

The hearings in the Department of Justice action against Warner alleging that the Clayton anti-trust law was violated in the acquisition of control of First National by Warner, have been postponed for a period of three months by mutual consent of both parties, according to the Warner legal department.

The trial was originally scheduled for September 1, when the application for postponement was made. Under the present arrangement, hearings will be resumed some time during December.

Fox Midwest Withdraws Kansas City Zoning Plan

Government investigation of zoning in Kansas City has been averted by recall of a zoning plan which Fox Midwest had submitted to distributors. The plan stipulated protection for Fox houses over non-circuit theatres. Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox division manager, said the plan was merely suggestive and that he has ordered it withdrawn.

The Kansas City Independent Theatre Owners Association had consulted attorneys who wired sales managers in New York protesting adoption of the proposed Fox system. Independents declared they were prepared to file a complaint with the government in event the plan was adopted. As the situation stands now, uniform zoning is out in the territory. Exchangemen there say any protection arrangement will have to be entered into between individual distributors and individual theatres.

Columbia, U.A. Renew Agreement

United Artists has renewed its foreign distribution contracts with Columbia, extending its release of Columbia product for the new season in the British Isles, India, Brazil, Spain, the Balearic Islands, the Canary Islands and Spanish Morocco.

Under the agreement, United Artists will distribute for Columbia 27 features, six romantic melodramas, eight Buck Jones films, eight Tim McCoy films, 71 one-reel shorts and 24 two-reel shorts.

United Artists has also signed a distribution agreement with British and Dominions, British producer, whereby United Artists will distribute the English product in Great Britain, Australia, India and Canada, and ultimately in all other countries.

Zukor Speaks at Ohio Gathering

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, discussed industry problems Wednesday night in Columbus, at a dinner held in his honor at the Wallick hotel, before a group of 250 exhibitors, newspaper editors and critics and men active in civic and business life in Ohio. Mr. Zukor said large producers are changing their policies in screening stories which will meet with public approval.

The occasion was another in the series of key city talks being given by Mr. Zukor, who already has addressed the trade in New York, Boston and Chicago.

Mr. Zukor arrived in Columbus Wednesday morning and was interviewed by the press. Conferences with local Paramount executives and employes followed, and the group then witnessed screenings of new Paramount product.

Skouras Division Managers Open New York Conference

Conferences between officials of Fox West Coast, Fox Midwesco and Skyros Skouras on circuit matters and new product began in New York Tuesday and will continue for at least one week. Purpose of the meeting is to discuss buys, percentage terms, splitting of product in numerous situations and other details.

Charles Skouras, in charge of Fox West Coast, and District Managers Arch M. Bowles, San Francisco; Frank Newman, Seattle; William Stegee, Montana; Al Hanson, Los Angeles and Southern California, and Rick Ricketson, Rocky Mountain, are in New York.

United Artists Promotes Hilton

Robert Hilton, for several years in charge of the film department of United Artists, has been appointed manager of the company's warehouse in the East. Mr. Hilton will succeed Matthew Singer, who was killed with three other persons in an automobile accident Sunday. Funeral services were held Tuesday at Riverside Memorial Chapel, in New York.

NEW AMPA PRESIDENT

director of advertising and publicity of United Artists, on Thursday will be inducted into office as president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers of New York. He succeeds Ed Finney, also of United Artists.

New AMPA officers for 1932-33 include Rutgers Nielson, RKO, vice-president; Marvin Kirsch, The Film Daily, treasurer; Al Sherman, New York Morning Telegraph, secretary, and the following board of directors: Ed Finney; Vincent Trotta; Mike Simmons; Ray Gallagher, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and Paul Benjamin, National Screen Service. George Harvey was elected chairman of the auditing committee, which also includes Charles Barrell, Western Electric, and Tom Hamlin, of Film Curb Weekly. Glenn Allvine will be a trustee for three years and Paul L. Thompson, Western Electric, continues as national counselor to the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Horne, a graduate of Harvard and a newspaperman of Boston, started in pictures as production manager for Raoul Walsh and Mayflower Photoplay. He was exploitation representative for Famous Players in the Middle West and then managed theatres for Harold B. Franklin in Memphis and for United Artists in Los Angeles. Next he became general manager of Far West Theatres and later operated his own houses in northern California. About two years ago, he arrived in New York to assume his present post.

Thomas A. Branon president of Affiliated Producers, Inc., of Atlanta, has acquired the Majestic Pictures franchise for the southeastern states. Majestic Exchanges is being organized to handle the product.

MAJORS DELIVER ALL BUT 32 IN 1931-32

359 Features Scheduled by 11 Companies Last Season; 296 Completed and 11 "Specials" Released; Six Fill Programs

All but 32 features, of 359 scheduled for last season by 11 large companies, will be delivered to theatres.

A total of 296 have already been completed and an additional 11, comprising so-called "specials" or pictures acquired from foreign companies, have been released.

Six of the 11 companies will complete and deliver full schedules as announced last season and five will not, it was said. Sales executives, in outlining the current status of 1931-32 schedules to Motion Picture Daily, said, in most cases, that the reason for abandoning certain productions was the decline in box-office value of stories originally intended for production. Because of waiver clauses in most sales contracts, the exhibitor retains no claim to scheduled pictures which are unmade at the end of the season, and the producer-distributor, therefore, is not required to make contract adjustments, because of uncompleted schedules. If, however, the producer completes pictures this season which were on last year's schedule, he is required to deliver them on the old contract and the exhibitor is obligated to play or pay for them.

The check-up on last season's deliveries reveals that the following six companies have completed, or will complete, their entire schedules as announced:

COLUMBIA: Scheduled 26; has delivered 24 and will deliver the remaining two.

FOX: Scheduled 48; has delivered 46; remaining two will be delivered this month.

RKO RADIO: Announced 36, but later revised this to 26, which it has delivered.

TIFFANY: Scheduled 12 and has delivered 12.

UNITED ARTISTS: Scheduled 12; has delivered 11, and distributed four additional pictures from outside studios. Will deliver the complete schedule.

UNIVERSAL: Scheduled 26 and delivered 26.

The following five companies will not complete schedules announced for 1931-32:

FIRST NATIONAL: Announced 35; delivered 27, one special and one extra additionally and will deliver one more scheduled feature, or a total of 28.

MGM: Announced 48; delivered 35 and may deliver 47. The company will be unable to deliver the second Garbo picture it scheduled last year, as the actress is not under contract now.

PARAMOUNT: Announced a maximum of 70; delivered 56, and will deliver one more or a total of 57.

RKO PATHE: Announced 21; delivered 17 and in October will deliver one more, or a total of 18.

WARNER BROS.: Announced 35; delivered 26 and two specials; will deliver one more scheduled production, or a total of 27.

"Specials" and extra pictures acquired for distribution probably will total 15 additional.

Fox West Coast Policy Attacked

Allegedly unfair tactics being resorted to by Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., in the Pacific Northwest territory were disclosed and discussed in Seattle this week by a meeting of 30 independent exhibitors from various cities in the state of Washington. According to these exhibitors, Fox West Coast is rapidly buying up all film and the independent exhibitors will soon be unable to procure pictures for exhibition.

The cities involved include Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Bellingham, Everett, Yakima, Wenatchee and Bremerton. First, second and third run exhibitors from these points and other neighboring cities made up the group that met with James M. Hone, executive secretary of the Allied Amusements of the Northwest.

According to the minutes of the meeting, information was given to the group that Fox West Coast Theatres had contracted for all the product of the major producing companies, purchasing first, second, third and fourth runs in Seattle; and first, second and third runs in all cities where Fox has one or more theatres and where there are competitive independent theatres.

"Conditions appear so serious for the independent theatres that the body of thirty exhibitors has decided that if necessary they will call upon the forces that have so efficiently brought relief from this condition in other districts," Mr. Hone said. "If there is no relief immediately from these serious rumors so prevalent, the machinery will be put into motion for relief."

SMPE to Vote On New Officers

Members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have received ballots permitting them to vote on the officers of the organization for the coming year. Dr. A. N. Goldsmith is the only person named for president, and he will consequently continue for another year in the office he now holds.

Nominees, as recorded on the ballots, are as follows: for vice president, A. W. C. Kunzmann, A. C. Hardy; secretary, J. H. Kurlander; treasurer, H. T. Cowling and M. W. Palmer; governors, W. C. Hubbard, R. E. Farnham, M. C. Batsel, H. Griffin.

The Society will hold no fall convention this year. Instead, a meeting will be held on October 5, probably at the Electrical Institute, Grand Central Palace, New York. Arrangements are being made for a technical program, and an informal dinner will probably precede the meeting.

SCHENCK-B & D DEAL HAILED BY BRITONS

U. S. Market Open for Pictures of Merit No Matter Where They Originate, Says United Artists President

by Bernard Charman
of London Correspondent Staff

Considered as one of the biggest breaks ever given to British pictures, the tieups just announced between United Artists and the British and Dominion Film Corporation carries to a further stage the active process of putting the home industry well and truly on the map. By it the product of one of our most progressive studios is assured of entry into every corner of the world film market on even terms with the output of the biggest American concerns.

The initial agreement provides for the handling by United Artists of the entire output of B. & D. studios over Great Britain, Canada, Australia and India, for an extended term of years, and for distribution throughout the United States of selected subjects from each year's production schedule. Joseph M. Schenck places the quantity of British product to reach the American market through this channel at not less than 50 per cent of the total output from the B. & D. stages. In addition, a supplementary contract will extend the agreement to embrace all countries.

Murray Silverstone, chief executive in London of United Artists, told me it was proposed to adapt pictures to the foreign markets by dubbing or other means where the subjects were particularly suitable.

Operative With New Schedule

The arrangement was completed with Mr. Silverstone by Hubert T. Marsh, managing director and chairman of B. & D, after the latter had gone into the matter thoroughly with Mr. Schenck on a recent visit to New York, and becomes operative with the new production schedule on which the English company will enter in October. First subjects to be handled by United Artists will be "That's a Good Girl," starring Jack Buchanan, who will also direct, and "Turkey Time," a new Tom Walls-Ralph Lynn vehicle.

Mr. Schenck also has contracted to take for American distribution the current Buchanan picture, "Yes, Mr. Brown," at present in production, though this feature will not be included in the world handling arrangement.

Contract for Many Years

British players whose names will be linked with the distinguished coterie of American stars listed under the United Artists' banner will be Ralph Lynn, Tom Walls, Jack Buchanan, Sydney Howard, Winifred Shotter, Dorothy Bouchier, Anna Neagle and Elsie Randolph. These names will be linked with those of Chaplin, Fairbanks, Pickford, Swanson, Colman, Cantor and Jolson as the "United Artists of the World."

"The contract is for many years," Mr. Marsh said, "and the mutual intention is that the association will be for all time. British and Dominions productions will retain their individuality.

"By the selection of stars, the employment of some American artists and technical collaboration, a number of B. & D. films will be designed for and secure release in the United States. Greater sums will be spent on negative costs.

"The contracts is based on mutual exclusivity; all B. & D. productions will be distributed by United Artists, and United Artists will not acquire other British product except from their own producer members."

Mr. Marsh also paid a tribute to C. M. Woolf, the Gaumont-British chief, whose company has distributed B. & D. films for several years.

Mr. Schenck, by transatlantic telephone, told the British press that "United Artists Corporation was designed for the purpose of permitting independent stars and producers to express themselves artistically without being controlled by the ordinary mechanics of mass production, and British and Dominions was laid down on similar lines. For years I have been trying to foster such an alliance.

Open to Films of Merit

"Mr. Marsh and myself are convinced that the motion picture business is international in its scope, and I believe the American market is open for pictures of merit, no matter where they originate—and I believe that it should always be so. I have watched British producers and have seen them develop within the past few years to a very prominent place in the cinematic scheme of things, and have always been swayed by the thought of free interchange of ideas with subjects of other nations."

Turnover of British and Dominions under the new system will, according to Herbert Wilcox, director of productions of B. & D., average around £1,000,000 a year, and the program will provide for at least 12 pictures annually. The company has two large stages.

Incidentally, Mr. Silverstone paid a high tribute to the Columbia product which finds its way to home showmen through his hands.

It is felt over here that the home industry is beginning to receive a recognition it has long deserved. When Pat Powers took over American representation of British International it was felt here that English films were beginning to make an international impression, and the big contract recently announced between Gaumont British and the Orient gave that optimism a further fillip. B. & D. has done the thing on a big scale.

This culminating point in the fortunes of B. & D. is the latest phase in the most remarkable recovery in the history of British films. When the reconstruction of the company was undertaken in June, 1929, the company was at rock bottom. That Mr. Marsh, with the assistance of Herbert Wilcox, should not only have restored the company to a state of solidarity but developed it to its present enviable stage is almost a modern miracle.

Paul Bern Ends Life on Coast; MGM Executive

Paul Bern, associate producer for MGM and close friend of Irving Thalberg, production head, was found dead, apparently a suicide, on Monday, in the Beverly Hills home he had presented to Jean Harlow when they were unexpectedly married on July 2.

According to the police, who were called in by Mr. Thalberg, two revolvers, one unfired, were found beside the body of Mr. Bern. He was alone in the house at the time of the shooting, his body having been discovered early Monday by John Carmichael, butler, who summoned Mr. Thalberg and David O. Selznick, RKO production executive and also a close friend of Mr. Bern.

Frenzied by grief over the tragedy, Miss Harlow is reported to have attempted to hurl herself from an upper balcony of her mother's home. The incident was mentioned in a Universal Service dispatch from Hollywood which said that Louis B. Mayer, Metro studio chief, was one of a group which prevented the leap. Also, it was said that Mr. Mayer disclosed that he had received a cablegram from Dr. E. B. Jones, Bern's personal physician, vacationing abroad, which read: "Understand motive. Will leave at once to testify for you and Miss Harlow if necessary." Mr. Bern, it was stated, had been under treatment by Dr. Jones, a nerve specialist, for some time.

R. D. Knickerbocker, who was Mr. Bern's attorney for some years, is reported to have said that a will did not exist, so far as he knew. In that event, the widow will receive half of his estate and the other half will be divided among sisters and a brother.

Mr. Bern, long prominent in motion pictures, was born in Wandsbeck, Germany, December 3, 1889, and was brought to this country as a boy of nine. He attended New York public schools and received his early stage training at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

Following several years playing in small stock companies, and serving as stage manager, Mr. Bern entered motion pictures in 1914, joining a Canadian producing company in Toronto. From 1918 to 1923, he was associated with the Goldwyn company in various phases of production work.

Writing independently, Mr. Bern is credited with the preparation of "The Christian," "The Marriage Circle," and "Men" and "Lily of the Dust," both for Pola Negri. For Famous Players he produced, among others, "Open All Night," "The Dressmaker of Paris" and "Worldly Goods."

Mr. Bern first became associated with MGM in 1925, in 1928 going to Pathe as a director. In 1928 he returned to MGM as assistant to Irving Thalberg, and was at the Culver City studios until his death. He joined MGM originally as a story editor, but continued to come East in search of story material after his promotion to associate producer. Among the films he supervised for MGM perhaps the most notable was "Grand Hotel."

Mr. Bern was 42. Miss Harlow gave her age at the time of their marriage as 21.

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS FEAR NEW RENTAL TAX

October Parliamentary Session To Consider Budget, Added Taxes; Distributors Would Pass on Levy to Exhibitors

by W. M. GLADISH
Canadian Correspondent

The film trade in Canada is becoming more and more inclined to believe that the old axiom concerning taxation and death should be revised to read: "More taxation." This is due to the expectation that the government is preparing to tap the last source of revenue in the motion picture theatre business as a direct result of the recent Imperial Economic Conference in Ottawa. This last taxable feature is film rentals as charged by exchange to exhibitor and in this, there is particular emphasis on films imported into the Dominion from the United States and France.

This is not the first time that the Canadian government has thought of an assessment against film rentals but the point has been that the authorities could not devise a plan of collection that could be regarded as legal. The Imperial Conference has more or less fixed that, however, by "suggesting" a special levy on foreign film imports based on rental valuation, with British pictures to be exempt. In any event, this can be the excuse if not the reason for the proposed levy.

The Canadian Parliament is scheduled to open its 1933 session on Thursday, October 6, for the purpose of implementing promises, agreements and suggestions of the Conference by legislative acts, the majority of which will be embodied in resolutions of the budget speech of Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance. When he utters the word on the floor of the Canadian House at Ottawa, the new duties, taxes and preferences automatically become law—for a year at least under ordinary circumstances. Because of the decision of the Conference to make it a "five year plan" for the Empire, there is the possibility that the coming enactments at Ottawa will be for that period of years. This may be just too bad for the exhibitors and exchanges of the Dominion.

The film trade has been doing some figuring with the result that there is a belief that a special levy on foreign film rentals will amount, in the aggregate, to $250,000 per year. This looks like good revenue for the government from all the theatres up and down the line. But the prediction is made that it will not prevent a single American picture entering Canada nor will it bring one more British picture into the Dominion. The exhibitors are already classifying the suggested rental levy as "another nuisance tax."

If the special levy becomes effective in October, the expectation is that the tax will fall upon the exhibitors themselves, large and small. This outlook is based on the terms of the current contract agreement in the trade which contains a taxation clause which provides that any and all forms of new or increased taxation by Dominion or provisional governments will be passed along by the film distributors to the exhibitors wherever applicable in geographical jurisdiction. At the same time there are indications that both the distributors and theatre owners will oppose the proposed levy and steps may be taken to give reasons before Parliament sits. It is believed that the time to make a move will be prior to the opening of the session because it will be too late to do much about it after the Minister of Finance has tabled his budget resolutions.

Quebec Situation Difficult

An important angle to the situation in Canada, politically, is that an impost on foreign films would affect the French-language theatres of the Province of Quebec. The French-Canadians are rather jealous of their rights and privileges and a new tax on films from France would not be acceptable. Yet the Dominion government can hardly attach a tax to films from the United States without giving French or German pictures the same treatment. Last year 60 French features were imported into Canada, largely for the theatres of Quebec. The Quebec situation bristles with possibilities.

The point has been taken that there will be enough discrimination in a tax on films from countries other than those within the British Empire without drawing a line between the products of various foreign lands. Whether the foreign film tax is legal at all or not is a knotty question. It may just happen that the Canadian Department of Justice may hesitate, at least, about framing a foreign film tax regulation under existing Canadian law.

Canadian exhibitors still maintain that they are patriotic and that they will play good British pictures. But they are arguing that a tax on foreign product will not help British films or their entry into Canada.

The session of Parliament in October will not last more than two or three weeks since it will adjourn until next February after giving consideration to measures arising out of the Imperial Conference. Other British countries will do likewise in order to complete the Conference picture. Developments for the film men in Canada have taken an unfavorable turn—and it looks like another battle.

MEXICAN FILMS FOR MEXICANS WIN AID OF ORGANIZED BUSINESS

Further Impetus to Nationalistic Movement Is Expected at Chambers of Commerce Conference Sept. 10 to 14

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Organized Mexican commerce has begun to take a hand in furthering the nationalistic idea in regard to motion pictures which had its inception a couple of years ago, first fruits of which were the very considerable elevation of import duties on all talking films and discs not in Spanish and the establishment in Mexico City of a native production company. This nationalistic move, or rather prospective move, by Mexican commerce consists in substance of the following resolution which will be acted upon at the national convention of the Confederation of Mexican Chambers of Commerce which will be staged in Mexico City September 10 to 14:

"That the federal government be advised that the Confederation of Mexico Chambers of Commerce deems it advantageous to continue the official movement tending to substitute with motion pictures that are suitable to our national customs and manners all such productions in foreign languages or that have plots which do not conform with our customs, manners or viewpoint, this proposition to be in accord with the nationalist movement which has been so well received throughout the Republic."

The Confederation's action seems to be directed principally against American motion pictures.

In the matter of producing feature pictures, Mexico has now but one company. This is the National Motion Picture Production Company, which established studios in Mexico City about a year ago. This enterprise, backed by Mexican capital, has produced two features, "Santa" ("Saintess") and "Aguilas Frente El Sol" (Eagles Before the Sun"). Both pictures were directed by Antonio Moreno and were exhibited in Mexico, parts of the United States, and in various Spanish American countries. The company is now working on a third feature, "Una Vida Por Otra" ("A Life for a Life"), which was written and is being directed by John H. Auer, who has had much experience in Hollywood. The picture, a Mexican drama starring Nancy Torres, is scheduled for a premiere in Mexico City September 14. This company is using a sound system invented by two young Mexican engineers, the Rodriguez Brothers. Practically all its technicians were trained in Hollywood. Alex Phillips, Canadian war veteran, well known in Hollywood, is the cameraman.

Another national picture production company is in the offing. It is headed by George Stahl, Mexican capitalist. The enterprise has bought a tract of land in Mexico City for its studios. Stahl will leave soon for Hollywood to obtain technicians and a sound system. The company is expected to get into action before fall.

Fox Reports $4,728,328 Loss For Six Months Ended June 25

Net loss of $4,728,328 for the 26 weeks ended June 25 was reported this week by Fox Film Corporation and subsidiary or affiliated companies. This compares with net profit of $70,605 for the same period in 1931. THE LATEST PREMIERES

Marlene Dietrich, Barrymore and Billie Burke Share Spotlight With Mysteries in Openings

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

The much-heralded "Blonde Venus" was the center of preview interest this week. Having been long in production, after the walkout, staged before production started, by Von Sternberg and Marlene Dietrich in a disagreement over the story, Hollywood naturally was curious to see what had resulted. The opinions were widely different, though it was generally conceded among the reviewers that the star's personal pull at the box office would have to make up for much that is missing in story value. Von Sternberg never has been noted for good stories, relying on his "directorial touches" to intrigue interest. In this instance the touches are spotty, and some of them are pretty dull. The story is very episodic in character, jumping hither and yon as the star's adventures lead her from bad to worse, and back home again.

Herbert Marshall gets plenty of enthusiastic praise, which he deserves, and little Dickie Moore comes pretty close to stealing the show as the son of Marlene and Marshall. Marlene displays the well-known pedal extremities, sings a couple of songs as she walks among the cabaret tables, wears bizarre costumes and once in a while has time to do a little acting. Cary Grant appears very attractively though rather briefly. "Blonde Venus" has its moments, particularly if you like la Dietrich.

A "Pocket Premiere"

With plenty of fanfare and lights and photographers and stars, Radio offered a "pocket premiere" of "A Bill of Divorcement," featuring John Barrymore, Billy Burke and a newcomer to pictures from the New York stage, Katharine Hepburn. Viewed strictly from a production viewpoint, this is a swell job. Being intrinsically a rather heavy and unrelieved treatise on the causes and effects of hereditary insanity, there are some showmen hereabouts who after seeing it are slightly dubious as to its popular appeal. I thoroughly enjoyed it because I believe John Barrymore never has done as good a screen portrayal, and because Katharine Hepburn in her first picture brought to the camera a vibrant and utterly different cinema personality that stuck out like a lighthouse in a fog. That young woman can act, and she did so well that even the great Barrymore had to knuckle down and do his stuff, instead of stalking through, as he sometimes does. Billie Burke adds much charm and an intelligent interpretation of a rather difficult and mostly thankless role. "A Bill of Divorcement" has a right to a place among the more serious things the cinema is doing.

Fox staged a preliminary tryout of "Chandu, the Magician," based upon the widely popular radio feature. It is really a "personal appearance" of the character, and as such has all the glamour and excitement that holds millions of fascinated listeners nightly on the air. Fox has given it an elaborate mounting and Eddie Lowe 'ends just the proper blending of mystery and showmanship to the character of Chandu. Big stuff for the youngsters.

A Clever Mystery

A story to prove that anyone is likely to find himself mixed up in a murder mystery at any moment, no matter how remote the possibility seems, is cleverly told in Paramount's "The Night of June 13." Circumstantial evidence indicates that Clive Brook has murdered his wife when, as the audience has seen, she has killed herself through jealousy. Neighbors who might offer alibi proof to show that Brook was not at home the time the shooting took place are unwilling to testify because it would involve exposure of skeletons in their own closets. But they can't stop the village souse, who lets all the neighboring cats out of the bag and saves Brook from the gallows. Charles Grapewin as the bad penny of the neighborhood is the big hit of the production.

Good Films Pay on Continent: Morris

"European audiences are hungry for good films and those exhibitors who are able to supply them are all doing a nice business," said Sam E. Morris, vice-president of Warner Bros. in charge of foreign activities, who recently returned to New York after a two months' visit abroad, during which he visited England, Germany, France, Austria, Belgium, and Spain.

As previously announced, Warner will launch an extensive production schedule abroad. "It is our plan to produce 20 pictures in England at our Teddington Studios, using English casts, with English directors who have had their training in Hollywood," Mr. Morris said. "We will also turn out about 15 French pictures which will be dubbed in Paris and about 6 German pictures which will be dubbed in Berlin. However, the number of French and German version pictures we will make is not definitely set as yet. The German and French pictures will be our own Hollywood-produced films with German and French dialogue.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Blonde Venus

(Paramount)

Drama

This newest Dietrich film is apt to prove somewhat of a poser to exhibitors who figure to cash in on the full box office power of the glamorous Marlene. It is the picture that caused the controversy between the star and director and studio officials a while ago. It got considerable publicity that undoubtedly has many fans waiting to see what it's all about.

Done in an ultra-von Sternberg style, with quick flash-outs and flashes-in, to carry the thread of the story, it presents Marlene Dietrich, who, as the wife of Herbert Marshall and the mother of Dickie Moore, uses the age-old method of extracting money from another man in order to send her husband abroad for a cure.

During all the time she sinks lower and lower in the social scale, she keeps her little boy with her. Only when it seems hopeless does she surrender him to his father. Then when suicide looks to be the only way out for her, the story flashes to Paris, where she is the queen of the night clubs, there to be found by Cary Grant, the man who caused all her trouble. He, conscience-stricken, brings her back to her husband and son.

Because the picture is all Dietrich—there being hardly a scene in which she does not appear—it would seem that the logical method of selling it to the public would be through her. While little Dickie Moore has the role that is intended to inspire human interest, the theme of the story almost prohibits any tendency to build sweetness and love around the mother and her boy. Because the story shows her becoming a woman of the streets in order that she may provide shelter for the boy, any attempt to concentrate too strongly on him may provoke some unfavorable reactions.

Better, it would seem, to work along lines that tie both the names of Marlene Dietrich and "Blonde Venus" together, with newspaper, program and other media playing those names up in big, bold letters. The combination of the two should be sufficiently strong to entice all the Dietrich "fans." Care should be taken that catchlines do not convey a too livid description of the story. Yet, at the same time, catchlines that get over the impression that Miss Dietrich is tackling one of the most difficult roles of her career certainly should be used.

"Blonde Venus" is absolutely adult entertainment. Even the presence of Dickie Moore provides no justification for any effort to sell it to the youngsters. In the majority of spots the name of Miss Dietrich should be sufficiently strong to whet the interest of patrons. Back it up, if you care to, with references in publicity to the before-mentioned controversy, but never ask the question as to who was right or wrong in the controversy.

The title suggests some good exploitation, with tieups easily possible with many various lines of business, in all of which plenty of pictures of Miss Dietrich should be used. Likewise there is a possibility of a "Blonde Venus" contest on the stage to stir up a lot of interest among the local girls who think they look like Miss Dietrich.

How the picture will measure up to box office standards of previous Dietrich pictures is a matter that rests solely in the hands of individual exhibitors. If possible, try to see a screening of the picture in your exchange center or note carefully what the first-run exhibitors do. Then lay your interest-creating campaign out along lines that you know will best appeal to the tastes of your patrons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Cabin in the Cotton

(First National)

Drama

While the idea of "Cabin in the Cotton" is not new, it is so different from the present day picture trend that it looks like one of those "sleepers" that may click beyond anticipations.

It is very much a social study, dealing with the relations that exist between wealthy cotton planters and their poor white tenants. It strives to portray how the wealthy organized minority continually, either by fair means or otherwise, seeks to keep the masses in subjugation and how one of the poor boys, who has been given an education by his wealthy landlord, struggles to eliminate the conditions that have kept his people in poverty and to bring about a better understanding between owner and tenant.

Because the story devotes so much time to making everything plain and at the same time portraying both classes in a favorable light, it is rather slow and for that reason may not prove so popular with those classes of fans who don't like to mingle too much mental exertion with their entertainment. Yet there is plenty of entertainment in it.

There's the drama of a boy whose loyalty is torn between love of his own kind, who he knows are being bilked out of what is fairly theirs, and appreciation for the man who made it possible for him to come up in the world. There's romance—that once becomes pretty hot—between Richard Barthlemess and Bette Davis. Incidentally, Miss Davis, as the rich idle daughter madly in love with the poor white boy, flashes through the picture in a manner that should send your patrons out of the theatre talking about her. Additionally there is novelty in story and location to prove of more than ordinary interest to the average audience.

The title carries an interest-provoking thought. Backing that up with the names of Barthlemess, Bette Davis and Dorothy Jordan, plus the others in the extensive cast that are fairly well known to your audiences, should prove the means of boosting this picture.

If you go in for specially decorated lobbies and can get hold of some cotton plants or scenery depicting a plantation, attractive and eye-catching fronts in harmony with the theme should help the draw. Likewise there is opportunity for tieups with merchants, who are trying to boost the sales of cotton goods. Put some real showmanship behind this one. Get over the idea that it is a different kind of a picture, with plenty of drama that will hold the interest of children and grownups.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Story by Harry Harrison Kroll. Screen play by Paul Green. Directed by Michael Curtiz. Photographed by Barney McGill. Release date, Oct. 15, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

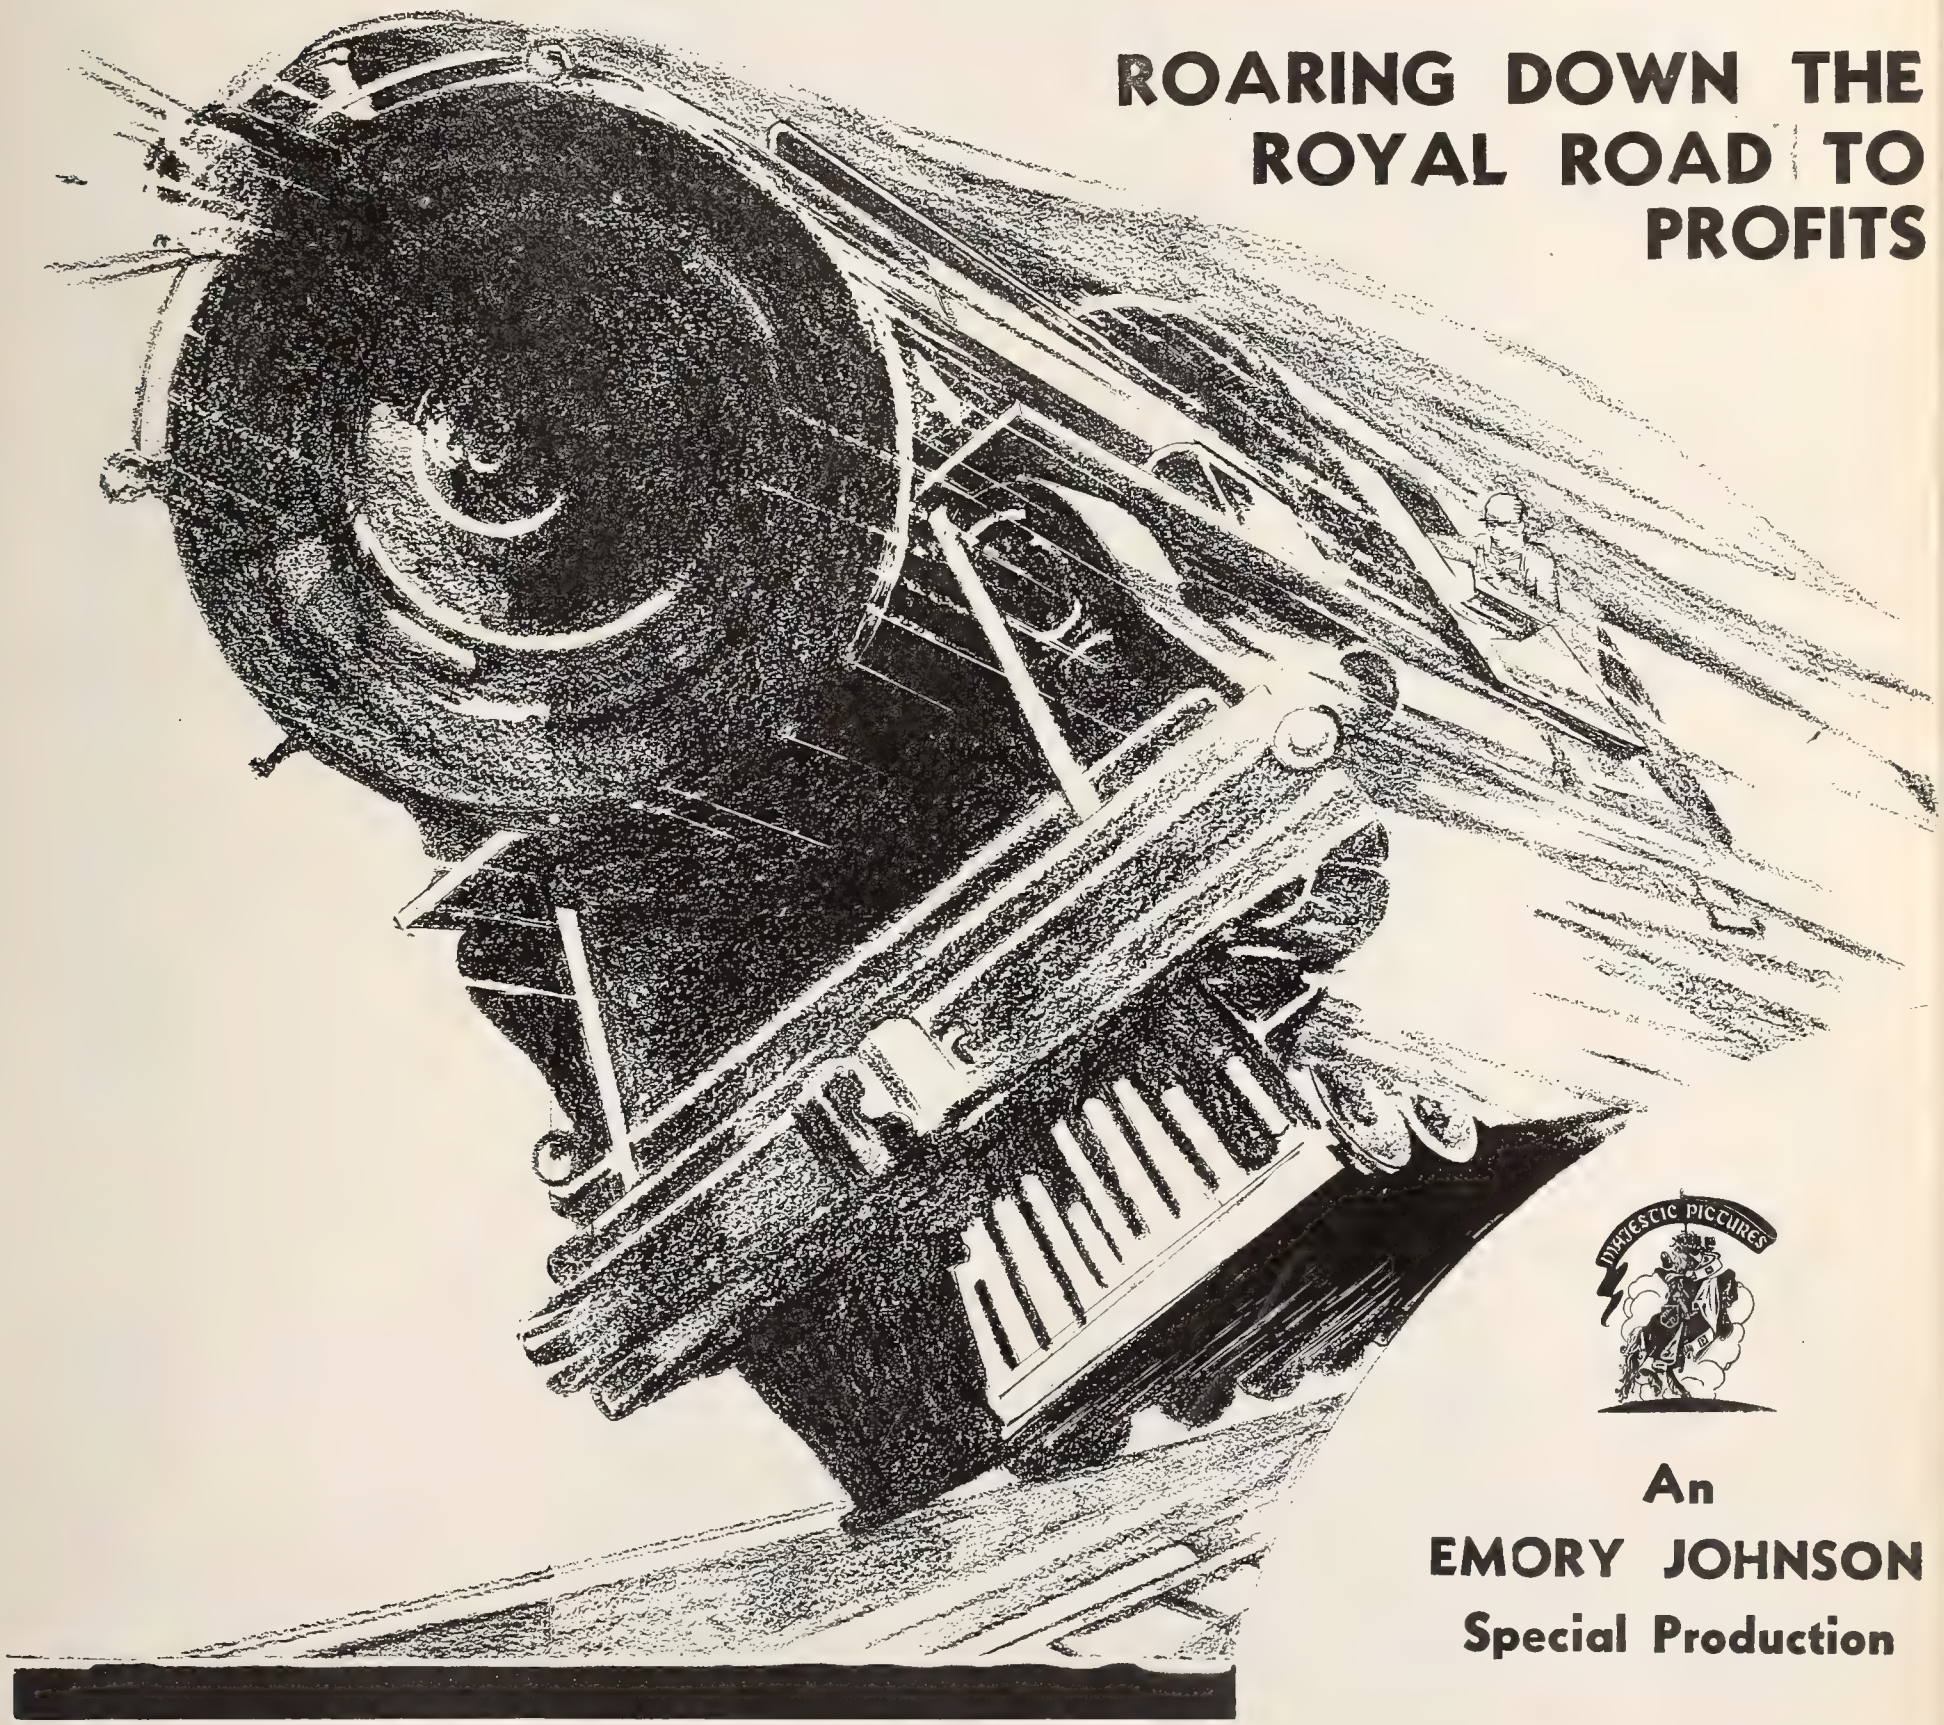
Blessed Event

(Warner)

Comedy-Drama



Get behind this with a lively, punch-filled campaign. Here is the opportunity to be smart, to use a wisecrack in your copy here and there, to do almost as you please—so long as the advertising is fast and active, always in keeping with the picture itself.

Use that title for all you are worth, but be careful. There is nothing even in the slightest degree off-color in the film, it is done too well. "Blessed Event" has come almost to be the trademark of that peculiar phenomenon of modern journalism, the "smart" columnist, who digs dirt for his pay, who gossips not wisely but too well about everyone else's business, and whose motto seems to be: "The bigger they are, the harder they fall."

Lee Tracy does the role to the hilt. Keep him on top in the selling. He will be worth it all the way, and the patrons should talk about him when they leave the theatre. He came from the Broadway stage to the motion picture, and he has done well there. He still has more than a few good pieces of work ahead of him, consequently it would be well to take this excellent opportunity to make his name mean something to your patrons. He will not disappoint. He makes the most of every line, and there are plenty of good ones.

The rest of the cast is good, though the names may not mean any too much at the box office. Study the cast, and you will know best which names will stand up for best results on the marquee beside Tracy. Ruth Donnelly is especially good, and Mary Brian attractive and capable as the other half of the romance that complicates the life of the happy-go-lucky columnist. Dick Powell, band leader, crooner, should attract the women.

The film is an adaptation of a stage play of the same name which attained a considerable degree of success in New York. Use that angle for what it is worth. There is drama, a bit of pathos, but above all, a world of good, fast comedy in the picture. Tracy ruins the life of a girl through his allegiance to his column, but sees the light of day at the end. He chooses his column in preference to his sweetheart, but finally succumbs to romance.

The film has all the ingredients of money at the box office, and lends itself readily to a flashing, crackling exploitation campaign as few pictures do. The exhibitor may well interest the local newspapers in the journalistic angle. Stir up all the excitement possible before and when this film is played and it should look well on the ledger. There is nothing the youngsters should not see, but the greater part of it will go far over their heads.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Based on play by Manuel Seff and Forrest Wilson. Screen play by Howard Green. Photographed by Sol Polito. Edited by Jim Gibbons. Release date, September 10, 1932. Running time, 84 minutes.

Blondie of the Follies

(MGM)

Drama

The big selling point here is cast names, and there are "money" names all the way down the line. Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery, Billie Dove, James Gleason, Jimmy Durante, Zasu Pitts; throw them up on the marquee in your biggest lights, and make them sell your picture. There is not a name in the group that fails of a following. It would be well not to play Durante too high, since his part is unimportant, a minor incident of comedy affording him an opportunity to appear.

There is hardly sufficient power in the story itself to justify too great concentration on it. Rely on the cast for the most part. Each does his work well and all should please. Montgomery is his smart, suave usual self; Miss Davies is lively, Miss Dove effective. The title has possibilities. It is active, smart, and has an implication of the theatrical, behind-the-scenes atmosphere of the stage. "Blondie" gives you a central figure about which to weave the advertising, and when that "Blondie" is Marion Davies, you have a real marquee figure. In the event that Miss Davies is not too strong in the particular situation, concentrate more completely on the cast as a whole, with Montgomery at the top.

The story is not entirely devoid of selling angles. Miss Dove and Miss Davies are East Side neighbors, and chums. Miss Dove goes into the Follies and a Park Avenue apartment, and thereby develops a maid, a manner and considerable affectation. Miss Davies is drawn to follow her into the bright lights, in spite of the objection of father Jim Gleason. Montgomery, with whom Miss Dove is in love, is considerably drawn toward Blondie, with resultant jealousy on the part of Miss Dove. Eventually, after Miss Davies is hurt, Miss Dove being to blame, the latter loses out, and Miss Davies wins Montgomery. Sell the angle of the Follies girls who pretended to be what they were not, and thereby lost, one the man she loved, the other her new-found profession.

This is an adult film. There is nothing in it for the youngsters. Sell the names and the title, plus a touch of musical comedy backstage, and appeal to the women in particular with the story angle and Montgomery for maximum results.—Aaronson, New York.

A Bill of Divorcement

(RKO Radio)

Domestic Drama

If you want a "class picture" that the more serious minded portion of your patronage will appreciate and a production that should show the "masses" what constitutes fine screen entertainment, "A Bill of Divorcement" is your opportunity.

From every viewpoint—type of story, acting, direction and manner of presentation—it is a big picture. Not depending on sensationalism or anything calculated to incite mob hysteria, it has humanness. It probably never will break any records. It may fail to capture the interest of some of your patrons. But, like "The Guardsman," it should make a big impression on the intelligentsia, and with the experience of that picture to guide you, it can be sold in a way that will convince the others.

The story is a domestic drama. Because there is a recurring streak of insanity in his blood, Margeret has divorced Hillary Fairfield. The daughter, Sidney, never has seen her father but believes he is confined in a sanitarium on account of shell shock. Just before Margeret is to be married to Gray, Hillary recovers and escapes from the hospital. His return throws the family into a turmoil of conflicting emotions. Sidney learns the truth. To her it means that her dream of happiness with Kit must be forever put aside. To Margeret and Gray it is like a bombshell to all their hopes. To Hillary, when he learns the truth about Margeret and Gray from Sidney, it is a tragedy that leaves him hopeless. But, sane again, he understands and makes it possible for his divorced wife to go to Gray. Sidney breaks off her romance with Kit, fearful that marriage might pass on an affliction to her children and is content to find happiness with her father.

Because of the theme, it would appear that the most effective way to arouse patron enthusiasm would be through personalities. Your audiences know John Barrymore, but in this picture he is a greater Barrymore, more natural, more powerfully dramatic. Tell your patrons that they are going to see one of the greatest screen portrayals of all time, that in one scene, where he is pleading with Billie Burke to take him back, he reaches dramatic and emotional heights seldom before attained by any actor.

Katherine Hepburn, making her screen debut, is just as effective. Not a raving beauty—some may consider her even gawky—she has that "certain something" that marks her as a potential star. You can be assured the fans will do plenty of talking about her after they have seen this picture.

Those two, with Billie Burke, carry the picture almost in its entirety. Miss Burke's role as the wife, who apparently selfishly puts aside her husband, has a part that will not win much audience sympathy, but she puts it over with splendid ability.

The combination of those three names, depending on the glamour of Barrymore and Burke, plus the introduction of a new star, Katherine Hepburn, looks to be the angle that will create the maximum amount of interest.

Depending on the types of audiences to which you cater, there are one or two "don'ts" that should receive a lot of consideration. It does not seem wise that one should play up the insanity angle too strongly. To many people that idea may be repulsive. Likewise the divorce idea might be dangerous—particularly if you should try to stir up a controversy as to whether a wife has the right to put aside a husband who has recovered from an affliction.

Better it would seem that you stress the idea of a family that has been whirled into a seething chaos by an unlooked for happening. Back that thought up by concentration on the powerful drama of the story. Make your advertising appeal dignified so that it cannot fail with the more intelligent, but not so highbrow that it will dull the interest of the rank and file.

"A Bill of Divorcement" is strictly adult entertainment. It is far too deep for children and the adolescents in the early "teen" stages. It should prove equally popular with both men and women.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. From the play by Clemence Dane. Screen play by Howard Estabrook and Harry W. Gribble. Directed by George Cukor. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Art director, Carroll Clark. Film editor, Arthur Roberts. Release date, September 30, 1932. Running time, 76 minutes.

Thrill of Youth

(Chesterfield)

Comedy-Drama

While there are a few interesting spots in "Thrill of Youth," the picture takes such an unnecessarily long time in getting under way, with much emphasis being placed on the fact that the Thayer family belongs in the idle rich class. The majority of audiences will become bored if this picture is the sole program attraction.

Quite evidently the picture was made to meet a condition—double billing, for example. This is indicated by the fact that the running time is only 63 minutes. And that is a suggestion as to how it should be played, on a double bill or on a program that lists a number of more than interesting short subjects. Even in the smaller houses it will hardly stand alone.

Here's the gist of the story. Jack and Chet Thayer are in love with Jill Fenwick. She becomes engaged to Chet. To solace Jack, she goes with him for a day's outing to an old farmhouse. A storm comes up and prevents them from getting home. During the heights of the storm his father, Jeff and Seena Sherwood (a married woman) arrive at the farm. Thus a compromising situation has an alibi. But next day Chet finds out about it. He assaults his brother, but a cable from Jeff and

No–it's not "The face on the cutting-room floor!"

Our trailers are not made up of the scrap material left over after the picture has been cut. National Screen Service trailers show actual footage from the feature itself!

Those talking scenes your audiences see and hear—those little flashes from the heart of the picture that thrill your patrons with their big moments, and tease them with the promise of other thrills to come —those appetite-creating scenes you get in National Screen trailers are picked with utmost care from the entire length of the feature advertised; and picked with a purpose!

Showmanship is the guiding principal in making this choice—showmanship that will bring results at your box-office through increased ticket sales.

Ad-Vance Trailers

A Message from the Makers of the World's Finest Trailers

National Screen trailers give your patrons fair samples of the picture to come—and give them in such a way as to create desire to see the advertised feature. Trailer cost is a trivial cost in operation.

National Screen Ad-Vance Trailers are your first aid to better business!

Seena makes everything okay and of course Chet steps aside.

There is a little nice comedy contributed by Lucy Beaumont and Tom Ricketts. Otherwise the picture follows the formula, with a little romance and drama and some suspense. You will have to depend for your laughs, which are the highlights of the story, on Miss Beaumont and Ricketts.

Even in the smaller houses better than ordinary showmanship will be required to put "Thrill of Youth" over. That means, primarily, added attractions along all the lines now being used to help out pictures that are not quite up to the full entertainment standards. Special inducements will fit in nicely with this feature. And of course as part of a double bill, it will be all right.

In advertising, the title should have some pulling power and the names of June Clyde, Allen Vincent and Matty Kemp should have some effect on the younger contingent. There is no reason for selling it as anything more than just regular program entertainment, where the audiences will get some fun out of the two oldtimers and may find some interest in the mixup that occurs between the two brothers and the girl.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Story and screen play by Edward T. Lowe. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Photographed by M. A. Anderson. Release date. Running time, 63 minutes.

Diamond Cut Diamond

Comedy

Here's Adolphe Menjou in one of the most successful parts he ever has played, so that the showman who caters to Menjou fans won't have difficulty in getting his money back. It isn't the best film he has appeared in, but it's a picture that gives him the chance to put over his particular brand of personality from a slightly different angle. Playing up to him, too, is a partner who often has been paid an injustice by too slavish casting type, but who shows here a ready adaptability for a less stereotyped role—Claude Allister. Between them, these two popular old stagers give conviction to a frothy story of the familiar "set a thief to catch a thief" variety, and succeed in turning out seventy minutes of safe entertainment.

The story, conceived by Viscount Castlerosse (the English journalist you may have heard of before), concerns a couple of international crooks, whose adventures bring them from the South Seas to the vortex of London sassiety and finally land them for a stretch in the cold, cold jail. Dan Macqueen (Menjou), "gentle grafter" as well as audacious jewel thief, is partnered by Joe Fragson, nimble of fingers and quick with the cards, but equally quick with the ladies. Dan holds that women spell trouble, and keeps his distance.

A big pearl, stolen from a native, pays their fares to England and helps them into London's biggest hotel, where they check in as the Count de Beauvais and friend. Neat work by Dan deprives a famous jeweler of a £2,000 bracelet, which he plants on an attractive woman in the same hotel when suspected. With the aid of her confederate (for she, alas, is also not quite honest) she slips him a dainty doublecross tied with a perfumed blue ribbon, so to speak, dupes him and Joe into landing another piece of the Tiffany stuff, gives him back his bracelet and jugs him, Joe as well.

Apart from a trick or two indulged in by one of the picture's two directors (Fred Niblo walked out half way through and left Maurice Elvey to finish it), there is no messing about, and the story goes neatly along. It is assisted by well designed settings, genuine London scenes, and good photography, while the two grafters-in-chief are seconded by good work from the other leading players.

Obviously you've got to stick Adolphe and Claude on your marquee as well as at the top of all your ads and other publicity. Call 'em a new comedy team, if you feel that way, and work in those phrases like "remarkable characterization," and so on. Play up the title, too, by tieups with jewelry stores and, if you have a sense of humor, the local five-and-ten-cent emporium. Maybe there's even a gag in the fact that the story is by a peer of the King's realm.—Charman, London.

Offered (in England) by M-G-M. Produced by Eric Hakim at Elstree, England. Directed by Fred Niblo and Maurice Elvey. Story suggested by Viscount Castlerosse. Running time, 71 minutes.

I Kiss Your Hand, Madame

(Stanley)

Musical Comedy

The showman will concentrate his every effort on the name Marlene Dietrich to draw maximum returns from this production, which is brought from Europe by Stanley Distributing Corporation to capitalize directly on the interest in Miss Dietrich that has come from her American productions. Exteriors were photographed in Paris and are authentic.

The story itself and the development of it will thoroughly justify the playing up of the Dietrich beauty, the Dietrich eyes and their languorous appeal. Some might see in the production an over-emphasis of just that phase, with consequent delay of action, but the call to both men and women is distinctly present, a fact which is indicated further by the several weeks' run at the Europa Theatre in New York.

Another phase of the picture which may be attracting, and certainly will provide ready-made tieup possibilities, is the fact that it is built around the song hit of the same name by Ralph Erwin, with constant but not tiring use of it. The extent to which the song in itself is a positive factor for building attendance will depend upon the life the song has enjoyed in the community.

The story is of no particular significance but it does bring plenty of opportunity for Harry Liedtke to present his likable self before the feminine contingent. Lietke, a headwaiter and in reality also a Russian prince who has had to find a living somehow, meets Miss Dietrich by a coincidence and finds an opportunity to press the acquaintanceship in returning her divorce papers. She likes him, but when she is informed by her former husband that Liedtke is a waiter she decides to humiliate him. His real rank finally comes to light and she repents, and not at leisure, either, for they finally find each other after a mad chase around a hotel.

As played at the Europa, the dialogue was all on the titles, the sound being only in musical accompaniment.

The picture is scarcely within the ken of the juvenile but can be played anywhere, any time.—Rovelstad, New York.

Produced by Super Films. Distributed by Stanley Distributing Corporation. Directed by Robert Land. Cameraman, Robert Neppach. Film editor, Helene Turner. Release date, August 27, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

SHORTS

Blue of the Night

(Paramount)

Bing Crosby

With Bing Crosby singing three of his most popular numbers, "Auf Wiedesehen," "Every Time My Heart Beats" and "Blue of the Night," this catchy Sennett film looks to be one of those that will draw in about as much money as the regular feature. Given a prominent advertising break, which includes tieups with music stores and radio stations, it should be booked in at a time when you need a particularly attractive short subject. Outside of Crosby's singing, the story is simple—a case of mistaken identity, "Babe" Kane and Bing being taken as bride and groom by passengers on a transcontinental train. Use showmanship with Bing's name in the lights, ads and lobby displays.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Young Onions

Weak

There is little that is amusing, and nothing that is unusually funny in this domestic comedy effort featuring Forrester Harvey and Dorothy Granger. Husband's greatest desire is the imbibing of onions, while wife languishes in neglect. When they break up, via a deal of slapstick, she is to depart for Mexico, he to the beach. Neither can go through with it, and the reconcilation takes place, as expected, and in a manner unamusing. Running time, 19 minutes.

Hitting the High Spots of the Far East

(Vitaphone)

Excellent

The standard which E. M. Newman has established in his series of travel films is maintained in this subject, which possesses much of interest, much of the unusual to the American. Rendering the dialogue himself, Mr. Newman takes his audience to Canton, Bangkok, Calcutta, Delhi, picturing the strange habits of the peoples, the splendid architecture of their mosques and temples, conveying something of the atmosphere of these far countries. A diverting, interesting subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Athlete

(Universal)

Amusing

The animated dog here is an athlete of no mean proportions. His hurdling, running and high diving are lightly amusing, and highly intricate, resulting in all manner of difficulty. His booby prize is being photographed, but the flash power is dynamite, and spectators and cameramen practice on the harp high on a cloud. A diverting cartoon.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Transatlantic Mystery

(Vitaphone)

Intriguing

From a quantity standpoint there are at least three murders and a suicide in this story of smuggling of stolen jewels, but the quality of production removes all suggestions of overdose of quantity, and the net sum becomes an interesting and fast-moving piece of entertainment. The particular finesse that gives strength is in the denoument, with a handling of dialogue that carries the picture through with sustained interest.—Running time, 22 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of box office receipts for the calendar week ended September 3, 1932, reached $1,389,894 for 106 theatres in 20 major key cities of the country, $84,033 less than the total for the previous calendar week ended August 27, when the total gross was $1,473,927 for 108 theatres in 20 cities. During the more recent seven-day period no new high individual house records were established, while three new low individual figures were recorded. This compares with no new "highs" and six new "lows" for the preceding week.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

SELL ENTERTAINMENT FIRST!

THERE HAS BEEN an endless discussion regarding the advisability of contests, give-aways, premiums and what-not in connection with present-day theatre operation. . .

We do not propose to hold a brief over the good or bad points of the various topics under discussion. . . Each manager and each theatre is a situation unto itself. . . To prescribe may result in the medicine acting like a tonic for one . . and a poison for another.

No doubt about the many rough spots one must hurdle before we get back to smooth sailing again. . . But we do not believe there is a human being on earth who can solve the problems of the entire industry or sandpaper down those rough spots by dishing out a lot of hooey. . .

Each man ought to make an individual study of his own situation. . . Of course we realize that just being on the job will soon acquaint you with the troublesome angles of your house. . . But we suggest that you make a more careful study of your situation so as to possibly bring to light the best things to do and the things to avoid in the merchandising and operating of the theatre.

FIRST OF ALL remember this . . you are selling entertainment. That is what your patrons are coming to buy, and we care not a hoot what else you are offering in the way of inducements . . if the entertainment is not there, the customers won't be there either. . . If you are able to give them what they want in your shows, you'll not have much to worry about . . providing your house is clean . . your employees courteous . . your projection clear . . and your sound right.

Careful thought and planning is the most necessary requisite for any form of activity in which you want to involve your theatre. . . Before you go into any kind of a contest . . before you think of giving anything away . . before you risk an unusual stunt . . or gag . . study it . . think about it . . try to dope out the pitfalls . . if any . . and avoid them. . . Try to gauge the possible reaction from your patrons . . the local papers . . the authorities . .etc. . .because many a stunt has proven a boomerang . . your next one may . . on you.

TRY TO REMEMBER that ancient axiom . . "better to be safe than sorry" . . or words to that effect . . seeing as how it IS so easy for one to put one's foot into trouble . . and how difficult it is to pull that foot out again without leaving bruises . . or possibly resulting in amputation . . of your job . . which is really not just an amputation but a major operation.

CONTINUING OUR TREND of cautiousness . . don't let the new-season activity regarding jobs give you that w.k. affliction known as "ants-in-the-pants." . . If you've got a job . . good or not-so-good . . hang on to it and don't be too anxious to find something else. . . If you're as good as you think you are, the better job will oftimes find you without your going after it yourself. . . So keep your shirt on and don't fly off the handle if the boss acts up a little and gets short tempered. . . Just remember that while it may be hard to live within one's present income . . we should be soothed with the comfortable reflection: . . it's gonna be doggoned hard to live without it . . ain't that the truth? . .

HERE WE ARE BACK on the question of misleading advertising. . . What a shame that a limited few will cast mud over the group as a whole because they resort to that dangerous pastime known as kidding the public! . . But the laugh is that they don't seem to realize that they are just kiddin' themselves . . yeah, and not only kiddin' themselves but firing themselves out of good jobs. . . The business has no room for men who engage in such tactics, and I for one would be tickled to see them doing something else. . .

Only recently a major circuit had to admonish its managers to be extremely careful on this point under penalty of dismissal . . and this same circuit offered some more good advice when it told its managers to avoid wearing out the seats of their trousers by being swivel chair managers. . . All of which should strike home with quite a few other circuits, and independents as well. . .

IT IS RATHER DIFFICULT to figure out how a theatre can be efficiently handled when the manager is sitting in his office . . an usher can't be depended upon to gauge the fader control the way the boss can do it . . nor can you expect the janitor to exercise as good judgment on the ventilation equipment. . .

In other words . . if you're the manager of your theatre, go ahead and manage it. . .

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

This cartoon should strike home with quite a few exhibitors and managers right now. From recent correspondence we know that the Family Night idea has been growing in the smaller communities. Now we are wondering how many of them had an experience like this. Just another good reason why you must think things over carefully before putting your foot in it.

PAPER GAVE LARGE SPACE TO ADDISON STORY ON LOBBIES

In connection with an article on summer lobby treatment published in this department several weeks ago under the byline of H. M. Addison, division manager of Loew Theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, we are pleased to report that one of the leading local newspapers saw fit to devote considerable space to comment on same, which, as H. M. points out, did not do Loew houses in that territory a bit of harm.

To refresh memories of some, let us recall that Addison's article had to do with a tie-up he made with a nurseryman for construction of a novel and attractive summer garden in the lobby of a local house. Since that deal went into effect approximately ten other Loew houses have used the same idea to excellent results, proving beyond a doubt that the stunt is a practical one.

You'll hear more from Addison in the future—just as often as he can take the time —and we hope he'll send along that yarn on neighborhood theatres. It's a meaty subject and we're sure that his ideas will be followed with much interest by other members of this organization. Out in his territory the importance of the neighborhood house is stressed. In other cities less consideration is given them; hence, what he has to say will surely be to the point, for he's had opportunities to try out both policies during his wide experience in this field.

FALL FASHION SHOW!

FLOYD FITZSIMMONS' second manual will appear in next week's issue and will contain a complete detailed description of how to stage a Fall Fashion Show. As usual, Floyd has injected some decidedly new slants to instill new life into an old idea. Remember, no reprints will be available on this manual; so hang on to your copy of the HERALD against the time when you are going to need this important material.

GOODMAN PROMOTED EXCELLENT TIE-UP WITH LOCAL CONCERN

Mike Goodman, manager of the RKO Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, certainly "spread" himself a few weeks ago when he promoted a deal with the local Hudson's Bay Company for distribution of advertising based on the "Panther Woman" stunt currently sponsored by Paramount.

We have a sample of the four page newspaper size herald at hand and it's certainly a corking piece of work. The mast head read "The Winnipeg Goods News, Extra, Extra." An extra large display mat on "Tenderfoot" and another on "Week End Marriage" took up the better part of the entire first page. Italics directed the reader to look inside for details on the "Panther Woman" contest.

The tieup with the local company was made on the basis of having all girl contestants pose for photographs and take a screen test on the theatre stage. Four local citizens were appointed to pick the girl to represent Winnipeg in the national contest to find an actress to take the part of the "Panther Woman" during filming of picture in Hollywood studios. Most readers, we feel sure, are by this time familiar with the proposition.

What is more important for the moment, however, is the fact that Goodman secured free printing and distribution of his special herald in 48,000 Winnipeg homes, which is a good enough job for any manager to do a little shouting about. If it were not so large we'd show you all a reproduction of it; anyway, take our word for it that the work was well done. We'll be on the lookout for further news from Goodman and his Capitol.

CITY MAYOR ISSUED PROCLAMATION WHEN SHOW SEASON BEGAN

Following is a proclamation issued a few weeks ago by the Mayor of Portland, Ore., on the occasion of inaugurating RKO's "Greater Show Season." Without a doubt its appearance in the newspaper commanded attention and the theatre executive who put the stunt over is to be congratulated for his initiative. It is offered here as a suggestion to others who plan to open similar campaigns for the ushering in of some special and outstanding event.

"City of Portland, Mayor's Office, August 11th. To the Public: For centuries the theatre has been one of the main sources of happiness for millions of persons the world over.

"In modern times it has come to be one of the principal wellsprings of joy. From the theatre we obtain surcease from our toils and our cares; there we find amusement, entertainment, and profitable enlightenment.

"The RKO Orpheum theatre of Portland will celebrate greater show season, starting Friday, August 12. At that time it will throw open its doors to reveal the very newest and finest entertainment available anywhere.

"Because the theatres are the principal purveyors of happiness in a workaday world, and because their endeavors are worthy in view of their undoubted civic worth, it is my pleasure to designate the first week of Greater Show Season in Portland as Happiness Week."

(Signed) GEORGE L. BAKER, Mayor.

PORTEE PROMOTED BIG GIVE-AWAY FOR BRONX NEIGHBORHOOD

In line with the many give-away campaigns made by Club members this season, we note that during the early part of the Summer, Jack Portee, manager of the Mosholu Theatre, Bronx, N. Y., at that time and now at the Rex in East Rutherford, N. J., managed to promote some sixty odd gifts among merchants in his neighborhood.

The accompanying photo will convey a good idea of the variety of merchandise that eventually made a lot of patrons happy. Each night fifteen were awarded in the usual give-away fashion. If you will glance over the array of merchandise it will be seen that the articles range to $15 in value. Current issues of programs listed the various gifts. Jack tells us that the deal was productive of further good will among patrons, merchants and theatre.

SINDLINGER RIGGED UP SOUND TRUCK IN AN ATTRACTIVE WAY

A special ballyhoo of a sound truck bannered with a regular six-sheet was used on "Dark Horse" by Al Sindlinger, manager of the Astor Theatre, Reading, Pa., and proved a most appropriate stunt for that picture.

Thousands of people saw the truck and listened to the message broadcast through its amplifier as the vehicle was driven through the most populated sections of the city. The accompanying photo will convey a pretty fair idea of how the truck was built. Note the large side panel for the six-sheet.

As pointed out by others, the sound truck appears to be finding more and more favor with those who can use it. It's a sure-fire attention-getter as a ballyhoo and, when used as described above, can be turned into an attractive piece of advertising.

PRYTZ MADE SHOWS ATTRACTIVE TO HOST OF SUMMER TOURISTS

A report on the show-selling activities of Roy Prytz, manager of the Granada Theatre, Duluth, Minn., discloses that Club member hasn't been letting grass grow under his feet during the summer season.

Prytz is located right in the center of the Arrowhead Country, a popular resort section of the state, and tourist trade is an important factor during the season. To awaken interest among the vacationists he covered all camps and highways, setting up signs at important points and arranged for distribution of programs, etc. Several stunts found among Club pages, we are advised, also worked out very successfully.

Another job he undertook during July, which we all know is a tough time of the year to interest kids in the theatre, was the starting of a western serial; however, the picture was set and it had to go. Ten days ahead he stressed on screen by trailer and in the lobby that the serial played on Saturday matinee only, for reason that Duluth adult patronage is not particularly interested in serials. He also arranged with a local tent and awning company to make up some miniature tepees for window displays in various sections of the city, and a large tepee for the lobby. Some cigar store Indians were unearthed to further carry out atmosphere.

Additional effort included a tie-up with a newspaper on a two-for-one idea; a free morning show for 200 Liberty carriers, who met several blocks from the "loop" and piled into trucks and cars with banners explaining that they were escorting the film to the theatre; the presence af boy scouts on the film car and two other boys with snare drums to make a bit of noise, and use of an advertisement addressed to all children to effect that they would be admitted free of charge if dressed in pioneer or Indian costumes. The accompanying photo shows a gang of the kids in front of the theatre.

The first week's showing played capacity and while there was considerable "paper" in evidence, next matinee was a great deal more gratifying from a financial standpoint. As pointed out, Prytz didn't use any new and novel stunts to catch the youngster's eyes, but what he did demonstrate was that even in tough times a little exertion will bring them to the theatre.

A Correction

In the editorial introduction of Floyd Fitzsimmons in last week's issue we referred to him as having been contact man for the Saenger Division. This should have read "assistant contact man."

LASHLEY'S PRODUCT EXHIBIT!

Unique Lobby Arrangement Created Widespread Comment On New Season's Pictures!

GREATER Movie Season was brought to public attention in a unique and interesting way this year by H. T. Lashley, city manager for the Publix Carolina and Rivoli theatres, Greenville, S. C.

The accompanying photos literally speak for themselves and lest you think the big sign portrayed therein was put on unevenly, let us explain that the reproduction was made from a series of photos pasted up by Lashley himself. The Carolina lobby is a long one and had to be photographed in sections.

He turned the artist loose on both sides of the lobby and in due time it was transformed into an exhibition of forthcoming product from a number of companies. Star stills, signs made for the occasion, poster art and announcement inserts were tastefully arranged to present a splendid display.

The artist worked in the lobby during business hours and many people showered him with questions concerning the new pictures. As Lashley intimates, you can guess what his answers were. In other words, the artist not only acted as a "teaser" informant but made the display a "live" one. Everything else aside for the moment, he certainly turned out a neat piece of work. Note the Fox section, with heads of stars and spreads taken from the new season book; then the Universal offerings, with the catch line illustrating the poster, "Old Kid Universal Goes Marching On"; next in line is Paramount, then Radio, Fox and Columbia.

He also backed up the exhibition with a direct by mail campaign requesting patrons to come and see the display. In addition to this, trailers were run and three down-town windows were appropriately and completely dressed for the occasion. Two weeks in advance, "G. N. M. S." teasers were run in all newspaper adds and the paper followed through with a corking two-column story in the news section about the exhibition.

Another stunt used to get people to examine the display and become acquainted with forthcoming pictures, was the offering of 3, 2 and 1-month passes for best answers to the following questions: 1.—Name 20 of the Greater New Movie Stars; 2.—Name 30 pictures you would like most to see; 3.—Name one picture that appeals to you most; 4.—Name two short subjects you like most. Readers were reminded on the heralds advertising this offer that full information could be obtained in the exhibition in the Carolina lobby.

In Lashley's daily ads he is now running lines about the new season and he has arranged with one of the local civic clubs to bring orphans, etc., to one of the G. N. M. S. pictures. Along with that he will get stories and quotations from heads of companies regarding new product. During the first week of the new season a trailer will be used to call attention to other great pictures on the way. Programs, carrying a list of coming attractions and other institutional copy, will also be handed out.

This is what greeted the patrons' eyes as they entered the lobby. The effectiveness of this display caused hundreds to closely inspect the individual product frames.

Returning to the subject of Lashley's interesting and attractive lobby display, let us touch briefly on the excellent use made of company announcements by many theatre managers. In practically every instance these announcements are splendidly gotten up and are carried in this publication in insert form in season. Combined with stills every theatre has on file and whatever other advance material on hand, the insert pages, or leaves from special books mailed out by the companies, will make an interesting display. Lashley is to be congratulated for getting such fine results from his.

A FEW TIPS FROM REHFIELD ON SMALL TOWN EXPLOITATION

Distribution of cost-free programs and guest ticket tieups with local merchants have proven excellent small town exploitation for H. E. Rehfield, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa.

Printing and house-to-house distribution of his weekly programs cost him $6 and the cost is entirely taken care of by selling space for four ads at $1.50 each. About 200 are also folded in Sunday papers and placed in cars of farmers who visit the town on Saturdays.

He uses several two-for-one gags, among which a "Prosperity Ticket" has been the most successful during times when some sort of inducement became necessary to bring patrons to the theatre. He sells these at the box office in lots of 10 or 20 at the rate of five cents each, the ticket stating that it is good for one admission when accompanied by regular paid admission. It is good any night except Sunday.

Other two-for-one tickets are sold merchants at the rate of two cents each and the concerns pass them out with ten-cent bread wrappers. Another ticket is sold to ten nearby towns at cost of printing and are distributed to prospective patrons for cash purchases of twenty-five cents worth of merchandise. Rehfield also furnish these concerns a window card. About forty merchants are also participating in another ticket gag at a weekly rate of $1 each. Copy states that the ticket is worth ten cents with every purchase of a 35c ticket, or five cents on 25c ticket, reducing prices on main floor to 25c or balcony to 20c, through cooperation of firm and local theatre. Color of cards and dates are changed weekly. We are advised that the merchants sometimes get cold feet on this one because customers do not always ask for the tickets, and consequently advance objections to the weekly charge. When the rate has to be cut to fifty cents in order to hold the objectors, Rehfield states the return is not what it should be.

Our Bloomfield representative has experimented with various methods of exploitation in his town of 2,300 population, trying out big town stunts, etc., and finding them unsuitable; now he confines himself to simple gags like those described above and results are gratifying. He's passing them along to others who may find themselves in similar situations.

Now that the Fall season has opened up Rehfield will be trying out a lot of other business boosting gags, and we know he'll share them with his fellow Club members.

From the photographs received we have assembled this composite layout showing a portion of the "New Product Exhibit" and how it was made up from Product Announcement Book copy. We recommend this as an excellent medium for attracting attention and starting word-of-mouth comment about the fine pictures to be released this fall.

AKIN PROMOTED $2,000 WORTH OF MERCHANDISE FOR A SWELL CAMPAIGN

An excellent illustration of the way showmen are going out after business these days is brought to light in a promotional scheme put over among a number of merchants by Wally Akin, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Dallas, Texas. The following is no mere stunt but, to the contrary, represents activities involving the give-away of some $2,000 worth of practical articles. The whole scheme was based on acquainting Dallas people with Dallas-made products.

Akin first obtained approval of his move from the local Chamber of Commerce to advertise "Made-in-Dallas" merchandise. Then he lined up twenty manufacturers to give different articles away at his theatre over a six-week period. The owner of the theatre contributed rent-free a vacant store in a building close to the theatre for exhibition of the merchandise. Booths were built inside the store in order to provide individual display for the several concerns and the store front and face of building were appropriately decorated for the occasion.

Picture to yourself a modern store building with twenty booths full of valuable articles such as sacks of flour, radios, many cans of coffee, meat and vegetables, dozens of hats, furniture, lighting fixtures, hosiery, traveling bags, dresses, suits of clothing, groceries of all description, haberdashery, drugs, and many other articles indispensable in the home. From all accounts the display must have taken on the proportions of a small department store.

The campaign was plugged in the newspapers, on the screen and in the lobby and in bulletin boards in various factories and stores. Special letters were also mailed to factory workers and store employees, trucks and delivery wagons carried banners announcing the event, heralds were distributed house to house and other methods used that would aid in any way to make the campaign a success.

Akin's scheme appears particularly adaptable to present-day needs in hundreds of communities throughout the country. Primarily, a move of this kind on part of the theatre manager is to increase trade and build additional good will for his house. However, money must circulate to produce results in that direction and so an incentive must be furnished to the man or woman who is to spend the money. Scarcity of ready cash in many quarters means that trade or manufacture of merchandise must in some way receive stimulation; hence, the creation of Akin's circle consisting of sanction from the board of trade, cooperation from manufacturer, introduction of locally made goods through personal inspection and distribution of same by the theatre, at no expense to theatre-management or to those who share in the give-aways. We take it for granted that the merchandise was given away by the usual methods, of which there are several and all familiar to every showman who has gone in for promotional work of this kind.

Maybe the above may appear a complicated treatise on economics to some readers and a bid for Akin or the writer to hurry to Washington to help the administration out of its difficulties. However, in the analysis his scheme is simple in the extreme, resolving itself into merely a cooperative effort to stimulate local trade in home-made products. That the theatre materially benefits in such a move may be readily seen. Our thanks to Wally Akin for sending us the information and we think he deserves much credit for his part in bringing to a successful conclusion such a comprehensive campaign; in fact, one of the best of its kind we've ever had the pleasure of recording.

"FAINT CARDS" WERE HANDED TO PATRONS OF INDIANA THEATRE

The old crying towels appear to have given away to "faint cards," according to a gag used recently at the Indianapolis Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., on "Doctor X." The card read as follows:

"This Is Your Faint Card—Instructions How To Use It: 1.—If you faint you won't know it—so we'll keep it unknown also. 2.—If you feel a faint coming on, just lean your head on some good looking man's shoulder—he'll probably take care of you. 3.—If your husband or boy friend faints just tell the usher and he will send a pretty nurse. Yours, Doctor X."

FALL MERCHANDISING IDEAS SUGGESTED BY JACK JACKSON

Here Are Many Tried and Proven Box Office Campaigns Designed to Build Business for New Season!

Step right this way and hand a glad mitt to none other than good ol' Jack (Sherlock Holmes) Jackson. That "Sherlock" reference coming by reason of the picture herewith.

But, getting down to serious business, we are here to thank Jack for his fine spirit and to pass along to showbusiness in general and several thousand showmen in particular, the first installment of some swell fall-merchandising material — some specially written for the Club pages and the balance being gleaned from the Comerford-Publix Division bulletins.

Jackson's fine work under Division Manager Walsh is already well known to readers of this section. This particular article, however, is the result of a request from your Chairman for something special to help get the boys off on the right foot in their campaigning for the new season. "CHICK"

UNLESS our good friend "Chick" Lewis was kidding when he asked me to write this article, it should meet your gaze just as you turn your back on amusement parks; the lure of the road; enticing country vales; the comforts of a front porch on a summer evening and other hot weather obstacles to satisfying theatre receipts. All of which is to say, SEPTEMBER: and, unless the signs of returning normality betry us, September, 1932 will be different from all of the Septembers that have gone before.

From Saving to Selling!

This September we turn our efforts from a period of saving and start a period of selling. We turn our backs on depression and, after two years of groping in the dark, finally see the bright star of prosperity rising on the business horizon. To the hard working, sound thinking showman, this September is not "just another month," but the harbinger of a new and profitable theatre season. This year, more than all others, we have an abounding faith in the claims of producers that they have realized the mistakes of the past and are going to give us the kind of attractions that will fill those seats that have been empty so long. And—this faith in the new product is inspiring a new type of sales effort to guarantee grosses that will make the production of good attractions profitable to the companies responsible. The conviction that the producing companies will keep faith and turn out the kind of entertainment that will bring back the SRO sign makes it a duty of every theatre manager to expend every atom of ingenuity, energy and inspiration to get the last dollar in attendance from all attractions playing his theatre.

This last year has been a tough one; one that required a maximum of effort at all times and during which many gallons of midnight oil were burned seeking a remedy for poor business. I firmly believe that each and every one of us has profited more than we know from this strenuous effort and that we now possess a keener intuition of picture sales prospectus. In groping through the maze of ideas presented from outside sources and those generated in our own minds we have learned to dodge the pitfalls of expensive, non-productive activity and to appreciate the value of cooperative effort properly and intelligently directed through the medium of cost free and low cost selling with the result that we feel enthusiastically confident of our ability to surpass previous profit records.

"Chick" has asked that I advance a few ideas to stimulate thought along the lines of the new type of sales approach and for these you are indebted, not to the writer but, to the managers of the Comerford-Publix Division who have successfully put over every suggested tie-up offered here. These ideas are not theory, generated in a swivel chair, but hard down to earth accomplishments won in actual combat on the battle field of business.

Start in Front!

I could list here thirty managers who, with a bucket of paint and a couple of brushes, together with the assistance of their staff, have entirely reworked the fronts of their theatres at a saving of hundreds of dollars and, before embarking on any other activity, I would recommend a maximum of attention to your show window—the front of your theatre. The interiors, such as floors, wainscoting, etc., have also been reworked and a lot of the managers have gone so far as to clean the walls of the auditorium proper. Attention to your front and the cleaning of your theatre is mentioned first because of the necessity to create an inviting atmosphere in which to receive the patrons that will respond to the following activities.

Sell, Don't Give!

In the last twelve months premiums have become the order of the day. Bakers, laundries, department stores, druggists, etc., have centered a good portion of their sales appeal on premiums and cash awards. The thought naturally follows that there is no lure of greater attraction than a free ticket to a theatre. Contact the merchants, sell them on giving away tickets to your theatre with various units of merchandise and SELL at a slight discount if necessary, but SELL, don't give the tickets to the merchant. Remember, the merchant is buying other premiums and paying good money to advertise details of the give-away. Ergo, there's no good reason why you should give away your theatre and its marvelous public contact possibilities. You are selling him a premium whose attraction value is 10 to 1 over anything he could possibly give and you are most assuredly entitled to the same consideration he gives the chinaware salesman or others in the premium merchandising field. Block orders of 200 to 2,000 tickets are possible on this hook-up.

Merchants Associations should be contacted for united effort on one day each month to attract suburban and rural patronage. These associations to be sold a quantity of tickets to your theatre and the merchants participating in the drive to advertise these tickets and your attraction in each of their ads. Here you will be forced to make a concession and it is suggested that you limit the tickets to matinee patronage or, at the outside, place the time limit at 7 o'clock in the evening. Since each merchant is going to use your tickets to attract patrons to his store, it will be necessary for you to sell them at a price slightly lower than they are available at your box office. There is one instance on record of $865 accruing to two theatres on one matinee through activity of this kind.

Jewelers!

This is the season when credit jewelers open their barrage of big ads as a build-up to Christmas business. Contests on coming attractions at your theatre can be sold to these advertising jewelers who will provide all of the awards; carry large display ads; furnish window displays and extend the privilege of allowing an insert to go in their regular weekly mail in return for a display in your lobby and "mention" in the contest trailer prepared for your screen. This hook-up is just as big as you make it and we now have two large credit jewelers cooperating with theatres on a basis of $250 in prizes, a minimum of 500 inches of display newspaper advertising and the entire cost of typing, addressing and mailing to 30,000 of their customers.

Bakers!

Bakers, because of the recent free distribution of flour, are battling for business as never before and can easily be tied-up to give away an automobile at your theatre. In addition to getting the car as a lobby attraction, the baker should be prevailed upon to defray the entire cost of the insert carrying your program which is to be placed in his bread. To make the deal more effective for both the theatre and the baker it is suggested that the car be loaded up with flour and baking powder and awarded to the person guessing closest the number of loaves of bread that will be made from the flour and writing the best twenty-five word phrase to exploit the bread. This twenty-five word phrase is necessary in order to evade lottery laws and the possibility of two or more persons guessing correctly. The baker can also be prevailed upon to make certain loaves of bread made from the contents of the car "prize loaves." He will willingly furnish solicitors to contact auto dealers, refrigerator dealers, etc., for $5 credit memorandums to be included in certain loaves of bread. These credit memorandums to be transferable and acceptable on the purchase of radios, refrigerators, autos or whatever merchandise the cooperating concern may sell. Don't think you are impairing the value of your bakery tie-up by allowing other merchants to come into it. Any merchant will willingly jump at an opportunity to get a solicitation into the homes of the people of your town, particularly when his effort costs him nothing and promises a sale of his merchandise. The baker should put up from $50 to $100 in gold to be mixed into the loaves of bread made on the last night of the contest and it is on this last night and the two preceding ones that you will cash in at your theatre if you follow this scheme.

Arrange to have some of the flour taken out of the car three or four days before the actual give-away and have the baker advertise that his prize bread is going on sale; that ..... (number of loaves) were baked from the flour taken from the car yesterday but that a great quantity still remains. The second day duplicate this procedure and the third day repeat again carrying the information in the ad that only a small quantity (state number of sacks) of flour remains and that this will actually be mixed ON THE STAGE of your theatre before the audience and judges on the night of the give-away.

It is needless for me to explain that this last night everybody who guessed below the figure published in the morning and all those who think they are smart enough to determine the number of loaves that can be made from the remaining sacks of flour will be on hand at your theatre to place additional guesses. However, you will have to actually weigh the flour to determine the exact number of loaves that will be made at least the morning before your give-away, arranging for sufficient people to sort the coupons and separate the useless guesses in order to conserve the time of the judges and shorten the time allowed for stage appearance.

It is necessary to "trick" the loading of the car to preclude the possibility of experienced bakers taking advantage of their professional knowledge. Do this by taking out the back seat, building a false bottom and using 5-10-25-50 and 100 pound sacks of flour packed so as to entirely eliminate the possibility of accurate conjecture.

The Baking Company will pay the salary of a uniformed girl to distribute contest blanks in your lobby throughout the period of display. They should also pay for the printing and distribution of 14 x 22 or 22 x 28 cards to be displayed in the windows of all grocers handling their bread and place signs on all of their wagons or trucks distributing merchandise in your territory.

Laundry Tie-Up

This activity consists of interesting a large laundry in the use of theatre tickets as premiums to entice new patrons and encourage continued patronage from present customers.

In this instance you are simply trading a modern 1932 advertising idea for cooperation from the merchant and the sales approach should be along the lines of premium appeal. Point to bakeries, participators in trading stamp activities, newspaper circulation stunts and other business enterprises resorting to premium donations to illustrate the success of this type of advertising effort and then clinch the argument with the well known fact that theatre tickets provide a 100 per cent lure to all classes of people.

The laundry is to set a certain amount of business, in dollars and cents, as the goal a customer must reach to secure a theatre ticket. The customer saves the laundry slips until the required amount is reached and exchanges them at the laundry office for order for an admission ticket that will be honored at the box office of your theatre. These orders are to be redeemed by the laundry for the amount of cash involved at regular specified intervals.

In following out this idea it would be necessary—

1. That special slips be ordered by the laundry at their expense with sufficient blank space allowed at the top for over-printing the details of the cooperative efforts and the current attraction at your theatre.
2. That you ascertain the approximate number of slips required weekly and arrange for the over-printing making sure that proper display is given your current attraction. This over-printing is at the expense of the theatre.
3. Be sure that any overage of printed slips is taken up one day prior to your change of date and that slips carrying your next attraction are supplied. Watch this carefully to keep from sending out erroneous advertising on your theatre.
4. The laundry is to allow a frame, preferably 22 x 28, to be attached to the sides of its wagons for the insertion of card copy calling attention to the cooperative effort and the current attraction at your theatre. Frame and cards to be supplied at the expense of the theatre.
5. It is advisable that the theatre appoint its own representative to visit the storage place of the laundry's vehicles and change the cards on the last night of your current show. This relieves the laundry of the physical effort and insures that the change will be made properly.

The nature of this activity and the expense to the cooperating merchant is such that it is necessary to grant EXCLUSIVE for the party or parties participating.

It should run a minimum of three months.

Telegraph Blanks in Packages!

The purpose of this activity is to secure advertising in the outgoing packages of the city's leading department store and consists of telegraph blanks conveying a joint appeal for patronage at some coming sale at the merchant's place of business and attendance at your theatre.

The copy should always be indirect, viz., "Gloria Swanson looks remarkable in the gowns she wears in "What a Widow" her latest talking, singing picture. She is supported by John Boles and Adolph Menjou which opens at the Capitol Theatre next Thursday. While the gowns worn by Miss Swanson are gorgeous and expensive they are no more appealing or surpassing in style and design than those found in our $7.95 dress sale which starts next Friday morning at 9 o'clock.

This copy is purely illustrative and can be revamped to fit shoes and any other type of merchandise the cooperating party desires to exploit.

In carrying through the activity it would be necessary to—

Solicit the Postal Company for donation of several thousand blanks weekly selling them the idea that their mission is the same as every other progressive business man, to get the name of their company before the public and that in contributing their blanks for this purpose they are not only selling their name but giving a concrete sample of their service.

The merchant is to be approached from the angle that telegrams command attention—that the customer in his store today is the logical patron of tomorrow and that every effort should be exerted to encourage the return of that patron. The telegram is an invaluable means to this end.

Next, that the advertising campaign conducted by the theatre every week elevates the particular personality appearing in the pictures to a point where their name is a household by-word in every kitchen in your city and that the merchant is exercising exceptional judgment in taking advantage of this seven-day personality to encourage sales for his wares.

The merchant must be sold on the value of placing personality in his merchandise and that the screen stars of today carry more prestige in the trend of fashion for male and female appeal than any other class of people.

Under no circumstance is the star's name to be used to sponsor, vouch for or endorse merchandise or sales periods.

In successfully effecting this tie-up it will be necessary, 1st, to determine the approximate number of outgoing packages from the cooperating store, 2d, to secure a similar number of blanks from the Postal company, 3d, make arrangements with the printer for

DON'T SPEND FOOLISHLY!

"I said at the start of this article that we were passing from a period of saving to a period of selling and I believe that every theatre owner possesses great confidence that the seasonal "loosening of the purse strings" and the calling off of the "dogs of retrenchment" will not result in a senseless spending spree on the part of the managers but that every dollar appropriated will be weighed on the scale of good business judgment and expended in such a manner as will bring many companion dollars to the box office." J. J.

IDEAS THAT BRING RESULTS!

the use of typewriter type in setting up the message. Be certain to watch cost, as the paper is already furnished through your effort. About $1 to $1.50 per 1,000 is a fair price on this class of work. 4th, That the cooperating merchant be forcibly impressed with the value he is to receive from this effort and that mandatory instructions be issued to the employees that a telegram be enclosed with every outgoing package.

Under no circumstance allow the merchant to believe that this is nothing other than a stunt for the good of your theatre but impress that the amount of effort exacted from him is only a fair return for your donation of the use of star cuts, star personality and the privilege of tying to the prestige of your theatre.

Mannequins

Contact a local department store to donate the services of mannequins to appear at your theatre at stipulated periods daily, exhibiting gowns, shoes and other garments on sale at the cooperating merchant's establishment.

In selling this notion it would probably be best to convince the merchant of the advisability of creating interest now in fall merchandise and building that interest to a high peak in preparation for seasonal sales. Do not fail to impress upon him that theatre patrons are money spending people and that in allowing this exhibition you are offering him a 100 per cent prospective appeal. Lay stress on the fact that theatre-going people represent the greatest possible potential market for the finer things.

In successfully carrying out this idea it will be necessary, 1st, to make sure of the character of the girls that are going to display the garments. Girls must be selected at your approval. 2d, that proper arrangements be made with the store for them to assume all salary commitments of the girls. 3d, that definite periods of appearances be set. Probably one and one-half or two hours in the afternoon and two hours at night with promenades at twenty to thirty minute intervals. 4th, that the store arrange to carry on its advertising mention of the fact that they will have mannequins display latest fashions at the theatre and the name of the current attraction, stars, etc. 5th, that every effort be exerted to make sure that all mail matter leaving the store carry similar information. All of this expense is to be borne by the cooperating merchant.

1st, in return for his cooperation and expenditure you are offering him free use of your theatre and its many advantages, 2d, a dressing room that will be under proper lock and key to insure the safety of garments stored therein. Next, a one-sheet card displayed prominently calling attention to the time of promenades and the style of merchandise to be displayed whether it be shoes, hats, dresses, etc., with proper credits to his establishment.

This can be built up to a Fall Fashion Show if the merchant so desires.

It is suggested that this extend over a five- or six-week period.

Coffee or Tea Tie-Up

Contact a local manufacturer or distributor of coffee prevailing upon them to employ a hostess at their expense and serve coffee free to your customers in your theatre. All expense of coffee, sugar and cream is to be absorbed by the cooperating merchant. They will also be required to have an adequate number of cards printed and distributed to the concerns and other establishments handling the particular brand of coffee selected. The expense of printing and distributing is to be absorbed by the cooperating manufacturer.

In making use of this idea it is necessary that you watch, 1st, the character of the hostess selected to dispense the coffee, 2d, that arrangements be made for the preparation of the coffee outside the theatre to preclude the possibility of odor disturbing your patrons, 3d, that suitable arrangements be made in some obscure place of the theatre for the washing and cleaning of of chinaware used. This chinaware, spoons and other necessary equipment be supplied at the expense of the cooperating merchant.

The table and booth from which the coffee is served is to be constructed and decorated in keeping with the refinements of the theatre and any advertising on same must not exceed in color, tone or dignity the policy of the operation.

In selling this idea to the manager you can point to a similar cooperation on the part of the Lipton Tea Co., and Van Hooten Cocoa Co., and lean heavily on the fact that when contacting with your patrons he is employing a direct means of solicitation with the most desirable class of buyers in your city. In exchange for his outside advertising you can offer a one-frame trailer on the screen of your theatre reading as follows: "Another Publix service. Bluebrand coffee served to our patrons without charge." This last in itself is worth $500.00 a week and you know that we have refused this amount of money for similar advertising on the screen.

It might be possible to interest the manufacturer in employing a fortune teller for the purpose of further entertaining the people taking advantage of the coffee samples.

It is more than possible that you will be able to prevail upon the manufacturer to assume the cost of newspaper space to be appended to your daily newspaper ad in return for the screen announcement above mentioned.

Tie-Up With Large Grocer

It is suggested that immediate contact be made with the manager with a view of prevailing upon him to share the cost of printing heralds that would carry joint appeal of attractions at the theatre with some coming sale at the store. This appeal to be divided, one side to the theatre, the other side to the store. Providing the store is interested in paying the cost of numbering these heralds it will be agreeable for the theatre to allow 100 lucky numbers to be admitted free on the coming week's attraction. The numbers of these lucky heralds to be posted on a board in the theatre lobby and the herald to carry information to the holder that it is necessary to call in the lobby to ascertain whether or not the number they hold is good for a ticket. The set piece for this lucky number display is to be made at the expense of the theatre.

In approaching the manager of the store to effect sale of this idea it is essential that you stress the importance of encouraging continued patronage of every day customers as one of the most essential forms of modern merchandising.

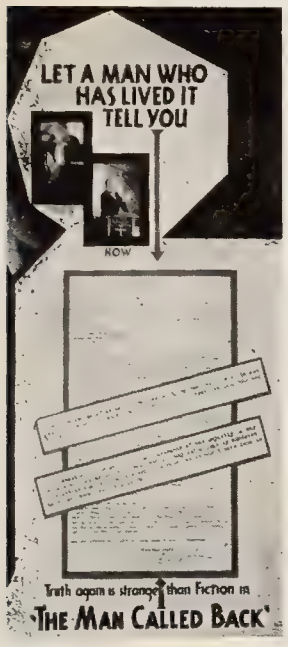
Lay full stress on the fact that in donating 100 free tickets the theatre is participating to the amount of $50 weekly in cash outlay. Next, make certain that mandatory orders are placed with every clerk in the store that it be a part of their duties to see that a herald is placed in every package leaving the establishment. Next, make certain that the store manager understands clearly the amount of printing cost he will be forced to assume and that the admissions to the theatre are for the coming week's attraction and not the current week. Next, when the details of the arrangement are arrived at place same in writing so that no misunderstanding can occur and that both parties will live up to the obligation they assume.

It is imperative that unusual attention be given to the layout and copy of theatre ads in order to insure that our half of the herald surpasses in selling appeal that of the cooperating merchant.

Be sure to ascertain the approximate number of packages leaving the cooperating store weekly and order your heralds accordingly. Avoid surplus wherever possible.

Drug Store Tie-Ups

The same basic idea of the present customer being the logical prospect for future patronage is to be used in selling a chain of drug stores the idea of passing heralds to their daily patrons to advertise coming special activities at the store.



In carrying out this idea it is important that you avoid trick tie-ups such as, Jack Oakie Splits, Clara Bow Sundaes, etc., and prevail upon the merchant to delegate his side of the herald to the sale of staple commodities. It is necessary that the cooperating merchant be prevailed upon to assume one-half of the cost of printing the heralds which should be either 6 x 9 or 9 x 12 in size. Next, impress upon the merchant the necessity of seeing one of the heralds accompany every package leaving the store as only in this manner can you and he expect to profit most from the effort and money expended. Next, by all means don't fail to thoroughly sell the merchant that the prestige of your theatre, the popularity of its stars and the patronage to your attractions is of tremendous value in lending personality to the merchandise he has to sell. Point to Lux, Lucky Strike and other national advertisers who make use of theatre personalities as evidence of success of this policy of advertising.

(To be concluded next week)

The balance of Jack Jackson's material will appear in next week's issue and will include several more box office suggestions. Please keep in mind that every single item in this article has been tried and proven. There are no hay-wire ideas for you to experiment with. We urge every live-wire showman to seriously consider the possibilities of every one of these suggestions.

MAURICE BERGMANN AND LOU SMITH PUT OVER GOOD CAMPAIGN

Sensational copy in newspaper ads, window displays in a number of leading stores in New York City, a tie-up with a large chain grocery concern and a radio personality stunt, were highlights of a Manhattan and Brooklyn campaign mapped and executed by Lou Smith, publicity director of the Rialto, and Maurice Bergman, of the Brooklyn Paramount, on "Man Called Back."

Due to current news developments the Rialto and Paramount both laid considerable stress on the "suicide or murder?" angle, which figures in the climax of the picture, in all newspaper ads.

As a follow up of announcements in Wednesday evening and Thursday morning papers, effective window displays appeared in the Times Square area and downtown section of Brooklyn. One of the most elaborate of these was a window in the store of Brokaw Bros. (see photo), a leading men's store in the heart of the city. Linen clothing was shown in a setting of green foliage and grass, with an enlargement of a still of Conrad Nagel and Doris Kenyon. Arranged in groups against the green matting were 15 regular 8 x 10's. A card read as follows: "Brokaw recommends linen suits as worn by Conrad Nagel, star of 'The Man Called Back,' a Worldwide Picture, Rialto, (Date). A duplicate of this setup was used in the main window of the Weber & Heilbroner store in downtown Brooklyn.

Rated from an advertising standpoint as an "outdoor town," the Brooklyn campaign was featured by an extensive tie-up with the Bohack stores, a chain store concern operating approximately 800 units in Kings and Queens. The entire chain served as poster stands for the Paramount showing of the picture through display of "photo news flash" editions, featuring scene stills and portraits of players in the film. The "suicide or murder?" angle was again used for headlines.

The regeneration theme of the picture secured the services of an evangelist radio-personality for the radio-broadcast end of the campaign. This evangelist, a former criminal and now a preacher who has support and endorsement from many prominent people in the city, has been attracting considerable attention in connection with his "emergency shelter," where free meals are served to the down and outers. He saw the picture and gave it his personal endorsement over his Sunday radio hour. The small photo shows a reproduction of his testimonial used for display purposes.

Another stunt was distribution of 150,000 copies of a four page tab paper, printed on green stock and bristling with live heads and dramatic closeups and scenes from the picture. This was issued jointly by the Rialto and Brooklyn Paramount and was widely distributed over both boroughs by men stationed at important points.

We're passing along Smith and Bergman's Metropolitan campaign with the thought that others in this Club may be able to adapt the ideas to their own communities. The stunts outlined above offer interesting proof that leading merchants in the big city can be approached and sold on the idea.

TIME TO FRESHEN UP!

The blending of colors and color schemes has always been identified with theatres of modern trend. The frequent changing of colors in the lighting of your theatre and lobbies is bound to create favorable comment from your patrons and keep them from taking everything about the house so matter-of-fact.

In many theatres a fortune was spent on the installation of expensive lighting equipment and wiring, yet one often finds that the bulbs have not been changed or the colors used for years at a time.

Try a change of color scheme and see how it freshens things up and makes the ordinary look unusually good to the eye.

The next step should be a complete clean-up of the marquee lighting and marquee ceiling. Where simple solid colors are used, one of your employees should be used to repaint the portions of the marquee which should have attention before the ravages of winter make it a doubly expensive job.

All bulbs should be wiped off with a damp cloth. (Assuming, of course, that they are the inside tint variety). This is especially important under the marquee where the plain white lamps are used and soon become covered with soot and dirt.

To retain the attractiveness of your front you must pay careful attention to the lighting. Don't hurt the appearance of that front by permitting broken or burnt out bulbs to remain in the sockets for weeks on end. Replacements should be made every day.

Rosenthal "Falls" Again

Morris Rosenthal, well known Round Tabler and for the past season manager of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., can't keep away from falling water. Now we are informed that he is located at the Rialto Theatre, Little Falls, N. Y., from whence he will also direct the destinies of Skouras houses in the nearby cities of Herkimer and Ilion. Little Falls may not compare with Niagara as far as splendor is concerned, but headquarters there means a better job for Morris; in fact he may be considered a supervisor from now on. And he has the good wishes of the entire club.

Trailer Suggestions

If you haven't received your copy of a folder recently published by National Screen Service it will probably pay to drop the company a line and be put on the mailing list. It contains many excellent suggestions for selling attractions via trailer method and show-selling tips for all dates from September 1st to Nov. 30. The title of the folder is "Facts for Fall."

NEWSPAPER AD CONSTRUCTION!

STUNT CONTRIBUTED LARGELY TO SUCCESS OF CLEVELAND SHOW

Through Monroe W. Greenthal, head of the United Artists exploitation staff, we learn that a "Zombie" stunt contributed to the box office success enjoyed by "White Zombie" at Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. It is claimed the picture played to 16,728 people during the first two days, which is also set down as a record for the house.

Credit, he tells us, goes to M. A. Malaney, Loew exploiteer, for putting over the stunt pictured in the accompanying photo. The "zombie" rode through the streets of Cleveland for several hours, never for once stirring from his rigid posture or changing his expression. He also stood for several hours without moving in front of a 40 x 60.

A few other snap shots we have at hand offer evidence that a crowd gathered around the bally wherever it went, which is all anyone can ask in the way of results. There's been a bit of a kick-back in some cities as to suggested ghastliness of this stunt, so use it to fit your own community.

24-Sheet Campaign

According to Mort Blumenstock, director of advertising for the Warner theatre circuit, company houses throughout the country are utilizing the 3,000 twenty-four sheet stands engaged for the outdoor campaign on "Doctor X." The posting broke with the general release date, Aug. 27.

THEATRE AD CONSTRUCTION!

Eddie Hitchcock Continues Ad Series With Another Group of Ads Made From Exchange Mats!

THIS week's ad mat layout gives us an opportunity to prove the effectiveness of small sig cuts. With most theatres it has become a hard and fast rule to use sig cuts the width of the ad but it is not necessary. If you have an attraction that the public can depend upon for good entertainment, nothing will keep them from finding out where it is and effective use of small sig cuts helps you to get a better ad display out of the material you have to work with.

In this respect we learn a valuable lesson from some of the most successful department stores in the country. Macy's, for instance, is considered one of the foremost successful users of white space, and even in eight column displays their signature is held down to a modest degree.

There are those, also, who will argue with you as to just where your sig cut belongs. Many contend that the top of the ad is the proper place and no other. Here we disagree again. If the top of your ad is properly ruled you have all the protection that is necessary and it matters not where you put your sig cut (except in the middle), just so long as you get the most out of your layout. As to the ad in this week's layout:

"Guilty as Hell" (Paramount)

Here is a great title for any manager to play with. It's the kind of a title that doesn't come around often and it can be well utilized to attract public attention. You may find it a little difficult adapting the press sheet ads on account of the trick lettering that has been used. The mat sizes will have to be watched carefully, also, as they are short on columnar width and you will have to resort to some juggling on your layouts for an effective display. Sell the cast heavy in your ads and you won't have to worry much about the box office.

"Blonde Venus" (Paramount)

There is a fine assortment of Dietrich heads in the ad mat layouts that can be manipulated to suit any purpose. "A Fugitive Hunted by Love" seems to strike the proper keynote in this story and it is suggested that exhibitors lay heavy on the copy slants offered in the press sheet.

"The Man Called Back" (Tiffany)

We cannot expect every single press book to furnish outstanding mat material for ad make-up and in this case we were a little disappointed with what the press book had to offer. However, it's all in a day's work and merely calls for a little more head-work to arrive at what will be best for our individual use.

Catch lines lend themselves to this sort of picture and no doubt the mats available, while not the best, will provide you with all you need in the way of ad material.

"War Correspondent" (Columbia)

This title will give you plenty of trouble due to its length and here again it might be better for you to have it type set. The cast of names ought to help a lot in the selling and your own copy slants will probably work out better than those offered.

Newspaper advertising need never suffer because we do not find exactly what we would like (to our own way of thinking) in the way of mats. That is just why this sort of material is so flexible. You can do most anything you please with exchange mats and they will fit right into any scheme of advertising you are anxious to achieve.

Long titles are always tough handles to play with, but it has been done before and will be done many times after we have forgotten this particular one. All the more reason why you should play around with this a bit more than usual to determine what is the best way to tackle a long title with effective results.

It may point the way out for future use, too. After all, we cannot expect all titles on the coming product to be nice and short and convenient.

Club Index for Month of AUGUST

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of August. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

There's More Truth To This Than You'd Imagine, Think It Over!

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Back in the old days when vaudeville used to be billed over films, Lew Preston, manager of the Ridgewood Theatre, started in the game of selling entertainment to the public. Working in the advertising and exploitation end, it didn't take him long to realize that those two mediums of selling were vital organs that kept the whole machine in motion; so he specialized and subsequently demonstrated that he could produce results.

Lew Preston

He started in a small house in Brooklyn, N. Y., a tough spot but one that kept him on the alert for ideas to bring in the good old customers. Then, his chance came to show his stuff with the Small-Strausberg Circuit and he became general manager for that firm's houses in Brooklyn and on Long Island. Later on he went with the Mayer & Schneider circuit, when Fox began his expansion move in the Metropolitan district. A merger cost Lew his job with that circuit and he then turned his attention to putting the local Republic theatre in the big money class. After that experience he again had a string of houses under his supervision with Harry Woodin in the Manhattan and Bronx division. Prior to going with Randforce, he acted as managing director of the Fox Academy of Music, New York City.

Preston is a showman all the way through and this organization is proud to number him among its members. That he will always be in the limelight wherever show-selling is going on, goes without saying.

HERE'S A GAG FROM MORRIS THAT YOU CAN FIT TO OTHER FILMS

We cannot very well show you a photograph secured recently by Larry Morris, manager of the St. George Theatre, St. George, Staten Island, N. Y., for it will not reproduce, but we can at least describbe what it was all about.

It seems that Larry was showing "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and happened to be walking down the aisle of the theatre with a local photographer. The rapt expression of a youngster caught his eye and he made arrangements to have the boy pose for a picture. Next day the photo and a statement by the boy concerning the thrills of the film appeared in the local paper. It also happened that the subject was a Boy Scout and as a result his whole troop attended the theatre the following day.

Morris did remarkable business with children with "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and he's passing his chance gag along as one which can be easily arranged by any manager to gain some additional publicity.

TOM KANE IS STILL CARRYING ON OUT IN REDWOOD CITY, CALIF.

Just a few lines to let you know that our old friend and Club contributor, Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Calif., is still carrying on in the same old way, despite the alleged depression, slack season, etc.

A tear sheet from his local paper at hand indicates that tie-ups between theatre and newspaper are still considered a means of promoting business for both parties. This time Tom and the ad man got together on a subscription stunt, announcing in a deep three-column ad that boys and girls could earn "ringside" seats to see Jimmie Cagney in "Winner Take All" by turning in properly filled out blanks calling for one month's subscription to the paper. This stunt produced good results. The accompanying photo shows the front Kane made.

Just before getting away on a well earned and needed week's vacation to Lake Tahoe, Tom promoted an automatic refrigerator for give-away on a Saturday night and also arranged a J. C. Penney tie-up for a kiddie matinee. The concern donated a kid's pool table for the matinee.

We see by the "Hundred Percenter," West Coast theatre organ, that Tom recently jumped from 4th to 2nd place in district standing with a marking of 99.04. Right next to him, running neck and neck with Tom, is Round Tabler Al W. Gillis. And there's plenty more of the boys strung here and there along the sheet; however, we're dealing with Tom Kane right now. Here's hoping the bracing air of Lake Tahoe did him a lot of good and that he thoroughly enjoyed his vacation.

We'll soon be able to tell according to the amount—and kind—of material he sends along dealing with his fall activities. Tom is rather a reliable with us at Club headquarters, his showmanship having been a feature of our pages for a long time.

"ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL"!

E. T. WARNER manages the Radium Theatre down in Cape Charles, Va., and he joins this week's crop of new members. Glad to have you with us, Warner, and we hope you'll get the "Club Spirit" and become an active contributor to this department. Any little new wrinkle that you used the past season, or at other times, to boost attendance at your house, will prove useful information for your fellow Round Tablers. Shoot along whatever dope you have at hand and we'll do the rest. Incidentally, Manager Warner is not connected with any circuit; he runs an independent house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JIMMIE KNOX has charge of the Regent Theatre over in Arlington, Mass., and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction in this week's list of applicants. He manages a 1100 seater on the E. M. Loew Circuit, a well known theatre organization in the New England states. Now that Jimmie has fallen in step with the rest of this large outfit, we'll be expecting news from his neck of the country—and it can't arrive too soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SAM BOGOSLAWSKY is the manager of the Carolina Theatre down South in Batesville, S. C., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this great army of showmen. Welcome to the gang, Sam, and now show all of us that you joined to help your fellow showman along the tough spots in the road. What was that last gag you used to fill the house? Shoot in some information on it so we can pass the dope along to the other fellows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL L. KRUEGER hails from Grosse Point Farms, State of Michigan, and we take it that he is both owner and manager of the Punch and Judy Theatre in that community. It is also our pleasure to list his name on the Club roster this week and we want him to know that we're mighty glad to include him among the season's new members. He operates ("thank goodness," he says) a theatre free from all circuit red tape; in other words, an independent house. Consequently, we will count on Carl having enough spare time now and then to drop a few lines to his Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MARY I. CANNING (MRS.) is the owner-manager of the Carleton Theatre in Whitefield, N. H., and it is with a great deal of pleasure that we add her name among the many lady-managers in this ever-increasing organization of showmen and women. Now that Mrs. Canning is a full fledged member of the Round Table Club, we hope she will do her full share to send in news concerning the selling of shows in her home town. We'll be looking forward to receipt of her next letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED MAY not only manages but owns the Gem Theatre down South in Carrollton, Ky., and he's another new Round Tabler already to be introduced to the rest of the gang. May operates on a straight picture policy with four changes each week, which is enough action to keep anyone up late nights, thinking up ways and means to bring the good old customers to the box office.

In addition to pictures he uses "radio acts" now and then as a change of diet for his patrons. We're glad to have Fred with us and will look forward to hearing from him.

R. H. CHRISMAN, JR., has charge of the Berea Theatre, Berea, Ky., and we are also in receipt of his application for membership in this constantly-growing organization of showmen. His policy of operation is the showing of "Good Pictures," and we hope he gets them. According to the line up this season there's no reason to think his patrons will be disappointed. At any rate, a cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler, and we hope he will become an active member of our organization.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED BROWN manages the Fox Theatre, a Midwesco house over in Green Bay, Wis., and cordial greetings are also extended this new member of our Club. Fred operates a house that seats over 2,000 people and there's no doubt but that he's got a whole lot of ideas on how to keep those seats filled. We hope he'll shake a few of his tricks loose from his sleeves and shoot them along for the benefit of his fellow showmen. How about that, Brown?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALBERT W. COHAN is the manager of the Watertown Theatre over in Watertown, Mass., and it's our pleasure to announce that he, too, has joined this outfit. Okay, Al, and now that you're in the army let's hear from you often. You must have a whole flock of gags that will help your brother Round Tablers sell their shows. Get the habit of sending them in to your Club. We'll see that the information is passed along the line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES C. CASSINELLI is the owner-manager of the Star Theatre down in Bulan, Ky., and he is another new member in line for introduction to his fellow Club members. Glad to have you with us, too, Cassinelli, and we want you to let us know what's taking place in show business down in your town. Three changes each week ought to be productive of show-selling ideas. Let's hear about what you are doing to put 'em over.

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

E. L. ORNSTEIN manages the Vernon Theatre in Mt. Vernon, Ky., and we received his application for membership in the Club at the same time Theodore Schlosser's arrived. Now that we have two representatives at the Vernon, this department should be in line for many a litle yarn concerning the selling of shows at that theatre. So bear that in mind, E. L., we'll depend on either you or Schlosser to keep the Club posted on show-business in your town. Shoot along some of your ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

L. O. DAVIS is the manager of the Hazard Theatre down South in Hazard, Ky., and we also want to acknowledge his application for membership in the fastest stepping group of showmen who ever banded together for a common cause. The same cordial welcome extended to all the other fellows is also in line for Davis and we hope he'll become a regular contributor to this department. He operates on a straight picture policy and we're sure he'll have some good suggestions to pass along. Let's hear from you, L. O., just as often as you can find the time.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. E. CHRISTIAN both owns and manages the Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky., and it begins to look as though this Kentucky contingent of Round Tablers is growing by leaps and bounds. Club representatives are in all sections of the state and if this department doesn't carry a lot of news concerning activities of Kentucky showmen,it certainly will not be our fault. So loosen up that writing arm of yours, A. E., and tell us what's going on in showbusiness down in your town. We'll be looking for your next letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BENJAMIN F. SMART is another assistant manager to join our outfit and he has the job of helping Round Tabler J. B. Sams run the Rialto Theatre down in Danville, Va. Ben is only 22 years of age but is fast proving his ability as an up-and-coming showman. His last position was doorman at another house so his present post can be looked upon only as a reward for faithful and efficient service. With both Smart and Sams to let the rest of the gang know what's going on in showbusiness down their way, this department ought to be able to get some news from Danville.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

THEODORE SCHLOSSER is president of the Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky., and we're also glad to announce that he's another newly elected member of this large organization. Schlosser is an experienced showman, having been connected with B. F. Keith's, Great Lakes Theatres, Inc., The Fourth Avenue Amusement Co., and the Schwartz Amusement Co., prior to locating in Mt. Vernon. He should have many ideas of value to his brother Club members and we'll be on the lookout for them.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. J. SAAS hails from out in Willow Springs, Mo., where he operates the Star Theatre. He has no circuit affiliations, has Mr. Saas, hence we take it that he is both owner and manager. We are glad to acknowledge his application for membership in our Club and hope he will also do his share to keep it filled with interesting news on show-selling in all parts of the world. Surely, there is some stunt that he used recently that brought increased receipts to the box office. The other fellows in this organization want to know what it was.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

When Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, spoke at the Drake luncheon last Wednesday, Barney Balaban acted as chairman and speakers in addition to Mr. Zukor were Jack Miller, Jules Ruben, Floyd Brockell and Nate Wolfe. At the speaker's table were Neil Agnew, Morris Katz, Milton Feld, Walter Immerman and Rubin, Miller, Wolfe and Balaban.

Herman Schoenstadt challenged Mr. Zukor's claim to being the oldest in the gathering and on the admitted ages of both apparently won the argument by some 13 years.

To round out the day it seems that almost the entire industry attended the Baer-Schaff scrap the same night. Under a tieup with Allied a number of theatres had obtained 10 tickets for distribution to patrons in return for advertising the fight on the screen. Apparently a few customers were overlooked. After the box fight a lot of the folk were guests of Eddie Grossman at a midnight preview of "Mr. Robinson Crusoe." All in all, a big day.

Harry Walters, formerly short subject booker for Publix, has joined Educational-World Wide in charge of short subject booking for this territory.

The Melrose Park Theatre at the Chicago suburb has been leased to L. W. Alexander of Chicago by the owner, S. Buschel of Merrill, Wis., and was opened Saturday. The lease was negotiated through Albert Goldman.

Walter Branson, RKO district manager, returned from New York last week, but stayed only a few days before being called back to the big town.

Irving Mack, what with one thing after another to delay him, finally said now or never last week and pulled out of town for a vacation.

Roy Alexander has taken over the Melrose Park theatre, formerly operated by Clyde Elliott.

Joe Skouras has reopened the Triangle theatre. He has remodeled and redecoraated the house and given it the cheerful name of Sunnyside.

The Pantheon theatre on the North Side and the Evanston theatre in Evanston are undergoing repairs and decoration in preparation for early reopening.

Max Gumbiner and J. Young have reopened the Drexel theatre after a nifty job of remodeling the house.

An aftermath of Mr. Zukor's luncheon talk in which he urged everybody to "go to work," is the mysterious appearance in several film row offices of a sign reading: "No More Pinochle."

Joe Fisher, who used to haunt film row offices and folks with pencil and camera for the Herald, on September 10 married Florence Bartholmey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bartholmey. Since leaving the picture business Joe has come into dough via the baking industry.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 142.—(A) How many poles has an electric generator? How many poles has the power source of a three-wire system? (B) When work is done by electric current something must be consumed. What is it? (C) Can electricity be either seen or felt? Has it weight? (D) You have told us what is consumed when electricity performs work. Give us an illustration, using something other than electricity, that volume (amperage) is not consumed.

Answer to Question No. 134

Bluebook School Question No. 134 was: "(A) Tell us what effect distance of light source from converging mirror, or collector lens or mirror, has upon light loss? (B) Suppose you have a plano-convex condenser 4.25 inches in diameter. Light source is three inches from surface of collector lens. What diameter of the lens would be required to pick up the same amount of light if light source were moved one inch farther from surface of lens? (C) What should be the first task in adjustment of a projector optical train in which a condenser is utilized to collect and project the light?"

It has been hard to select from the mass of answers those which deserve mention. I have concluded to divide the credit. Out of 796 replies there were only 12 which could be justly termed correct in all parts. These were from G. E. Doe, C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, Bill Doe, S. G. Williams, T. Van Vaulkenburg, John Berger, Dave Goldberg and L. Hutch, W. Broadbent, H. Edwards and R. Sloat, A. Zerach, and Nic Granby.

There were, however, a goodly number who deserve credit for very creditable efforts to answer the various questions. They are: S. D. Love and W. Love, T. McGruder, A. Geibto and T. Larson, F. Ferguson, S. G. Williams, F. D. Tomlinson and D. Bullott, A. Bailey, R. F. Takagi, J. L. and F. Hanson, N. McGuire, R. J. Arnston, P. Jansen, M. L. Crakley, G. Farmann and H. Kuri, T. L. Jansen, B. D. Danelson, M. Mooney, H. L. Tomlinson and R. Spalding (the last five of whom answer as a unit), D. Lambert and T. Davis, G. Tinlin, P. O'Brien, L. Averson, J. Daniels, L. V. Kobbe and F. Davis, J. Williams, M. E. Garvin and L. D. Jaffray, B. L. Palmer and H. D. Palmer, L. D. Simmons, J. Billings, C. Peters, S. Howard and L. D. Kurts, A. L. DeMar, J. Hendershot and R. D. Konley, R. Singleton, D. Holmes, L. Mason, S. Kay, B. Wheeler and B. Walker, D. Emmerson, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, D. Anderson, J. Ahrenson, S. True, J. Rathburn and D. Little, A. Breston, P. K. Daniels, D. K. Ormie and J. B. Buckley, O. L. DeVerney, O. L. Darls, P. L. Davis, M. H. Lonberger, L. B. Heitner and R. Lobe, D. Andrews, C. Ray and T. Taylor, F. Harrlor and N. F. Kindom, T. Murphy, D. R. Kleinberg, D. V. Peterson and L. H. Grimes, F. F. Franks, M. T. Sanders, A. Johnson, S. Carroll, L. Garbou, D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant, P. L. Jensen, H. M. Jackson and G. L. Gann, L. Michaelson and R. T. Thompson, L. Ross, P. H. Howe and D. Holler, and T. R. Peters.

I have selected the answer of G. E. Doe as best in the matter of Section A. He says:

"This question is not quite as simple as it appears upon the surface. Chiefly, of course, it is a matter of what I shall term density of illumination at different distances from any light source. This decreases inversely as the square of the distance from the source, and since a condenser or mirror can only pick up the amount of light contained in a certain definite area, it follows that the greater the density of illumination per unit area in that space, the more light the mirror or condenser will 'collect' and send forward, less losses by absorption and reflection, to the projector aperture. This latter fact, taken in connection with the inverse square law, answers the question completely, in so far as has to do with light loss."

As to Section B, we will hear from Brothers Evans and Rau, who say:

"Should a collector lens with a diameter of 4.25 inches pick up a certain amount of light when located three inches from the light source, the necessary diameter to pick up the same amount of light with the distance of light source to lens increased to four inches, would be 5.50 inches.

"Or, by rules of proportion: As three is to four, so is 4.25 to X, or 3:4::4.25:X, which works out 5.6 inches, or just a trifle more than 5.5 inches. It is solved thus:

"$4.25 \times 4 = 17 \div 3 = 5.66$."

Concerning Section C, Lester Borst says:

"The first and most important task in adjustment is to ascertain [by careful experiment, using old, discarded lenses if any unbroken ones be available] just how close the light source may be to the face of the collector lens without excessive breakage.

"The high importance of this adjustment is made evident by the answer to Section A of this question. I have found very many cases where I was very certain that large amounts of electrical power were being wasted by reason of the condenser being located an unnecessary distance from the light source. Such procedure may save collector lenses, all right, but it may also very easily waste sufficient electric power in one year to buy a bushel or two of collector lenses."

By the way, Bausch & Lomb remarks that in Question No. 133, the lens termed "plano-meniscus" might better have been termed plano-convex.

Two with Country Store Proposition Are Sought

S. D. Meyers of the Lyric theatre at McIntosh, S. D., in a letter to the HERALD, calls attention to a promotional scheme whereby, he writes, several exhibitors in his territory were bilked.

"Two men who were to put on a country store proposition signed us up and went around and grabbed the business men for guest tickets," Mr. Meyers says. "One was a short stocky man and the spokesman, the other fairly tall and slender and had little to say."

Frank Carter Passes

Frank B. Carter, Portland, Ore., branch manager for National Theatre Supply Company, died on the operating table at a hospital there. Mr. Carter had been associated with the company for many years in managerial posts at Portland and Seattle. National immediately closed the Portland branch and consolidated Oregon activities with Seattle.

Motion Picture Herald,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

May I offer much delayed thanks to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD for its kind and considerate cooperation in helping me get the job I now hold as motion picture projectionist? I deeply regret that I haven't been a subscriber to the HERALD from the first, but now I am enclosing $3.00 for one year's subscription starting as soon as possible.

Twice I have placed my ad in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and have gotten satisfactory results—both times—and should I be unemployed again I would not delay in placing another ad in the HERALD, for I can depend upon answers from my ads within four weeks after the first appearance of the ad.

Thanking you again for your wonderful cooperation, I remain

Very truly yours,
LADSON E. MERRITT

JENKINS' COLYUM

Omaha, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

This corn crop out here in Nebraska has got Old Man Gloom pretty groggy, and if those grain gambling referees down in Chicago will give the crop half a show it will give the Old Man a haymaker and he will go down for the count regardless of who is elected.

The farmers of western Iowa and eastern Nebraska have been taking a hand in the produce scrap and we're glad that the authorities appear to be clearing up the picketing.

Strikes and boycotts never do any good except to arouse the public to a sense of justice one way or the other. They invariably harm the wrong people, and should this boycott prove effective the babies of Council Bluffs and Omaha will be the greatest sufferers, and we doubt if any farmer wants that to happen.

Joe Brandt of World Wide Pictures can shake hands with the cast and himself for producing "The Last Mile." This prison story, in our judgment, is a little bit bigger and a little bit better than "The Big House" or "Up the River." When you play this picture (which you should do soon) keep your eye on Edward Philips, Preston Foster and Daniel Haynes (the colored boy) especially; they give performances that will surprise you.

We went to the Orpheum last night and saw five acts of vaudeville, one feature picture and Jack Dempsey in person. One vaudeville act was excellent, the other four were just acts. Dempsey appeared in a little skit of fifteen minutes duration which was ten minutes too long.

We never saw a blacksmith that made a good senator, although we've got a few blacksmiths in the senate.

Will Rogers says that out on the desert of California in the town of Bishop he found only one Republican, and he was the postmaster. Well, that's nothing strange, a Democrat can't live out there, it's too damdry.

Two fellows were arguing politics in the lobby of the hotel last night. The Democrat said this country had had but two presidents since Thomas Jefferson: one was Grover Cleveland and the other was Woodrow Wilson. And the Republican said, "Well, thank God for that." When they got onto the tariff question they both got all het up and they convinced us that what they didn't know about the tariff would make several campaign speeches. They finally referred the matter to us and we said, "Well, gentlemen, to make a good politician one has to be strong from the neck down, and it is our opinion that you would both qualify 100 per cent," and this settled the argument.

We attended the screening of a Columbia picture yesterday. It was a Western and we believe the title was "Cornered," with Tim McCoy, Noah Beery and Raymond Hatton, and of course there was a gal in it too.

It was a bangup Western (in case you might want our opinion) and Tim was the hero, but he didn't get the gal, which is contrary to the rules laid down in the blue book. The hayrackers boys will eat this one up, hook, line and sinker, and it will please Uncle Abner and Aunt Samantha too.

Rockport, Mo.

As we see it, this corn belt has rounded the corner and is right on the heels of Her Highness, "Madam Prosperity." The old gal is making googoo eyes at the boys and she has filed a petition for divorce from Papa Depression on the grounds of non-support and cruelty to the children. We hope she wins.

Theatremen from all over the country tell us that business is showing an upward trend but is still far from normal. The small grain crop was above normal and the largest corn crop in the history of the country is now assured, and this no doubt accounts for the optimistic feeling that prevails wherever the tall corn waves. If we could do away with the crooners, jazz orchestras, politicians and the seven year itch, what a country this would be to live in.

Howard Colon of the Colonial Theatre at Hamburg, Iowa, said that he and Gatling Gun Gloom were just going into the tenth round with the excitement running high and chances about even. We are offering odds on Howard.

We met Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Staple of the Paramount Theatre here in Rockport, two very delightful young folks, and they were showing "Lena Rivers" to a fairly good sized house for a second night showing. They were entitled to have the house full, for they have a nice theatre, good sound and projection, and they are both lovely folks.

There is this about hay fever: when you've got that you will be too busy to have anything else. We find that one can't sneeze and swear at the same time, so we've cut out the swearing.

We'd like to see Roscoe Ates try to talk when he had hay fever. Wouldn't it be fun?

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

DANCERS

Jack Holland and June Knight
Detroit Fisher

These two are billed as "Aristocrats of the Dance," and they are just that. Their work is a combination of ballroom, adagio and acrobatic dancing. They offer an excellent rhumba with tap trimmings.

Veils Ballet
Philadelphia Fox

A charming trio of dancers led off with a modernized version of the "Merry Widow," later forming a background for Edna Errico, in green velvet pajama suit, who sang "It's Great to Be in Love." Suddenly the girls advanced to the front of the stage, each with two illuminated canes, and gave a novel and striking pinwheel dance in a darkened house. An Oriental atmosphere was introduced when the girls gave a graceful scarf dance. In the finale the girls gave a preliminary drill as Madeline Schmid sang "Auf Wiedersehn," and then formed the bridal party, with Zelda Santley as bride.

Petch and Deauville
Detroit Fisher

These two, a blonde girl and black headed boy, are clever novelty and acrobatic dancers. In a bit of fantasy in which the whole stage company takes part, she is Cinderella and he is Prince Charming, roles that suit them splendidly.

Marietta
Cincinnati Albee

This comedy miss, from the musical comedy stage, opens in an interpretative dance, attired in evening dress. Changing to a decidedly abbreviated costume, she does a series of barefoot dances, punctuated with contortions, handsprings, somersaults and other acrobatic activities. She is decidedly graceful, and her work is appealing, especially to those who like entertainment bordering on the classical.

Coles, Peterson and Livoff
Detroit Michigan

Clever interpretations of classic dance ideas make this a first rate act. The girl appears to advantage in ballet toe dancing. The men offer a Slavic dance, a sword dance and a whip dance in which ribbons are substituted for whips.

Worthy and Thompson
Baltimore Hippodrome

This is a fast moving tap dancing act with comic dialogue. One offers a tap descriptive novelty of sweethearts making love and then being chased.

Bud and Jack Pearson
Detroit Fisher

These two appear wearing ear muffs under brown derbies. Their work, consisting of specialty tap dancing and comedy classical dancing, is fair entertainment.

Plan Increased Vaudeville Use

Numerous large New England towns plan the early introduction of vaudeville programs as additions to the regular showing of pictures. Included among the situations are Springfield, Pittsfield, Greenfield, Holyoke, Worcester, Somerville, Brockton, Fall River. In every instance at least two theatres plan vaudeville, with five or more acts each.

Publix has opened a vaudeville office in Somerville, Mass., with the probability that at least six or seven houses will be booked through the new headquarters. In Somerville four large downtown houses, as well as three other theatres, are each offering seven acts of vaudeville.

Direct Service for Music Dealers

The Music Dealers Service, Inc., has opened with main office at 619 West 54th street, New York. Music publishers affiliated with this service to the dealer are: Ager, Yellen and Bornstein, Inc., Irving Berlin, Inc.; DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc.; Donaldson, Douglas and Gumble, Inc.; Famous Music Corp., Leo Feist, Inc.; Harms, Inc.; Mills Music, Inc.; Remick Music Corp., Santly Bros., Inc.; Shapiro, Bernstein and Co., Inc., and M. Witmark and Sons, Inc.

Fantasy of Manhattan

The Roxy theatre stage presentation for last week was conceived and produced by Frank Cambria, managing director, and was a fantasy of "Manhattan" of the past, present and future. Included in the cast were Joseph Griffin, tenor; Mata Cora, colortura soprano; Eleanor Powell, specialty dancer; Almira Sessions, prima donna; William Ritchie and company, a comedy corps; Le Blanc and DuCharme, dancers; Fred Eric, prolocutor; the Roxy Theatre Singing Ensemble, the Ballet Corps and the 32 Roxyettes.

Mills Music Moves

According to announcement made by Mitchell Parish for the Mills Music Company, the acquisition of many famous catalogues in the past few years necessitates the company's removal from its own building at 148 West Forty-sixth street, New York, to the new Brill Building at 1619 Broadway.

SINGERS

Sophie Tucker
New York Capitol

Accompanied by Ted Shapiro at the piano, Miss Tucker opens with "Something to be Thankful For," with an ultra-sophisticated second chorus. She follows this with "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long," interpolating "Eli Eli," in a manner which stops the show cold. Called back five times, "the last of the red-hot mamas" favors with "Some of these Days."—H. P.

Rudy Kaye
Detroit Fisher

Kaye is a tenor of no mean ability who has the fortunate combination of voice excellence and personal appeal. It is probably his apparent earnestness that wins the audience to him. His selections here are "Song of Songs," "Trees" and "Vesti la Guibba" in the Italian from "I Pagliacci." Kaye's efforts met with prolonged applause.

Olive Sibley
Detroit Michigan

This young opera-voiced singer recently appeared in obscure spots in a Fisher stage show. She shows to much better advantage here as a travel office information girl responding to cues from a line of travel garbed girls. Her selections are of the light classic type.

NOVELTY

Stoopnagle and Bud
New York Paramount

These two clowns of the radio offer a novel description of a football game over a "mike," after which Bud gives a good imitation of Crosby singing "You're Blase." Stoopnagle also proves to be well-versed in the art of mimicry, when he impersonates Calvin Coolidge and Al Smith. This act with its radio reputation would click anywhere.—H.P.

Lilyan Tashman
San Francisco Fox

The blonde, svelte Lilyan appears in an act written especially for her appearance at the Fox and both pleases and disappoints. From the trunks, hat boxes and general luggage that precede her entrance, the audience gets the idea that a fashion show is in the offing. The fashionable star makes but one change, however, and spends her time on the stage clowning with Ken Murray and answering his questions about film life.

Robbins Trio (3)
Detroit Fisher

On Roller skates, this trio offers a thrill performance. The girl, who permits herself to be swung in a rapid whirl by one of the men, deserves considerable credit for her nerve. The routine is not unusual, but it is very well handled.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Detroit Fisher

Here is an Apache pair as rough as any. In one of their struggles the girl is flung across the stage and into the orchestra pit, from which her partner drags her by her hair. The act closes when a prop bar in the cafe set collapses with the impact of her body.

Fred Evans Ballet (12)
Detroit Fisher

The opening number by this line is a crude conventional ballet routine, suggesting a caricature of a spring dance. Two other numbers are exceptionally good, although one is too brief to be important. In the first of these the line appear as six couples in formal gowns and dress suits behind a scrim drop under border spots. To the music of "Dancing in the Dark" and "Masquerade" this is a picturesque piece. In the brief bit the girls appear as Apache dancers with doll partners.

NOVELTY

Wilton Crawley
Detroit Fisher

This blackface entertainer is a dancing musician and comedian. His dancing accompanies his clarinet playing, in extremely blue measures. The laughs result chiefly from interchange with the orchestra. One especially funny piece is Crawley's travesty on Al Jolson's "Sonny Boy." He opens his mouth and moves his lips as if he were singing, but the sound comes from a clarinet in the pit. The audience lost all restraint in applauding this.

Pablo
Cincinnati Albee

This South American magician uncorks a bag of tricks which are decidedly out of the ordinary both in execution and presentation. Working in a spotlight with only a small stand as props, Pablo does everything in pantomime. He is especially clever in his card manipulation and paper tearing, but the real highlight of his act comes when he produces numerous lighted cigarets from out of nowhere. He confines his routine to these three tricks, but makes up in quality what he may lack in quantity. The act was one of the really big spots on the bill.

Bobbie May and Joe Holmes
Denver Orpheum

May starts singing "Happy Days Are Here Again" but is hit by a boxing glove thrown from the orchestra pit by Holmes, who remains there acting as a foil for May's chatter while juggling Indian clubs. May proves adept with hat and cigar as well as with three and five tennis balls. He juggles three balls while standing on his head. The best hit appears when he throws cigaret into mouth with arm around body, lights match, catches it in mouth and lights cigaret from it.

Chas. Hill and Laura Hoffman
Denver Orpheum

Mostly a goof act, it gets better as it goes along. Then when Miss Hoffman cuts the comedy and really sings, the audience demand more, but time is up. She should and could fill the whole time singing.

Ted Mack
Denver Denver

Formerly m.c. at this house, and exceedingly popular here, Mack is spotted in the stage show with his own act, and judging from the applause his popularity is on the increase. After pulling a few original gags, he utilizes a foil from the audience. He plays "Lovely Melody" on the sax and sings "A Shanty in Old Shanty Town." His voice has improved greatly.

Niles
New Orleans State

This is the usual feminine impersonation act with the songs in a highly pitched voice suddenly sinking to bass. Most of it is rather boring, though the burlesque on Galli-Curci had the audience laughing, even though the famous concert star does deserve a better take-off. Niles, in this impersonation, seemed content chiefly to call attention to the low cut of his dress and indulge in some few mannerisms which were more properly his own than those of Galli-Curci.

Wesley Eddy
Baltimore Century

Eddy acted as master of ceremonies for "Hollywood on Parade," and as a specialty act sang his own conception of "St. Louis Blues," accompanied by the orchestra on the stage.

Realtor
Denver Denver

Roller skating is his forte, and he spins and spins on a small round table top, making everyone dizzy but himself. He is exceptionally fast.

Al Gordon and His Pets
Detroit Fisher

Al Gordon appears in the garb of a Northwest Mounted with a troupe of clever dogs. He has the dogs trained to give him the canine razzberries. They perform on hurdles, a swing and a rapidly revolving turntable.

Will Morris
Baltimore Hippodrome

A comedy "tramp" bicycle act with stumbles, falls and general comic pantomime, it includes some difficult tricks in bicycle riding. The climax when Morris jumps from table to handlebars of bicycle.

Jack Pearl
New York Capitol

This musical comedy star, aided by a male "straight," has the audience in laughter from the moment he starts his dialect. A newspaper headline bit continues the laughs. Pearl is without a doubt a master comedian.—H. P.

George Sidney
Baltimore Century

Offered with "Hollywood on Parade," starts with a comedy film showing Sidney supposedly traveling from Hollywood to Baltimore. His monologue gets many laughs. He shows how a talker is made by enacting a dramatic scene on stage and then having it shown immediately on the screen, ending with comedy of talking to himself from the screen and on stage. For the finale he sings a parody on "That's Why Darkies Were Born."

Will Mahoney
New York Paramount

This versatile comedian ranks with the best. Opening with a comedy song featuring spots for his comical antics, Mahoney gets off to a flying start. Following with tap dancing and an imitation of a bagpuncher that clicks, Will then offers his famous musical tap dance on the xylophone. A rousing finale.—H.P.

Dezzo Retter
Detroit Fisher

Retter is a pantomime comic whose best business is a solo wrestling match. With padded scarlet tights and true-to-form grunts he tosses himself all over the stage.

INSTRUMENTAL

George Olsen and Band
New York Capitol

Opening with a vocal ensemble of "Jolly Good Company," the band plays "Okay America," after which a violin solo of this band's radio theme song, "Rockabye Moon," is played, the entire orchestra doubling on the violin. An effective trumpet quartet of "It Was So Beautiful," with a vocal by Bobby Morton, is followed by travesty on the quartet scene from "Rigoletto," which proves very amusing. Ethel Shutta, musical comedy star, sings "Harlem Moon," and "The Little German Band" and closes with "Rockabye Moon," earning a nice reception. An entertaining act.—H. P.

ACROBATICS

Fuller, Rawson and Dauville
Detroit Michigan

After an amusing comedy opening this trio offers some excellent balancing and juggling routines. The act will fit any theatre.

The Athenas (2)
San Francisco Fox

These amazing gymnasts have a worthwhile offering along the strong man line. Strength is mingled with real skill and their efforts are roundly applauded. The act is presented against a robot background that is quite distinctive.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

We spied Jack Osterman limping along the main stem yesterday minus his cane. "Where's your support?" we queried. "Oh," answered the latest Broadway columnist. "She lost it all in the market," Great fellow, Jack.

Evolution of a crooner. Rudy Vallee was known as the Vagabond Lover when he left for a tour of the Pennsylvania coal mine districts. When he came back to New York title became the Vagabond Shover.

If Hal LeRoy had read the newspapers, he'd have seen that he was booked into the Paramount. He hadn't, so Hal missed the first show. That's Broadway. You're the last to find out about your own business.

Julian Woodworth, maestro of the Hotel Governor Clinton orchestra, heard over WOR, has signed to make thirteen transscription records for S. S. Kresge.

Robert Garland, critique extraordinaire for the World-Telegram, pulled a nifty when he said, "After taking a look at 'Horse Feathers,' I continue to believe that like all Gaul, the Four Marx Brothers are divided into three parts."

Harry Richman sold his Isotta-Fraschini to Dave Rubinoff, Paramount Orchestra maestro.

Henry Shope, who made such a hit singing on Cities Service program during Frank Parker's vacation, has been signed to sing solo over NBC airwaves. Shope was top tenor for the Cavaliers' Quartet.

Printers say that the letter "e" is most often used, but they forget about "x." You've heard of "Doctor X," "X Marks the Spot," X equals Y times Z, X-Lax, ham and X, and now we have the X-Sisters, who, according to Ed Wolfe, are destined to become radio luminaries within the next two months. Wolfe, you know, discovered the Street Singer.

Glenda Farrell, who plays a prominent role in Warners' "Life Begins," is plenty that way about Jack Durant of the comedy team of Mitchell and Durant.

Con Conrad, songwriter, brought Russ Columbo to New York from the Coast and did well, setting an example for another songwriter, Arthur Freed, who has brought Donald Novis east. Novis is currently held over the third week at the New York Paramount. Songwriters now write the songs, get someone to sing them and all they need now is to get someone to buy them.

HERMAN PINCUS

Jack Pearl on Air

Jack Pearl, musical comedy star, has signed to broadcast on the Lucky Strike hour over the NBC chain. Pearl's contract calls for four weeks with four-week option for a year. Pearl formerly was starred on the Ziegfeld-Chrysler hour over CBS.

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy) conducted this week the Edvard Grieg orchestral suite, "Peer Gynt," which was based on Ibsen's dramatic poem. The story of Peer Gynt, the hero of an early Norwegian legend who was an adventurous soul, was told musically by this great gathering of musicians. Their playing is artistically blended and impressive, under the peerless conducting of the maestro, David Ross.

ORGAN SOLOS

HERBIE (Buffalo Buffalo), who is gaining a fine reputation for his organ concerts at this, the largest house in Buffalo, recently presented the most outstanding and successful presentation he has yet offered.

"Poet and Peasant" was used as the musical setting, and until the waltz movement was played by Herbie in the usual "spotlight" manner. From that moment until just before the grand finale, the house lights were put out. Making use of a shadowgraf, Herbie's form and movements as he played and the shadow of the organ console were seen most advantageously on the screen. The orchestra joined in at the finale as house lights went up. Herbie's beautiful playing of the overture, enhanced by the novel shadowgraf, proved to this audience that this young fellow really will entertain them.

ROSA RIO (Brooklyn Fox) is the new organist here. She is a vivacious, exotic brunette, apparently a thoroughly capable organist, and a young lady who not only is pretty, but also knows how to put over her work. Her first solo at this house from a novelty standpoint had nothing outstanding in it, but it was not the solo the management was selling to the audience but Miss Rio, and from that standpoint they were highly successful. Besides playing three or four numbers for the audience to sing (and they did sing), Miss Rio accompanied Miss Mary Stewart, a local girl, who sang "Nightfall." Miss Stewart's voice might be effective without the use of the "mike" but when it comes to singing into one, she has plenty to learn.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) offers an organ recital of typical Chopin music, somewhat bewildering to most of his audience but nevertheless in the best of musical taste. His selections are "Prelude in A Major," "Minute Waltz" and the "Military Polonaise." Slides carried titles and explanatory notes.

MARLIN (Brooklyn Metropolitan) continues to please the audiences with popular numbers for them to sing, and they certainly sing them.

To get away from the straight community sing-fest, Marlin built his solo of popular songs composed by women writers, and introduced them with a little talk on each. Marlin has been here for the past two years and he enjoys a popularity exceeded by few other organists.

BOB MACHAT (Brooklyn Madison) is billed as "The Friendly Organist," but whatever chance he has to be friendly with his audience is killed when he uses a megaphone to make all his announcements. The audiences patronizing this house are "naturals" for a community organist, so Machat is having no difficulty making them sing. There is nothing unusual in the young man's novelty or playing. Both are fairly good, and possibly with a little more judgment given to his presentations, he can make himself quite popular here.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

The new season has opened and there are a lot of music directors and organists going back to work. . . . I would like to bring to the attention of organists and music directors the fact that even if you have been on the job for some time or, still more important, if you are starting on a new assignment at your old stand or at a new one, please drop me a line and let me know of it. . . . This will save you the trouble of writing to every publisher in town, inasmuch as I will gladly let each of them know your wants and where you are. . . .

It is hardly reasonable to assume that each music publisher can or will send out material, as long as he is not informed of where you are. . . . I am trying to make it easy for you and also be of help to the publishers by suggesting that you drop me a line instead of writing to all of them. . . .

I have had word from Ted Crawford, featured organist back at the Phoenix Orpheum that during his vacation he found Mary Dobbs at the Isis, West Masters at the RKO, Fred Marriot at the Denver, Ermanie DeLaVerne and Carmenza Van Der Lezz at the Ogden and Mrs. Lee at the Aladdin, all of them in Denver. . . . Ted tells me that Francis "Guss" Farney is slated to go back into the Capitol, Salt Lake City, and he goes on to say that, organistically speaking, this season looks great in the West. . . . That's great news and I would appreciate hearing news like that from other sections of the country. . .

Ralph Jones dropped me a line to let me know that he is still at the Paramount in North Platte, Neb. . . . I'll write you soon, Ralph. . . .

Two organists have just been added in these parts. . . . They are Rosa Rio, a little Spanish organist, at the Brooklyn Fox. . . . And Manager Whitman at the Brooklyn Madison tells me that Bob Marchet, who hails from Washington, D C., has climbed aboard the console of the Madison.

I have a list of many organists in front of me now. . . . A lot of you are still on the job. . . . Now I ask that you drop me a line, so that I can confirm each of these names. . . . It would hardly do for me to give out these names to music publishers unless the list is authentic . . . So each of you, regardless of where you are, let me know if you are still on the job and give me the information on any others who are going to work or are already on the job. . . .

I have talked with many publishers and am convinced that unless you advise them or me as to where you are, you cannot expect a great deal of cooperation from them. . . .

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 12 — September 17, 1932

POLITICS

THE other day Mr. Abram Myers of the Allied States Association gave utterance to a displeasure at the fact that a number of motion picture personages had become figures and factors in the presidential campaigns, most recently Mr. Jack Warner of Hollywood, and Mr. Frank Walker of New York, the active executive of the Comerford circuit interests, both interested in the Democratic cause.

Mr. Myers, who so often views with alarm, appears all atremble lest the screen be poisoned with propaganda for this or that party or political interest, what with the Democrats' acquisitions and Mr. Hays' long career as a professional Republican and Mr. Louis B. Mayer's friendship with Mr. Hoover.

In terms of screen product we should say that this is all about as alarming as the fact that Mr. Colvin Brown, general manager of Quigley Publications, is a member of the Democrats' finance committee, or that Mr. Terry Ramsaye holds that the Democrats have had so little practise in government that they should not be trusted with it.

Now after all, a position in the motion picture business ought not to imply a loss of citizenship. It is even possible that since the government appears to be increasing its attention to everybody's business it might be well if now and then someone in the motion picture business should pay some attention to government.

EXCLUSIVE RUNS

CONSIDERABLE undue alarm has been felt in some quarters and considerably too much enthusiasm in others concerning the "exclusive run" policy pertaining to motion picture distribution.

Discussed first as the possible nationwide expedient of some important distributors, as the initial excitement wanes it is being found expressed in tentative, experimental applications restricted to a relatively few especially advantageous situations.

In this, as in every other important aspect of the industry, nature will take its course, and no one man, no matter how powerful or how able, and no one or several concerns, regardless of magnitude, can ordain the course of the ensuing developments.

If the exhibitor were threatened with a widespread or general commitment among distributors, suddenly and simultaneously, to apply such a policy of exclusive showings, there would indeed be cause for alarm. And if there were evidences of concert in the movement, there would most likely be some lively legal consequences.

Out of the present tentative experimental exclusive runs will come a crystallization of policy based on the real dollar return. The picture industry is conducted almost entirely for the purpose of making money.

It is to be suspected that some part of what may be called the "exclusive" policy has a not entirely indirect bearing on the excess of theatres and theatre seats in some regions. If so, it may be observed that history records almost no successes in endeavors to support real estate values at the cost of merchandise.

More than likely we have seen the passing of the peak of the wave in the movement toward the concentration of audiences and the reduction of the number of theatres as a consequence of such concentration. The industry has had its splendid and costly splurge of super-theatre architecture. That's all over but the bookkeeping.

A healthy retailing industry must have its roots in many, many outlets. Mistakes that have been made in terms of brick and steel and stone and corner lots will not be redeemed by the present and future products of the screen.

The picture buying public and its representatives, the exhibitors, will ultimately make the important decisions. The inter-relation between supply and demand in this motion picture industry has been at times, for a few months, subject to manipulations, but from the days of the Patents Company till now, no policy has been able long to stand against the glacial inertia of the millions. Even now, while the exclusive run proposal is hardly more than born, there are afoot, with surprisingly little publicity excitement, projects aimed at filling any film vacuum which might result.

One possible and important merit which might come of the exclusive run movement would be progress toward classification of pictures and theatres, tending to free the art and the industry, both, of the handicap of trying to make every picture for everybody. More accurately satisfactory service of our numerous divisions and strata of society, with their highly variant social and cultural standards, each with its own proper screen wares, would eliminate some of the troubles which arise from selling the wrong picture to the right people and all the troubles resulting from selling the right picture to the wrong people.

Very presently we shall find that "exclusive run" will have passed into history to repose in just about such a niche as is now occupied by "star series" and "franchise." Every old showman, on reflection, will find in today's discussions of "exclusive runs" some of the flavor of those early controversies between "specials" and "features" and "program service." It is much the same story in a slightly more complex new guise. So long as there is a seller on one side and a buyer on the other, the problems will follow the same pattern. And so far, down the history of the rest of the world, and this industry, neither has been able to eliminate the other.

JUMBLE ON RECORDING ROYALTIES FOR MUSIC NEARING ADJUSTMENT

Agreement Will Be Followed by Settlement of Friendly Suit by Publishers Against Erpi and Five-Year Contract

Erpi Acted as Intermediary for Licensees; Then Came Problem of Levy on Houses Using Other Reproducers

Difficulties of a highly complex nature between music publishers and producer-distributors over motion picture recording royalties on copyrighted music seem on the verge of adjustment. Immediately upon successful conclusion of negotiations there will be effected a withdrawal of a so-called "friendly" suit which was filed last November by John J. Paine, acting as agent and trustee for a group of music publishers, against Electrical Research Products, Inc., as negotiating agent for ERPI's producer licensees, and subsequently the adoption of an ad interim agreement and eventually a new five-year contract governing the payment and use of copyrighted music in their recording.

At the beginning of sound, a contract covering the domestic market was entered into between E. C. Mills, as agent and trustee for all but a few American publishers, and ERPI, acting for its producer licensees, for the payment and use of copyrighted music in the recording of motion pictures. The contract was signed in the fall of 1927 but was antedated to September 5th to cover productions already made. ERPI organized a music rights department in January, 1928, to operate this agreement and to handle the music rights situation generally for licensees. The agreement covered the right to record music for showing at theatres in the United States and Canada alone, and it soon became apparent that additional and separate agreements were necessary for foreign exhibition of American-recorded pictures.

Foreign Agreement in 1929

An agreement, known as the American-Foreign Copyright Music Agreement, was signed on July 29, 1929, again with Mr. Mills representing the same publishers, with the exception of Sam Fox. In the fall of 1929, Mr. Mills resigned to join RCA, and John G. Paine, formerly copyright director for the Victor Company, and later in charge of copyrights for Warner Brothers, was elected in Mr. Mills' place as chairman of the board of the Music Publishers Protective Association and also as agent and trustee under both the American and foreign motion picture recording copyright agreements.

Subsequently, other agreements were made with foreign publishers, one with Charles James Dixey, acting in a capacity similar to Mr. Paine's, for the majority of English publishers, and more than 100 contracts were signed with European publishers. Eighty per cent of the copyrighted music of the world is said to have been made available to Erpi's producer licensees under these contracts and the company established music rights offices in London, Paris, Berlin and Sydney.

The domestic agreements among other things, gave unlimited access to all music, except certain show numbers and symphonic music, in the repertoire of publishers represented by Mr. Paine. In exchange for this recording right, the publishers were paid on the following basis: for the first year, 2½ cents per seat per annum for each seat in every American theatre using a Western Electric reproducer; for the second and third years, 3½ cents per seat per year, and for the fourth and fifth years, 5 cents per seat per year. Inasmuch as the agreement was definitely between Mr. Paine and Erpi, Electrical Research acted as collecting agent, pro rating charges to producer licensees on the basis of footage actually produced and recorded over Western Electric equipment.

Shortly after Mr. Paine took over Mr. Mills' duties, late in 1929, Mr. Paine discovered that the domestic agreement did not cover a tax for theatres not using Western Electric apparatus, and that Erpi was not paying a seat tax for such situations, although these theatres were showing pictures which had been recorded by that system and in which copyrighted music was used. Accordingly, he demanded such payment, to which Erpi replied that the matter would be taken up with its various licensees. All licensees, with the exception of Warners and First National, asked Erpi to straighten out the situation for them.

In the absence of necessary authority from Warner and First National, the matter was allowed to drag on until last year, when Sam Fox, publisher, filed suit against Mr. Paine and his associates, naming Erpi as co-defendant, and charging Mr. Paine with being derelict in collecting this part of the publishers' recording tax. Then, in November, 1930, the Paine interests filed a suit, in defense, against Electrical Research as negotiating agent for all producer licensees, a suit which has been in process of settlement for many weeks past. Warner-First National continued in its position in refusing to authorize Erpi to effect a settlement, although all other companies have long since agreed to pay their prorata share. In the meantime, Donald S. Pratt, who has charge of Erpi's music rights department, and Mr. Paine have been arbitrating the original claim of $1,800,000, and agreed that Erpi and its licensees should pay $825,000.

Warner-First National is expected, however, to participate in the settlement and thereby cancel the suit which is on the Supreme Court calendar, New York County, for October. Mr. Paine, Erpi and Warner were still discussing the situation Thursday.

In addition to the royalties demanded by publishers on other than Western Electric theatres, there are questions which will be cleared up in the event of a settlement, most important of which is the termination of payments which are now provided for in a continuing clause in the five-year agreement. This continuing clause calls for continued payments during the sixth year for the right to release films which contain copyrighted music recorded prior to the conclusion of the five-year agreement on September 4th, 1932.

Another important item which hinges on a settlement of the suit is a minimum guarantee of $25 per entire use of copyright, under certain conditions of eligibility, which was given to the publishers in connection with the foreign agreement, but which also applied to certain uses of music under the domestic contract.

No New Temporary Pact

Mr. Paine and his publishers recently served notice on Erpi that, until the current controversy was clarified and a settlement made and formally ratified, there would be no new temporary agreement to tide over the interim from September 5 until the date of a new and permanent agreement, which is expected to take some six or eight weeks to draft. It was essential, therefore, that the method of allocation of the $825,000 charges be settled in order that the specific sums for which the producers would be respectively responsible could be determined, as the commitment involving the settlement extended from the producers to Mr. Paine direct, Erpi acting merely as a negotiating agent in adjusting the difficulties. However, as previously pointed out, the master contract is between Erpi and the MPPA. Erpi, in turn, has sub-contracts with all of its producer licensees.

Warner-First National was not concerned with the publishers' notice because it intend-

FEWER BUT BETTER BOOKS IS AIM OF PUBLISHER AND SELLER MOVE

Waste and Destructive Competition Are Being Eliminated by Frank Discussion and Credit Established

The publication and sale of books in a very definite sense can be considered as a phase of the amusement business. The printed page is in truth one of the ancestors of the screen and is today one of its most ancient and honorable competitors.

The motion picture, also, is a form of publication, a method of delivery to the very same market of the very same wares that are borne by the volume in type.

More recently the book industry, the business of publication of words, has found itself confronted with problems. The observant motion picture man will find in those problems precise parallels for contemporary and continuing problems in the world of the screen. The following discussion of some aspects of the book trade is therefore calculated to have a most significant relation to what goes on in the film world. —TERRY RAMSAYE

by CHARLES S. AARONSON

Publisher and bookseller, the producer and exhibitor of the book industry, which purveys entertainment via the printed page, are being brought into closer accord in a new movement focused upon production of fewer but better titles. By frank discussion of mutual problems, waste and destructive competition are being eliminated, and credit is being stabilized.

The book publishing business, having come to the realization that it must put its house in order, has initiated fundamental steps pointing toward a standardization of policies, a consolidation of effort with a view to rebuilding and strengthening the basic structure.

Largely an individualistic enterprise, book publishing has nonetheless come to the conclusion that certain production policies, which appeared to their individual sponsors as of immediate value, are not to the benefit of the industry as a whole.

Joint Board Effects Changes

Perhaps most important of the internal innovations is the Joint Board of Publishers and Booksellers, which through discussion, suggestion and recommendation has sought, with a great measure of success, to bring the publisher and bookseller closer together by an appreciative study of mutual problems. Publishers have been highly receptive to the suggestions of the Joint Board, and though it is difficult at the moment to point to specific improvement as a result of its work, it is highly pertinent that in several instances publishers, upon submission to the Joint Board of a question of publishing practice, have accepted gracefully an adverse ruling.

An era of frank discussion of problems and practices has arisen, and publishers and distributors alike are looking with renewed confidence and cautious optimism to the new season just opened.

Cass Canfield, president of Harper and Brothers, and also president of the National Association of Book Publishers, said:

"The progress made in the elimination of waste and destructive competition will mean better return for both publisher and author when the tide of business turns.

"These problems are not easy of solution any more than are similar ones in other industries, but at least they have been faced. The question of overstock and its disposal at very low prices is being dealt with more effectively than in boom times. Through the Joint Board of Publishers and Booksellers many controversial questions at issue between these two branches of the trade have been settled. By means of a well organized credit bureau, recently inaugurated, publishers are working with booksellers to stabilize the distributing system."

The inauguration of a credit bureau is decidedly an innovation in the publishing industry.

Mr. Canfield pointed out, as well, that economic pressure gradually is solving a problem in cutting down the number of new publications. He indicated that the price of books is undergoing a downward trend, especially the more expensive nonfiction titles, because of the desire of reputable publishers to meet the lowered levels of purchasing power. Mr. Canfield emphasized, however, that though these adjustments are a healthy sign, the lower price tendency is not capable of much further development, since it has been a struggle for publishers to keep expenses down in the face of the declining volume of business. "Any considerable further reduction in prices," said Mr. Canfield, "would wipe out the publisher's margin of profit."

Specifically, two of the most important problems being adjusted through the internal organizations are the amount of annual production and the disposition of reprints and the "remainder," or unsold overstock books on the shelves of publishers, which are disposed of for the most part to drug and department stores at unusually low prices.

The cry for "fewer and better books" has begun to take effect, and publishers as a whole are planning a drastic reduction in trade lists for the new season.

Richard R. Smith, of Ray Long and Richard R. Smith, Inc., estimates at 20 per cent the reduction in number of titles for the fall season, with a consequent improvement in quality.

There are, at the moment, approximately 200 firms in the book publishing industry, and this number is estimated by Mr. Smith to be an increase of 100 per cent since the opening of the century. There is little possibility of company consolidation as has so often been suggested, in the opinion of Mr. Smith. He believes that greater personal contact is possible in the smaller organizations. Furthermore, the large number of individuals who have recently entered the publishing business, as Mr. Smith describes it, "prefer to run their own show." However, due to the increasing number of reprints, the number of legitimate book stores is decreasing.

In line with the reduction of titles is a new attitude on the part of publishers generally in the manner of advertising and approaching the bookseller. The superlative is on the wane. There is coming a definite movement toward what may best be described as "debunking the advertising to the dealer."

Notable among the publishers who led in this most important movement was Little, Brown and Company, of Boston, which in its advertising to dealers frankly discussed new titles without superlative claims, indicating their probable strength, the possible public reaction to author, title, subject matter and the like.

Merchandising Helps

The publisher is increasingly adopting a policy of more helpful merchandising to the dealer, offering concrete suggestions, with realization that the publisher's interest in the book, insofar as the dealer is concerned, does not stop with the invoice and the payment of a bill for shipment. The movement, definitely a new departure, has even carried over into consumer advertising.

For years books have been sold to the dealer on socalled January terms, whereby books purchased from the publisher in the summer or early fall were paid for in January of the following year. These terms have been shortened; in many instances booksellers have indicated they would be in better financial condition if they paid for their fall books earlier. The bookseller, buying in smaller quantities, has readily accepted new terms calling for payment on or before the fifteenth day of the second month following date of invoice.

The great danger in early reprinting, for sale at a lower price, has long been the development of a definitely antagonistic attitude of the public toward the bookseller. The public feels it has been cheated when it discovers that a book for which it has paid its $5 or $3 appears a short time later, if in a slightly cheaper edition, for $1.

In an effort to solve the reprint problem, book publishers for the most part have come to accept something in the nature of standardization of reprint policy, fostered by the Joint Board. In the case of non-fiction, a minimum of two years after original publication has been set before the reprints shall be produced, and where possible this period is to be stretched to three to five years. On fiction titles a reprint minimum of one year, and often longer, has been established.

The answer to the question of "remainder" books, it is felt, will come first with the pressure of economic conditions, and secondly by the reduction of titles and smaller editions by all book publishers. It is pointed out that some publishers actually have destroyed a sizeable share of the "remainders." They have "put them on the bonfire."

There is a divergence of opinion concerning the best seller policy. Some publishing authorities oppose it as concentrating public attention on too few titles. Others feel that the best seller and its exploitation incite a definite interest in all books. It is conceded in general that there is a definite merchandising value in the best seller classification, but that there is a tendency to emphasize it too strongly. A committee of the National Association is at work to establish some new basis for best seller classification.

Quality Books Sell Best

The economic situation has been the principal cause of the downward trend in book prices, particularly non-fiction. It is authoritatively pointed out that, although printing and binding costs have decreased, "plant" costs have increased. This condition is due to reduction in the size of editions, and to the fact that royalties to authors have remained at their former levels. In addition, discounts to booksellers have gone up. For these reasons it is recognized as virtually impossible for the publisher to reduce the price of his books any further and still have a margin of profit.

Basically behind the rather widespread though cautious optimism now prevailing are the factors of fewer titles, and very definite belief that there will be more outstanding books of all types offered this season than in many years. The publishers expect confidently to "have something to sell," knowing full well that the public, in books as in every other commodity, is shopping for its money's worth.

Sales among the retail booksellers are definitely down, and the same situation holds in the rental libraries. Book clubs to an extent have had an effect on the retail market, but there too the awakening public interest has its advantage.

Trends in taste among readers, especially in fiction, are difficult to follow. The one important current indication is the demand of the public for a higher quality standard in its reading, particlarly in fiction, it was pointed out at the offices of Doubleday-Doran, publishers, who also operate numerous bookshops. Rental libraries, which today permit readers to obtain the best books where before they were unable to afford them, are held in a great measure responsible for the development.

In the matter of types, difficult to ascertain with any degree of certainty, western stories, once extremely popular, suffered a decided setback not long ago. They have but slightly regained their popularity. Mystery stories have slumped slightly, but can usually be depended upon for a fair market. They are almost the perennial sellers of book publishing. Historical novels and Negro stories, once enjoying a great vogue, have more or less fallen by the wayside.

In the last analysis, however, the well-written book sells best, whatever its theme. Demand is diversified, said Mr. Smith, with books of real worth setting the pace in sales; in fact, type is of little consequence in comparison with quality. Book publishers make no effort to analyze the fiction classification of their product into types of greater or lesser demand.

Lincoln M. Schuster, of Simon and Schuster, put it this way:

"It is the good book which will tell the tale. The old cry of fewer and better books has been taken up more seriously in the last couple of years. People want more literature with their reading."

Mr. Smith cited several instances of publishing houses which at their inception had attempted to concentrate on the publication of one particular type of work. They soon discovered, said Mr. Smith, that they could not maintain such a policy successfully over a period of time. In a particular instance, Mr. Smith noted, a certain publisher gained one of his greatest financial successes from a book which he published with considerable reluctance because it was not of the type he had planned as the backbone of his organization.

Indicating the difficulty in judging taste, Mr. Smith spoke of a certain novel, which, estimated previous to publication to sell some 2,000 copies, actually went well over the 100,000. That same author, Mr. Smith smilingly recorded, was told, on the occasion of the submission of the manuscript of an earlier fiction effort, his first, that he had better stop writing fiction, and he was told that by one of the shrewdest publishers in the business.

The publisher assigns definite reasons for the decline of sales. In the first place, changes in social life have combined to give the public less leisure reading time, since so much of that leisure is now competitively pressed by the radio, the automobile, the motion picture. Further, the book industry at present suffers greater competition from the magazine than it ever has in the past. Thirdly, and this point Mr. Smith introduces as a new factor, the book industry has become overburdened with new individuals crowding into the field.

That America does not have a book reading public is the observation of Mr. Schuster. He also cites the radio, newspapers, magazines and the motion picture as factors in taking much of its time. Though there is a tendency toward more book reading, "the person who regularly goes to the book store is a rarity in this country," he said. The real problem of the book industry, Mr. Schuster declared, lies in education of the public, to increase the percentage of book readers.

From 100,000 to 20,000

The socalled "best seller," always a relative figure, always a fluctuating figure, has undergone radical changes since the turn of the century. Twenty-five years ago, the sale of 100,000 copies denoted a successful book. Very few sold more than that. Now 20,000, 25,000, or 30,000 is considered a good sale in the life of a novel; less than that in the highly diversified non-fiction classification. Perhaps a dozen books or less may sell 30,000 or 50,000 in any one year. Important today in book publishing is the fact that non-fiction is rated in its own best-seller classification as well as fiction.

The average best seller, in point of life, has a run of six months or perhaps slightly better, it is estimated. The "better" best seller may have a run of approximately one year, while the life of the ordinary book may be only a few months. Today there is considerably less likelihood, it is pointed out, for a book to go into the "back list," a favored policy of publishers some time ago, whereby they grouped certain books, which could be depended upon for perhaps small but nonetheless steady sale over a long period.

Today the non-fiction book has the best opportunity for success, publishers said. In the first place there are so many more classifications in the non-fiction division. Secondly, fiction must be of a much higher quality, relatively, and again, book stores are reluctant to buy new novels, particularly by unknown authors.

On page 10 is a listing of the total of fiction books published in the United States year by year since 1900. The figure, it is noticeable, has remained remarkably constant, with the exception of the years of the World War and the 1921 depression.

The STAGE from the CAMERA'S EYE

Noted Critic and Essayist Applies Experience in Film Needs in Analyzing Broadway's Plays

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

He's here again—the exuberant, pungent, word-wise and altogether exciting Mr. Benjamin DeCasseres, who added both to the lore of the industry and the merriment of the cosmos with his discussions of the stage and its wares last season.

Mr. DeCasseres spent his summer variously afield and afloat and comes back to survey the Broadway scene with a clear, fresh eye—two of the freshest eyes, in fact, to which the Street of Foibles has ever been exposed.

It will be recalled, of course, that Mr. DeCasseres has variously at various times lent his efforts toward the concoction of cinemas and hence sees the stage with a perspective that is not shared by his confreres of the critical clan. His mingling of erudition and desperately plain practicality results in a penetrating line of diagnoses of interest to all showmen and amusement purveyors.—TERRY RAMSAYE

THE MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD

This is a pseudo-historical melodrama in sixteen scenes, written by Jean Bart. It is a mixture of Victor Hugo, "The Fool's Revenge" and Lon Chaney.

The Lon Chaney is suggested by the make-up of Claude Rains, who plays the part of Paul Verin, a deformed and screwed-up face French Socialist and political writer. He will recall Quasimodo in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" (no, chèrie, Quasimodo was not Knute Rockne's partner).

Rains is the best actor in the Theatre Guild and he is the chief and only virtue in "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head" from a speaking-stage standpoint.

But the play has picture value.

The time is 1911, Paris.

Verin is an idealist, a Socialist, an editorial writer on radical papers. He has resolved to go poor and never sell out.

He has a charming young wife (Jean Arthur, blonde, beautiful and a good actress) whom he loves passionately. They have a little daughter.

Paul is retiring and cowardly (physically) because of his deformity.

Pops into his life a dude political Socialist who wants Paul's brain and pen so that he can reach the Premiership of France.

Paul sells out to this scheming fellow (played excellently by Stuart Casey) because the make-whoopee wife is tired of drudgery.

They are soon in clover with the politician's money.

Meanwhile we see the Big Shot noosing the little wife behind Paul's back. He has bought Paul's brains and convictions, and now he's going to tumble the wife.

(Café scenes, street fair scenes, boudoir scenes.)

Comes the war (stirring stage scenes).

The Big Shot is now the Premier of France. He throws the Socialist bloc for war. Paul Verin goes nationalist.

In 1915 he is ordered by the Big Boss to Verdun; but at a railway station he hears two soldiers discussing the amours of the Premier. A frightful suspicion of the listening Paul stuns him.

He hurries back to Paris, catches the Premier and his wife alone in his own home and just as a big air-raid is going on over Paris Paul cuts off the head of the Premier with his big trench knife.

He carries the head in a satchel to a Judge.

For picture production, rip out the prologue, freshen the dialogue and put in some humor.

Picture value, 90 per cent.

CHRYSALIS

There are eleven scenes in this play, and the camera will be snapping at it like a "dry" Vermont farmer for a pint of hooch.

For all of its defects (I saw a preview of it at Westport), this story has a brutal grip on the attention. It is a mixture of melodrama, social psychology and latter-day youthful criminality.

And it has one gorgeously humorous scene in a girls' reformatory—a perfect wow!—where the stick-up kid locks the woman overseer in the toilet, liberates his own girl and offers a getaway to the whole band of Erring Sisters.

Other scenes are laid in a speakeasy, Welfare Island, a Park avenue home, a bachelor's quarters and a hideaway (with a double suicide out of the window when the cops smash the door in).

What do you want? Mocking boids, too?

The theme is also good. A rich girl wants to go forth and Raise Up people. What she got into is a worse mess than any gin-party ever went after at 5 A.M. Sunday.

And it took all the cunning of her uncle Osgood Perkins to get her out.

June Walker and Elisha Cook, Jr., staged one of the most thrilling pursuit and out-the-window scenes that have ever shaken this octogenarian frame of mine to the gizzard.

Lawrence Langner will bring it later to New York, tightened up, I hope. For there are thought, guts and fast entertainment in "Chrysalis."

Picture value, 100 per cent.

DOMINO

This play from the French of Marcel Achard and adapted by Grace George has all the fittings and trappings of a good cinema comedy in which a company of Hollywood's crême de sophisticates can romp for many a laugh from the brain-trade.

Play it Frenchy, preposterously and with the tongue in the cheek, like Rod La Rocque did. He had the leading part in "Domino" and I was the only New York critic who thought he grasped the grand hooey of the plot. The highbrow critics went snooty on Rod.

Here is the story in a flea's-eye view:

Lorette has an oldish husband, a flint-mouthed, jealous business guy.

Lorette has had a lover, one François, before the audience gets bottom-cushioned.

The old man suspects François Cremone, a rival in business, of being the lover. So Lorette advertises for a youg fellow named François who will take the raps, the gun play and the bootings.

He shows up (Rod La Rocque).

Then comic complications ensue, with one high spot where Lorette, her phony lover and her real lover stage a fake love-scene (highly amusing).

And, of course, the hired lover falls for Lorette and she for him.

Two tickets for Nice, maybe. Husband and real François flat on their roundhouses.

It's a bit for a light-hearted director.

Jessie Landis, Robert Lorraine, Geoffrey Kerr and Walter Kingsford did their nearest best.

Picture value, 80 per cent.

HERE TODAY

"Here Today," a comedy of bad manners and overdone wisecracks, by a George Oppenheimer, is all Ruth Gordon.

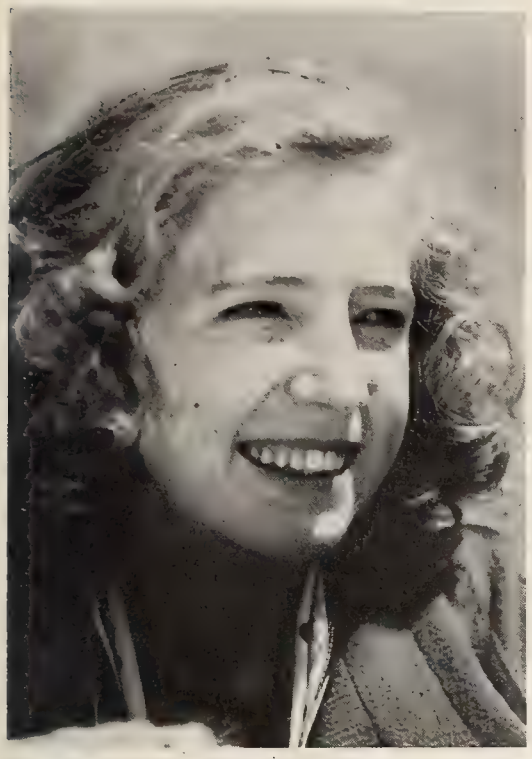
What little girl on the Broadway stage of today can hand out so saucily, so archly, so cunningly, so airily all the hooey that's not fit to print but sounds ever so innocent from her mouth?

She can keep the bummest show out of Cain's flophouse.

The picture possibilities of "Here Today," however, with or without Ruth, are not grandhotellish; but if some one wants a nice, crazy domestic snarl, verging on "Horse Feathers" madness at times, seasoned with a Haw! Haw! dialogue (that could be freshened up considerably by the old Life-and-Judge brigade out in Hollywood), why here's your dish.

It is all laid in the Bahamas. The tone is intellectual—Back Bay.

When the bad girl and boy arrive on the scene they start mixing up love-affairs so absurdly that the girl finally wins back her former husband.



You see, it is whispered that the two gay plotters in this play are portraits of Robert Benchley and Dorothy Parker.

Lots of booze, three stews, and many dullish smiles on my part.

But where in the pictures is the big kick in this play—Ruth Gordon, the feminine Roland Young?

Picture value, 40 per cent.

EXCLUSIVE RUN POLICY GROWING; MERCHANDISING DRIVE OUTLINED

Trademark Emphasized in Campaign by Hitchcock for Harry Arthur Theatres; Short Subjects and Stageshows in Deal

The socalled "exclusive run" policy of exhibiting motion pictures is rapidly coming to the forefront of discussion in all quarters where the merchandising of films is planned. Judging from the progress it has made in the few short months since the idea was broached in mid-May, exclusives soon will supersede double billing, price cutting, poolings and other activities in occupying the serious attention of the industry's operators. The loud protests that greet any revolutionary departure have been heard as additional situations are selected for the experiment.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer continues the leader in the new move. United Artists is sympathetic and Warner Brothers is said to be considering a test. Although noncommital, it is considered unlikely that Columbia, Universal or World Wide will attempt to sell exclusives. Paramount is trying the idea in the South. RKO Radio is on record against it. The independents do not enter into the situation.

Certain of the Fox executive staff are said to favor the policy, but Sidney R. Kent, president, said this week at Kansas City, en route to Hollywood, that the company does not intend to launch an exclusive sales policy, at least for this year. "Exclusives are designed to remedy, but I am not prepared to say what," said Mr. Kent. "I have an entirely different cure," he continued, although he would not discuss his plans. Asked whether he thought exclusive run policies as inaugurated by other companies will last, Mr. Kent said, "That is hard to say. They will have to be tested."

Two Fox Films Played as "Exclusive"

Fox has sold exclusively to Harry Arthur's circuit in New Haven and Mr. Arthur said on Monday that he already has played two Fox pictures under the arrangement. The deal may have been made while Mr. Kent was in Europe recently.

Reaction to exclusives has been forthcoming from various state exhibitor organizations and it is expected that action will be taken Monday in Chicago when leaders of Allied States Association and of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America meet jointly to discuss solutions for exhibitors' problems. Neither organization has officially gone on record for or against the policy.

Members of the Southeastern Theatre Owners of Atlanta, the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City and of the MPTO of Connecticut and the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware are up in arms over exclusive deals closed in their territories.

David Barrist, member of the board of the Pennsylvania group, will represent his district at the Chicago meeting. He is committed to an effort to bring the national organization together for united action against exclusive selling and what he terms the "freeze-out" of the independent exhibitor. The Philadelphia situation is further described on page 30.

The Kansas City organization met last Friday and again on Monday, and a Government investigation is said to be threatening. When Metro announced an exclusive policy at Loew's Midland, Kansas City, the announcement is said to have acted as a bombshell locally. United Artists also will establish exclusives in that city. Loew representatives operating the Midland say they understand United Artists pictures will be exclusive for that theatre, with the exception of "Mr. Robinson Crusoe," first on the 1932-33 schedule. Within two months, no other theatre will be showing MGM product in Kansas City, according to John McManus, manager of the Midland. A few 1931-32 films remain to be shown and these are not included in the new arrangement. It is understood protection of from 30 to 90 days will be allowed the Midland. Heretofore, protection granted Kansas City first runs was 28 days over towns within a radius of 25 miles.

Midland Launches Campaign

The Midland, which starts showing exclusive Metro films on Friday, opening with "Grand Hotel," scale unchanged at 25 to 40 cents, fired the opening shot in the campaign last Sunday with radio announcements over three stations, publicity and advertising in city and suburban newspapers and heralds distributed everywhere. "Under our exclusive contract with the producer, we guarantee you will never see it anywhere else in this city," reads one ad.

Publicity in suburban newspapers stresses the fact that local theatres will not show product obtaining a run at the Midland and "your only chance to see a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture is at the Midland in Kansas City," it was said.

The situation at New Haven reacted similarly. Connecticut MPTO members appealed to Governor W. L. Cross, stating that upwards of 75 theatres will be seriously affected by the exclusive run policy on Fox and Metro product adopted by the Harry Arthur circuit. In a communication to Mr. Arthur, Governor Cross said that on the basis of the MPTO representations "the situation calls for legislation of some kind, perhaps an adjusted further tax on exclusive showings, which would tend to discourage a practice which is represented to me to be fraught with great danger to the economic welfare of a considerable group of business men in this state, and in the final analysis prejudicial to the state itself."

Mr. Arthur replied that contracts for exclusive showings will not force the small owners out of business. "On the other hand," he said, "it might make them put forth an effort to run their business without regard to what I may do by making new experiments on their own part, thus improving their income and making it possible for them to also improve their theatres and better safeguard the public, who may attend it." Mr. Arthur pointed out to Governor Cross the numerical feature lineup of companies other than MGM and United Artists, which, he said, are available to exhibitors. Exclusives will be used by Arthur theatres at Bridgeport, New Haven and Waterbury.

Arthur Replies to Governor After MPTO Protest; MGM Expands Plans; Lightman Objects to Atlanta Meeting

Many reasons prompted the adoption of exclusive runs. In a typical situation in New Haven, one distributor, which had been getting $1,000 in rental per week per theatre from the Arthur interests, checked up on its dealings with subsequent runs and found that a total of only $160 in rentals was forthcoming from all subsequents on the same picture, although they benefited by the citywide advertising campaign. Mr. Arthur agreed to pay the exchange the $160 also, provided he could have pictures exclusively. It was pointed out in the negotiations that exchange costs for selling the subsequents and for distribution reduce the $160 gross rentals considerably. Furthermore, the exchange must wait for many weeks until the booking has been completed.

Arthur Replies to Governor

The situation is further explained in Mr. Arthur's reply to Governor Cross. He said:

"It is an experiment that has been tried in other parts of the country and has been beneficial in the main part wherever put into force.

"A situation has arisen in the theatre industry which required some forceful action. The large theatres with their heavier expenses and paying heavy taxes by reason of their location in various cities, are compelled to advertise extensively and to exploit the pictures which are intended to be shown. In order to defray the expenses, a charge for admission is fixed commensurate with the service that is given. At the same time that such advertising occurs, the smaller theatres are advertising that it is not necessary to pay the prices charged by the larger theatres, as the picture can be seen for considerably less at their particular theatre within four or five weeks. The result must be obvious to you. Although we have to pay a high rental charge for the film, there is a falling off of attendance and this condition has become a perilous one for us. The very extermination of which the smaller theatres complain is imminent with us and other operators of large theatres, and in an endeavor to save ourselves from destruction we are experimenting with this new plan.

"The smaller theatre owner charging from 20 to 33 1-3 per cent of our admission price and located in a less centralized district is able to lease its films for a fraction of our cost and is able to hold out to the public product which we have brought to the attention of his neighborhood through our advertising and the resultant benefit to him has been marked. He will still be able to secure such benefit from such pictures as we may not show exclusively but for those few which we think are of such drawing power as to increase our attendance, we feel that we should have the right to derive the benefits of our own efforts."

Mr. Arthur's deal with MGM and Fox is not only for features, as is usually the case, but also embraces all short subjects, newsreels and Fanchon and Marco stage shows.

"My first solo flight! Never thought I'd do it—but, oh! how I need Paramount in September!"

"Get this chariot moving. Paramount's breaking records everywhere—and my competitor's in line."

"I says, 'Lissen, baby doll, I've had a gr-r-and time. You've got everything but Paramount Pictures, and I'm off to buy them now.'"

"If I had the wings of an angel, I'd fly through the eleventh floor window—that's where the contracts are being signed."

"Lissen, Louie, here's the opposition. Make a Paramount deal for me, and I know I'll buy you a new car."

"It doesn't matter who's elected, with Paramount making pictures like these, everything is hunky-dory."

EXHIBITORS AREN'T TAKING YORK. BUYING PARAMOUNT!

"Yeah, my gal says, 'Never mind New York—you stay home. It's either me or Paramount,' an' I says, 'Nerts, I love you, but I gotta have Paramount, or we don't eat.'"

"Hey, Elmer, wait! I'm going in to sign away my red ink, too."

"C'mon, get off your puss and on your feet. You an' me's got ourselves a date with George Schaefer."

"It's the first time I've been out of Clay County in years, but I sure aimed to get myself this Paramount group."

"If I get the Paramount group, we'll throw the chair away, and you'll be chauffeur to a big gas-buggy."

"It's a cinch! Nobody but Paramount has given us pictures in August and September."

"Come on, Jim, get back with MOVIE CRAZY, HORSE FEATHERS and LOVE ME TONIGHT, or they'll lynch you."

Selling Exclusive Runs to Public

cock, wellknown exploiteer, to devise a complete exclusive campaign for theatres with such a policy. Advertisements used in this connection are reproduced on pages 56 and 57 of this issue in the Managers' Round Table Club section.

"It has suddenly dawned upon theatre operators," said Mr. Hitchcock, "that there is a merchandising idea that should be taken advantage of. In every city there is that stratum of theatregoer who has become accustomed to wait for several weeks until he can get a better bargain and see certain features much cheaper by the simple process of waiting. The problem in showing 'exclusives,' then, is to snare this type of theatregoer and a sound campaign of education must be undertaken to convince him that waiting won't do him any good from now on."

"The public has been fooled too often on big pictures that have been advertised as 'gone forever,' and this skepticism must be overcome forcefully and by the shortest means possible," Mr. Hitchcock continued.

"In working out this exclusive campaign for the Arthur Theatres, several methods were weighed carefully, and finally abandoned in favor of selling the exclusive 'trademark.' Among other methods considered was a campaign that would be centered upon an award if pictures advertised as 'exclusive' did not prove to be so. Another plan considered was announcing the titles of pictures that would be shown exclusively, but this also was abandoned because of the premature element. It had to be borne in mind, also, that exclusive pictures booked for opening at one theatre could be switched to another for continued run.

"Three ads were scheduled to be staggered among three Worcester newspapers and this resulted in a nine-day newspaper campaign, timed to finish coincident with the opening of the first exclusive picture, 'Grand Hotel.'

"In addition to the newspaper ads, heralds, lobby posters and three-sheets used, both theatres presented climbing trailers emphasizing the meaning of the trademark. Then, special stock footage, containing the trademark only, was distributed among all houses of the circuit. This stock footage is intended to be used on advance trailers and also at the beginning or end of exclusive features or short subjects being currently offered. Pictures announced as exclusive should carry the message before they open and while they are playing.

"To round out the campaign of educating the public to become 'exclusive-conscious,' a suggestion was offered to National Screen Service to get up a special series of trailers which would contain footage of the gay '90s and which could be shown over a period of several weeks. A news title would introduce this old-fashioned footage, for 75 or 100 feet, and appended thereto would be a message reading: 'The scenes that have just been shown are what "exclusive" pictures will look like when you see them in this city again! This sign (trademark) will make today's big screen attractions look like tintypes tomorrow! See exclusive pictures when they are shown at this theatre, because—once gone—they will be gone forever!' "

Three Per Cent Assessment Must Be Paid by Theatres, U.S. Bureau Rules; Appeal Planned on Radio Parts Tax

Uncle Sam this week saddled one more tax burden upon the shoulders of exhibitors. His agents ruled that motion picture theatres everywhere must pay the 3 per cent federal levy on electricity.

As the situation now stands, theatre owners are weighed down heavily with federal taxes on everything from real estate conveyances right down the line to chewing gum, chocolate bars and soda pop, which articles of refreshment still are being marketed in the theatres. They pay more than 10 per cent on admissions over 45 cents, which in many situations is absorbed by the exhibitor, also federal taxes on income, and a 14 per cent corporate levy. There are taxes of 3 per cent on electricity; increased costs of sound accessories and parts, due to the 5 per cent radio manufacturers' tax bill; and on lubricating oil, needed for all theatre mechanism; coal; telephone and telegraph messages; postal increases; checks; stock and bond issues and also transfers; gasoline, tires, radios, automobiles and whatnot. Countless municipal and state taxes are incidental to the federal tax payments, but they not incidental to the exhibitor.

Ruled as Commercial Use

Following another decision made a few days ago by the Federal Revenue Bureau, that vacuum tubes, speakers, dynamic units, records and power packs which are used in or in connection with theatre sound devices are subject to the 5 per cent tax levied by the 1932 revenue act on radio manufacturers, the Bureau has ruled that electrical energy used by motion picture theatres in the projection of pictures, lighting of signs or display boards and out-front illumination, is subject to the 3 per cent electric tax which is also a part of the federal revenue law enacted at the last session of Congress.

The new law provides for a 3 per cent tax on the amount paid for electrical energy used for domestic or commercial consumption. Electricity used for industrial consumption is not subject to tax. The question arose as to whether electricity employed in the operation of the motion picture theatre business is commercial or industrial. The decision of the tax department at Washington is that theatre usage of electrical energy is commercial and therefore subject to taxation.

The tax has been a subject of discussion by theatre owners everywhere since Congress voted it law in June. Dan C. Stewart, collector of internal revenue for western Missouri, was one of the first federal agents appealed to by theatre owners. He took up the matter with his superiors at Washington.

The status of the electric tax was established in an informal ruling by the Internal Revenue Bureau, Washington, in Bulletin 75, Ruling 466, according to J. S. Seidman, of Seidman and Seidman, certified public accountants of New York.

ed to handle its own music rights situation independently hereafter, and will not be a party, therefore, to the new five-year agreement which the other factions are seeking to negotiate, and which has been delayed pending settlement of the $825,000 bill.

In the meantime, if and when Warners' decides to ride along with the settlement and the compromise allocation—and this is anticipated—Mr. Pratt, of Erpi, and G. S. Hurd, Western Electric attorney, will meet immediately with Mr. Paine and his counsel, Francis Gilbert, to draw up the formal settlement papers and to work out a temporary agreement under which the producers can continue to use the music of the American publishers, pending the consummation of a second five-year contract. Meanwhile, most of the foreign music covered by contracts, all of which expired September 5, remains available to Erpi's licensees under temporary agreements, and permission is being uniformly granted by American publishers for such domestic uses of their catalogues as the producers are currently making.

When the differences arose last year, Erpi decided to hold back from the publishers' recording royalties due for the fifth and final year of the contract and this sum is included in the $825,000 settlement figure. In the previous four years, producers paid $707,000 to publishers for recording rights, which with the proposed settlement would total $1,532,000 paid out for the five years.

Royalty payments made to publishers by Erpi and its producer licensees must not be confused with a reproducing tax which is paid by each individual theatre owner on the basis of 10 cents per seat per annum. The recording and reproduction of music are two distinct phases of copyright law. Theatres pay their seat tax to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, of which E. C. Mills is the head. Authors, composers and publishers share theatre reproduction royalties, whereas producers' recording payments, which are made to Mr. Paine's group of publishers, are split proportionately among publishers only.

When the new five-year agreement is effected, minus Warner and First National, the remaining ten producer licensees of Erpi will again have at their disposal the catalogues of about 150 music publishers. The new contract, however, will not be based on a seat tax, but will be payable by producers according to the number of copyrights used. A scale has not been determined.

RCA Photophone is also concerned with the recording tax situation, but to a lesser degree than ERPI because there are only two large producer licensees of Photophone —RKO Radio and Pathe—which are currently engaged in recording for the theatrical field. Photophone was mentioned in a suit similar to the one filed by the Paine interests against Erpi.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

LOUIS B. MAYER's anxiety to get back to work at Culver City misled our correspondent at Kansas City, who wired back: "Has the fast stepping of the Olympic sprinters exerted an influence on Mr. Mayer?"

It appears that Al Finestone, MOTION PICTURE HERALD reporter in "Casey," tried to interview the M-G-M studio commandant as he alighted from the Santa Fe Chief for a stretch in the Union Station at Kansas City, en route to Hollywood from conferences with Nicholas M. Schenck in New York and President Hoover at Washington. Mr. Mayer consented to the interview, but one condition quickly became apparent—that the reporter keep pace with him as he strode back and forth in double-quick fashion. As the two marched the length of the platform and rushed back again—repeating the performance—it seemed like a marathon to Mr. Finestone.

Anyway, it got Al wondering whether Mr. Mayer's house slippers are in reality seven-league boots.

At first, Mr. Ferguson thought it was a tabloid columnist, but upon investigating learned that it is a rare creature of the genus Mantis, and allied genera, constituting the insect family Mantidea. They are remarkable for their grotesque form, and for holding their stoutly anterior legs in a manner suggesting hands folded in prayer. Which should serve as a lesson to Billy.

Edward D. A bit of irony was injected into the picture on the last day when the house announced as its closing feature: "Forgive and Forget!"*

CHISELING ON
"THE CHISELER"

"The Chiseler," a fishing barge well known in the lower waters of the Mississippi and around The Delta at the Gulf of Mexico, was recently boarded by government agents on an inspection trip, and they told its owners, Bob Blair and Joe Estes, of the Saenger theatre, New Orleans—both well known in theatrical circles in the South—that everything was all right except the whistle. Life preservers were properly stationed; fire extinquishers were on board and all other rules and regulations had been complied with. But no whistle.

"Well, whatta bout it?" asked an inspector.

"Don't worry, chief," said Blair—or words to that effect. "I can imitate a foghorn—watch!" And he did.

"Okay," bellowed the federal man.

ALMOST weekly we hear a new story about what it takes to be a screen star. The latest yarn comes from Fred Datig, casting director at Paramount's Hollywood studios, who says that a person's ability to elevate one eyebrow is the test of acting ability. In other words, if you can't lift an eyebrow, you cannot be an actor, according to Mr. Datig. We learn more every day.

In the publicity story sent out by Paramount telling about this basic requirement of histrionic efficiency, it is said: "Only one person in eighteen can do the trick."

And further verifying the importance of the optics to the art, another piece of Paramount publicity, received simultaneously, says: "An EYE for incongruities has made Harold Lloyd famous!"

Boy, page the optician.

The actor testified that the incident happened in Santa Monica Canyon, but the press agent had already blundered and said that the accident occurred in South America, supposedly the locale of a "Spanish" theme, and that made a difference.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR AUGUST

SO MANY were the pacemakers during August that eight are listed as "champions," and these represent only four rankings. Paramount's "Horsefeathers" holds the top position alone, while Fox's "The First Year" has exclusive title to second place. But in third place are both RKO Radio's "Bring 'Em Back Alive" (repeating its July leadership) and Paramount's "Guilty as Hell." All the other "champions" are tied in fourth place. Of the eight productions thus distinguished at the key-theatre box offices four are definitely melodramatic in type. The remainder include two comedies, one comedy-drama, and one travel film.

"MINIATURE" PLAYS WITH PICTURES BID FOR SPOT IN AMUSEMENT SUN

James Thatcher and Edward Turner Form Company to Produce 58-Minute Shows, With Stock Units for Routes

The spoken drama and motion pictures, its victorious competitor in entertainment, are about to meet on common ground, and if a test to be conducted late this week proves that "miniature" versions of plays may be successfully staged in conjunction with motion pictures, in motion picture theatres, another step will have been made in the evolution of the show business.

The stage had had things pretty much to itself in the amusement world until the late 1880's, when variety shows began to make serious inroads. Then, early in the present century, the initial short reel efforts of pioneer film producers were tacked on to the standard vaudeville bill and gradually motion pictures superseded vaudeville and stage. A few years ago, vaudeville regained some prominence, dressed up in more elaborate fashion as "presentations" or stage shows. The legitimate stage, however, continued declining until now it represents but a shadow of its former self. The situation is worse than any which has existed in theatricals in many years. Now, an effort is being made to join stage and screen in a new experiment.

Producing Company Chartered

National Players, Inc., has been organized and chartered under the laws of New York State, by James Thatcher, one of the older stock producers, and Edward D. Turner, who managed and supervised theatre properties for Publix. They plan to produce comedies, comedy dramas, melodramas and farce comedies for stages of motion picture theatres and already report having made considerable progress in interesting most of the larger circuits, according to Mr. Turner, who said it appears that the large theatre operators will now lend an ear to any novelty or plan which might help to bolster box office receipts. Experiments have been made sporadically in the past with condensations of Broadway stage plays, notably by Balaban and Katz in Chicago, but here is a stage production company aiming its entire activity toward the motion picture theatre.

The future of the plan depends more or less on a three-day test to be conducted Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at Publix's Paramount theatre in Staten Island, New York, where executives of other circuits, too, will study audience reaction to a company which will play "The Ghost Train," a comedy melodrama in three acts. The idea was tried during the summer, "with quite some success," according to Mr. Turner, in four of the Paramount theatres at Detroit. "One thing we were rather amazed to discover in Detroit," he continued, "was that about 75 per cent of our motion picture audiences have never seen a stage play previously."

National Players already has lined up 150 plays for production on the "miniature" scale. Many have played to success on Broadway, it is said, and others are recent stage offerings. Instead of using the old idea of continuously casting the same stock players locally, it is intended to cast each play like Broadway road shows, sending them out in units in which the cast will play the same show for the length of a route. There will be no change of sets, but a curtain will be lowered for a ten-second intermission between acts. Fifty-eight minutes is the allotted time per offering, and it is expected the plan will influence theatre policies where vaudeville and stage shows are used. Mr. Turner said he believed the plan will be more successful at theatres other than de luxe, downtown first-runs.

No difficulties are seen by National in the mechanical adaptation of plays to motion picture theatres. Most of the more important theatres have stages, and acoustical progress brought about by sound takes care of that phase.

Equity Not Associated

Although Paul N. Turner, counsel for Actors' Equity Association, and a brother of Edward Turner, is one of the National's incorporators, the plan is in no way tied in with or sponsored by Equity, it was said. Equity recently has been discussing the possibility of launching a plan whereby $5,000 would be used to defray initial expenses in forming a stock unit to help decrease unemployment in the ranks of actors. Equity players, however, will be used by National.

The condensed plays can be produced and marketed for less than the cost of six standard vaudeville acts, it was pointed out. Screen trailers will be flashed at the beginning of each performance to give the cast and a brief outline of the story. Musical accompaniment of a tone sympathetic to the story will be played with the trailer. National Screen Service has completed trailers for the Staten Island test.

If motion picture audiences react favorably to the proposed miniature plays, Turner said that revolving stages would settle the problem of set changes.

Griffith Amusement Company, operating a circuit of motion picture theatres throughout Oklahoma, has decided to play miniature musical tabloids from time to time. National Players are not booking. Griffith played the miniature versions at Atez, Shawnee, Enid and Seminole and it is said that the stage shows aided box office grosses.

QUIGLEY TOURNAMENT AT RANCHO CLUB

The sixth annual Hollywood motion picture golf tournament sponsored by QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS will be held at the Rancho Golf Club, instead of at Lakeside Country Club, on October 15. The change was made following a special invitation extended by Eddie Mannix, newly elected president of Rancho. An unusually active interest in the golf event is reported by Jack Warner, chairman, and his committee associates. Jesse L. Lasky was elected to the directorate of Rancho with Mr. Mannix.

Desberg Dies; Was Manager of Loew Cleveland Houses

Fred Desberg, general manager of Loew's Cleveland theatres, and legal advisor and in charge of real estate for Loew's Ohio Theatres, known throughout the film industry and a particularly vital figure in the Midwest, died at Columbus early last Thursday morning of a heart attack. He was 52.

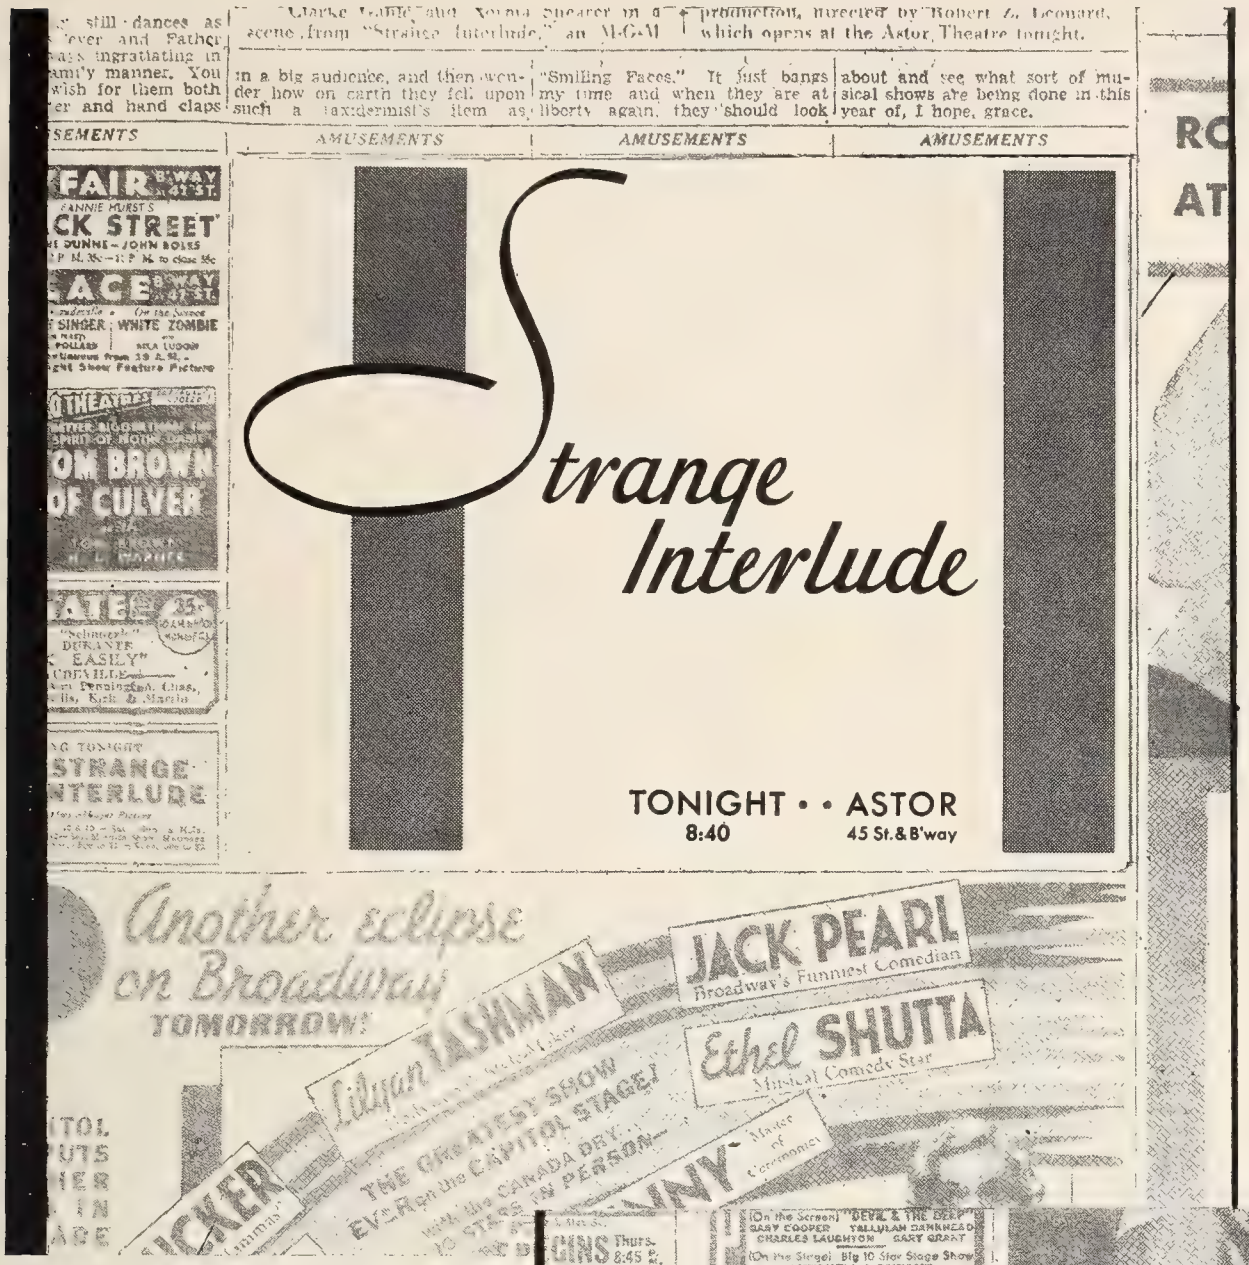
Mr. Desberg had come from Cleveland to Columbus to attend the testimonial dinner to Adolph Zukor last Wednesday at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel.

Funeral services were held in Cleveland on Friday. Mr. Desberg is survived by his wife and three children.

He was widely known in business and political circles in Ohio, and was an important force in establishing cooperative relations among all merchants in the section of the city where the Loew houses are located. He organized a local Better Business Association which meets at regular intervals.

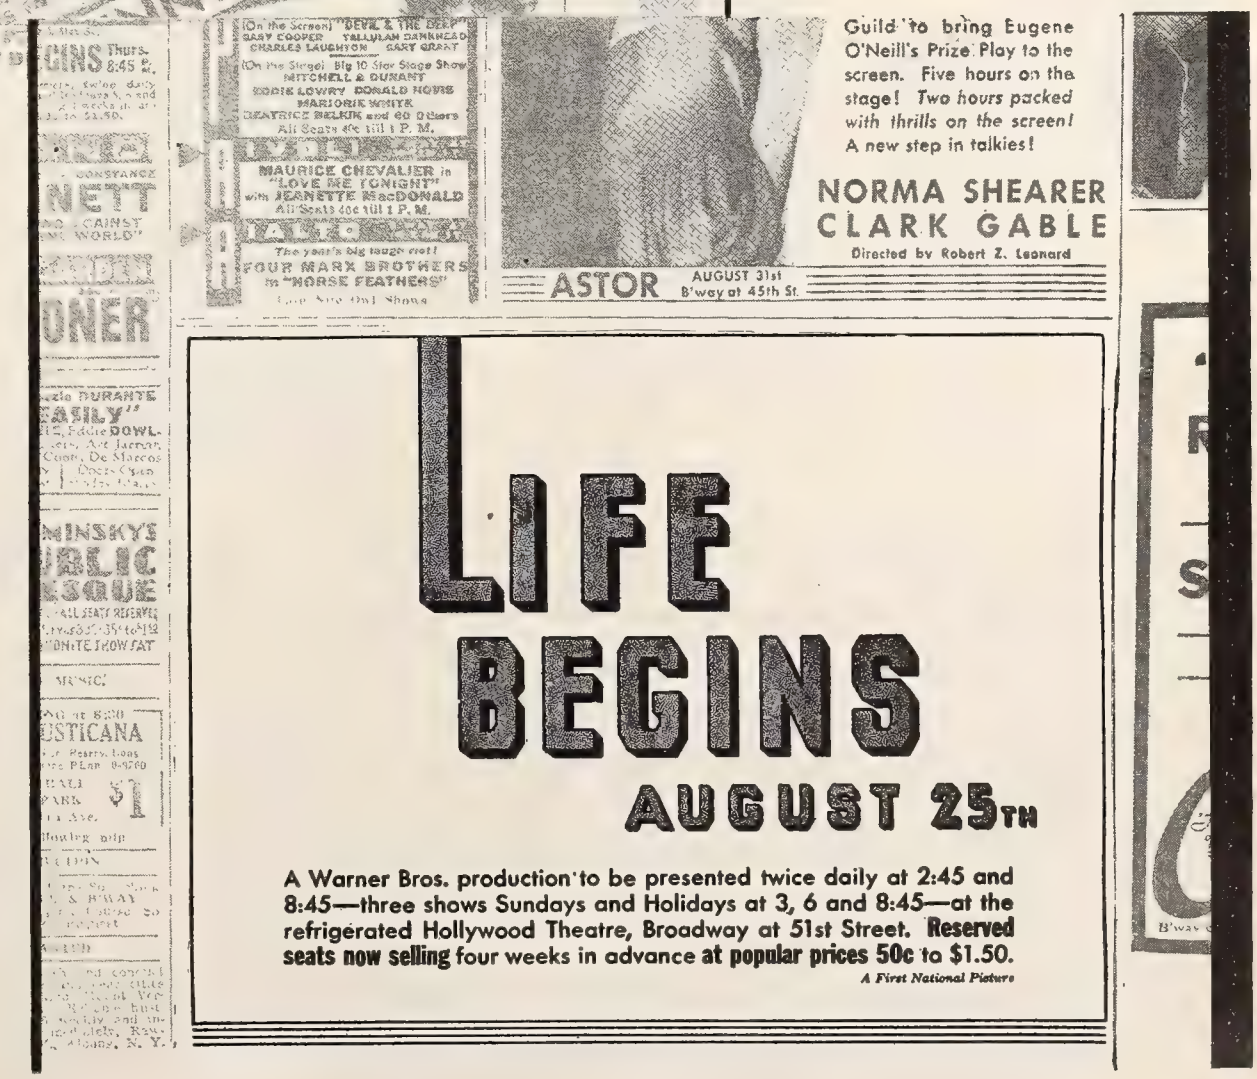
He entered the motion picture business in 1914, when he retired from the active practice of law to join Marcus Loew in Cleveland. This first venture served as a nucleus for the present Loew's Ohio Theatres, operating 11 houses in Greater Cleveland. Mr. Desberg held an interest in the company until three years ago, when the Loew organization of New York purchased control. He became general manager at that time.

He was a director in several mercantile companies of Cleveland at the time of his death, and was a member of the Oakwood Country Club. Mr. Desberg was for a long period an official of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and a trustee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio.



Two New York Loew Theatres Bombed; Police Blame Unions

Within the past week, two Loew theatres in New York, Loew's 46th Street in Brooklyn and Loew's Canal Street on the East Side, were damaged by bombs, and at Loew's Paradise, largest Bronx theatre, 21 sticks of dynamite were discovered in the projection room.



Commissioner of Police Mulrooney has served notice on officials of Local 306, IATSE, and Empire State, rival unions, that strife between them must cease. The Bronx Grand Jury is questioning Sam Kaplan, president, and Jack Winach of 306 and Arthur Farkash of Empire State in connection with the explosives found in the Paradise.

The three told Mr. Mulrooney there was no union connection with the bombings.

IN THE CAUSE OF WHITE SPACE

HOWARD DIETZ, of MGM, stepped forth in the New York dailies and burned a hole in the jungle of archaic show advertising typography with this adjacent display of pungent simplicity in behalf of "Strange Interlude." It is to be observed with pleasant approval that the advertisement here displayed says all that it was necessary to say to a Broadway audience about the production. It was written on the warranted presumption that the specific group of customers here being appealed to, knew something about the merchandise that was offered it. Its message is precise, effective.

CHARLES S. EINFELD, of Warner Brothers, put showmanship and daring into his announcement of "Life Begins" in the preliminary New York newspaper advertisement reproduced below. It is an interesting, and rare, recognition of the fact that advertising display is quite as much affected by its surroundings.

In view of the patent medicine typographical technique common to amusement pages today, white space is in itself a guaranteed challenge to attention. This copy depends on human curiosity to sell something to itself. Meanwhile the treatment avoided, in this special instance, many a perilous pitfall. It is smart to be simple.

FURBER RETAINS POST AS HEAD OF TRANS LUX

Stormy Stockholders' Meeting Finally Accords President Virtual Vote of Confidence; Company to Extend Theatres

Following a stormy three-day session, during which the proceedings frequently were interrupted by heated debate and injection of personalities, Percy N. Furber, president of Trans Lux Daylight Screen Corporation, was returned to the board of directors at the conclusion of the annual stockholders meeting in New York.

Mr. Furber's triumph, which was gained specifically over the most emphatic protest of A. M. Andrews, owner of 200,000 shares of the company's stock, and largest individual stockholder, was confirmed when the new board, comprising 21 members, named Mr. Furber chairman and re-elected him president of the corporation at its first meeting. The stockholders on Friday had elected 21 directors, of whom 16 had been approved by Mr. Furber.

Mr. Andrews finally withdrew his name from the directorate and offered no contest in the election of the 21 directors, of whom only five had been approved by him. The directors for the coming year are:

Percy N. Furber, William A. Copeland, Robert L. Daine, Leavitt J. Hunt, F. E. Kessinger, William F. H. Koelsch, Edward Wise, Paul C. Schnitzler, H. P. Farrington, G. H. Eichelberger, W. M. Snodgrass, Robert Atkins, Ray Hall, Minton Cronkhite, W. T. Black, P. E. Furber, A. C. Payne, Ellery Mann, J. D. McDevitt, E. H. Unkles, George A. Smainis.

The stockholders, although they failed to ratify the past acts of the directors, authorized the new board to continue negotiations with the New Projection Corporation for a merger, which is expected to be completed shortly. The stockholders also voted to reduce the par value of the company's 792,162 outstanding shares from $7.50 to $1.

On two occasions during the violent sessions of the meeting, the efforts of the minority group, headed by Mr. Andrews, to force the appointment of a committee to investigate the company's affairs were blocked, once by parliamentary procedure and again by a vote which resulted in defeat for the move.

Mr. Andrews charged Mr. Furber with misappropriation and mismanagement, and Mr. Furber answered vigorously with counter-charges of stock manipulation which he charged to Mr. Andrews. The sessions repeatedly were halted completely by the bitterness of the verbal exchanges between Mr. Furber and Mr. Andrews.

The acquisition recently by Trans Lux of the 50 per cent interest held by RKO was indicated to the stockholders as the result of a strategy employed by Mr. Andrews, who had retained George L. Schein, Chicago attorney. Mr. Schein, at the session, claimed that Trans Lux had attempted to acquire the interest without success for 11 months. He claimed he completed the deal, whereby RKO turned over its 50 per cent interest to Trans Lux and was to write off the $250,000 involved as a loss. As a consideration, it was explained, RKO is to receive $150,000 if and when Trans Lux theatres show a profit of $3,000,000.

Following installation of the new board of directors, plans for the expansion of the Trans Lux theatres on a national scale became known as a chief feature of the company's program for the coming year. The acquisition of the RKO 50 per cent interest has cleared the way for expansion on the part of Trans Lux Movies Corporation, a subsidiary which operates three newsreel and short subject theatres in New York.

Joint Exhibitor Meeting Monday

National exhibitor leaders of Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are ready for the joint "harmony" meeting in Chicago Monday. Socalled industry evils in exhibition will be discussed and attempts made to launch an offensive drive against them, particularly with regards to exclusive sales policies of distributors. A "new deal" for a standard contract is sought by the MPTOA, and the "eight planks" of Allied, which include about everything, may highlight the discussion which opens Monday at 11 a. m. at the Congress and may last into Wednesday.

David Barrist of the Philadelphia MPTO is going to Chicago to urge strongly a merger of the two national associations "into one harmonious whole with all political or personal ambitions shelved for the greater need of helping the 'forgotten exhibitor.'" His association also seeks "a united demand for an immediate federal investigation of the motion picture industry, particularly the 'swapping' of agreements between the major companies; an intensive educational campaign to enlist public support; a graduated chain theatre tax in every state where exclusive selling has been introduced, and the immediate appointment of an 'action committee' composed of exhibitor bodies, leading national, civic and patriotic organizations, motion picture trade press, organized labor, etc., to launch a campaign to 'save the movies for the masses.'"

Chicago exhibitor leaders doubt that a merger will be realized, pointing out that the MPTOA first would have to abrogate affiliation with major interests and that structural differences would be difficult to adjust.

M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, said at Memphis that he has no idea of a merger.

"If progress is to be made," said Abram F. Myers, chairman of Allied, "exhibitor leaders will have to exercise repressions in the matter of statements, and allow those charged with the responsibility to work for the best interests of the exhibitors, free from outside interferences. This meeting is no occasion for ballyhoo, but is serious business, and if all will approach it in the proper spirit, developments of importance to exhibitors and the industry may result."

Thomas Orr Heads Exhibitor Group

Thomas E. Orr was elected president of the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association, at its annual convention in Atlanta, Monday and Tuesday. Hugh Manning, Tennessee; Willis Davis, Georgia, and Mitchell Wolfson of Florida were elected vice-presidents. O. C. Lam was elected to the national board of the MPTOA, with which the association is affiliated, and Love B. Harrell is the new secretary-treasurer.

While advocating limited selected runs, M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, opposed the present system of exclusive run selling and also voiced opposition to dime admissions and dual bills. He said that 10-cent tickets should not be permitted, and then criticized distributors for failure to keep their promise on adoption of the uniform contract. Dave Palfreyman, of the Film Boards of Trade, New York, also spoke. The resolutions committee condemned exclusive runs, score charges and dime admissions.

JUST OUT OF THE STUDIOS

Success of "Rain" Depends Upon Joan Crawford, Says Meehan; Calls 'Smilin' Through' Beautiful

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Two important events this week were the world premiere, Grauman-Chinese style, of the Milestone-United Artists production of "Rain," and the preview showing of MGM's production of "Smilin' Through."

Incidentally, in connection with the big show at the Chinese, there is presented the second of Walt Disney's "Silly Symphonies" done in Technicolor. It is called "King Neptune." These cartoons in color are distinctly something new, definitely a cinematic step forward. The color is magnificent. Use of color by these artists greatly enhances the entertainment value of the pictures. If you haven't seen a "Silly Symphony" in color you haven't seen one of the most important technical achievements to come out of Hollywood this year. They rank well up with any feature as entertainment.

It seems to be the consensus among the critical fraternity of Hollywood, and a good many studio big wigs who attended the premiere, as well, that the ultimate success of "Rain" depends pretty heavily upon the personal popularity of Joan Crawford. No critic yet has done an unqualified rave over the production. Many believe that Milestone has missed the elements which made it such a great play. Needless to say, no matter whether Joan Crawford or Lizzy Glutz played Sadie Thompson, she would suffer by comparison with the classic characterization by the late Jeanne Eagels.

Milestone's direction is pretty heavy-handed, especially for Milestone. It would seem that he concentrated upon the business of creating a preachment against religious and moral fanaticism. It should be said that, from a censorship angle, Milestone has hurdled some of the difficult spots very adroitly, even to the famous discussion of "the mountains of Nebraska." But in the effort to create the feeling of monotony of life in the South Seas, the rain, the incessant repetition of the same petty activities, the picture itself becomes dangerously monotonous. Undoubtedly, before it hits the road some sharp pruning will have been done; and it will help. But it certainly isn't Milestone at his best, nor, for that matter, Walter Huston or Guy Kibbee, both fine actors. As for Miss Crawford, the character of Sadie Thompson is still a shade beyond her range.

"Smilin' Through" has a number of unquestionable box-office attributes. It is a beautifully mounted talking picture version of a moving stage play. It has Norma Shearer in another splendid personal performance, one which is a welcome relief from some of the rather morally befuddled "ladies" she has played of late. It has a trio of men actors in support of the star who couldn't be beaten between Honolulu and Piccadilly—Fredric March, Leslie Howard, O. P. Heggie. "Smilin' Through" is just one of those things which makes you feel that, after all, there are a lot of grand people in this world. It has powerful drama, stark tragedy, inspiring romance, high pictorial beauty. The one best word to describe it is to say that it is a beautiful picture, beautiful in conception and execution.

Consideration of these two productions brings to mind a topic always good for lively discussion in all branches of this industry, the matter of "remakes." Both these stories were made, and made exceptionally well, in the silent technique. We have a group of people in this business who are radically against remakes; they ask you to point out one remake which has been successful. There are others, this reviewer among them, who think such talk is so much piffle. As well call your breakfast of ham and eggs a "remake," simply because you've had it before! There are notable stories, and plays, which always will be notable. They are just as good material today, providing (and here's the nub of the matter, we think) they are well remade, and providing the dialogue, the action and the characterizations of the current versions are intelligently brought up to date in treatment. Unless memory tricks us, for instance, there was no use of the World War in the original version of "Smilin' Through." Yet it is most poignantly and adeptly used to create the proper effect and feeling in the new MGM version. There are plenty of fine stories still available for sound production. If they are "old fashioned" it is because of a lack of imagination upon the part of those responsible for selection of stories, because with proper and imaginative treatment their inherent beauty and dramatic pull could be completely retained. The present generation might be bored by the horse and buggy as a means of transportation. Yet we still must go from place to place. Substitute the automobile, even the airplane, and you haven't altered the reasons for or the necessity of transportation; you've merely brought it up to date. As for the human qualities of the audience, the emotions to which they respond, it is doubtful if they have changed a great deal since William Shakespeare was running a stock company in London. And my reference: the recent observations in this journal of Mr. Terry Ramsaye anent "The Forgotten Man."

If our Editor will permit an observation, may I say that possibly it isn't because Hollywood forgets him—it's because Hollywood seldom or never sees him, never rubs shoulders with him. It is too busy with its own little affairs, social and, shall we say, fraternal? I suppose the gods of Olympus were the same way.

We recall one day last winter when J. C. Jenkins sat here in our office, where you can look out over all of Hollywood, and between drafts on his favorite pipe told us he didn't know what city folk wanted, but he did think he knew what country folk liked. Last night we watched several milling thousands, held back by policemen and ropes in their almost panicky desire to get a glimpse of Hollywood's celebrities as they passed into the Chinese theatre. We thought, too, of times when we had stood upon the platforms of the Times Square subway station, of when we had strolled about the Loop in Chicago between the arrival of the Twentieth Century Limited and the departure of the Santa Fe Chief or the Union Pacific Limited. We recalled occasions when we stretched our legs in the magnificent Union Station in Kansas City, gateway to the Southwest. We thought of our neighbors we met at the Yacht Club in Port Washington, on Long Island, a few summers back. We recalled the crowd we saw on the beach at Santa Monica last Saturday afternoon.

Well, it seems to us these people were pretty much all alike. But we couldn't help but wonder how much some of our responsible production executives know about what they think, and like, and do. We doubt if the folks we saw in the subway, or the folks we saw in front of the Chinese, were, after all, very different from those Jaysee Jenkins meets in Main street in Neligh, Neb.

So, to whom are we trying to sell tickets? Ourselves?

Owen Young at Meeting of Directors of RKO

The board of RKO met Wednesday, with Owen D. Young, chairman of General Electric and an RKO director, attending. M. H. Aylesworth, chairman, presided.

Up for discussion were a report on the studio status of Radio Pictures by B. B. Kahane, president, who was to return to the Coast Thursday, proposals for retrenchments involving $1,000,000 in annual economies and affecting all phases of RKO operations, and presentation of a proposed budget.

No announcement was made of developments at the meeting.

File Answers in B. & K. Suit

Answers to the accounting and receivership suit brought in Wilmington, Del., by Max Kirchheimer of Chicago against Balaban and Katz, Paramount-Publix, Great States Theatres, Inc., and Publix Great States Theatres were filed on Wednesday of this week. Mr. Kirchheimer charges Paramount and B. & K. entered into a deal to relieve Paramount of its obligation to repurchase its stock from B. & K. at $85 a share.

Named Circuit Supervisor

John Danz, head of the Seattle circuit that bears his name, has appointed Joe Cooper as supervisor of the fourteen downtown and neighborhood theatres operated under the Danz banner. Cooper was formerly manager of the Seattle RKO Orpheum, and later held the same title in Spokane and Portland for RKO.

RKO Cutting Expenses

RKO theatres have been ordered to cut $1,000,000 in expenses starting October 1, it is understood. The amount to be pared is equal to $20,000 a week for the next year. The cost control department expense already has been cut 51 per cent.

Start 16 MM. Company

George Coudert and Arthur Levy have established a new company in New York for the production of 16 mm. pictures. Actual production will be carried on at the Paragon studio in Jamaica. The name of the company is still to be determined.

Wingate Is Invited To Joy's Post When Colonel Goes to Fox

Dr. James Wingate, director of the Motion Picture Division of the New York State Department of Education, state censors, has been invited to go to Hollywood to join the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, according to a statement issued Wednesday night by Will H. Hays, president. It is planned that Dr. Wingate will succeed to the position to be vacated by Colonel Jason S. Joy when he accepts an executive studio position with Fox in Hollywood, and his duties will cover the administration of the Production Code with the complete machinery developed for its enforcement through self-regulation in the industry. In his present position, Dr. Wingate has been intimately associated with the work of the industry for many years, reviewing and censoring pictures exhibited in the State of New York.

"Dr. Wingate's administrative, educational and social service activities covering many years, as well as his varied experience in dealing with motion picture problems in general, peculiarly fit him," Mr. Hays said, "for the task of guiding the machinery of the industry's Production Code. His close association with the industry in this new work will enable him to further the educational movement of better pictures and higher standards of public appreciation for entertainment of the constantly better kind. For these reasons I am hopeful that the New York educational authorities will release him."

Colonel Joy joined the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors in August, 1922, as executive secretary of the public relations committee. In March, 1925, this committee became the public relations department and Colonel Joy became director. In November, 1926, he went to Hollywood to continue his public relations activities, and in addition assumed the direction of what later was called the studio relations committee.

Dr. James Wingate is a native of Princetown, N. Y. He prepared for college at Union Classical Institute, Schenectady, N. Y., and was graduated in 1897 with the degree of bachelor of science. He also holds the degree of master of arts from Union College and the degree of doctor of pedagogy from the New York State College for Teachers. From 1897 to 1900 he was principal of the Elementary School, Teachers' College, Columbia University, and from 1900 to 1917 was superintendent of schools of Schenectady County. In 1917 Dr. Wingate became associated with the New York state department of education as assistant in elementary education, continuing in this capacity until 1927, when he became director of the motion picture division of the department of education.

Colman Sues on Farnol Publicity

Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., is named defendant in a $2,000,000 suit filed Tuesday in Los Angeles supreme court by Ronald Colman, a Goldwyn star, who charges that the company issued publicity material to the press which Mr. Colman construed as reflecting on his character and ability as an actor.

Mr. Goldwyn said he did not see the newspaper material or sanction it and he has complete respect for the star as a gentleman and an actor. Lynn Farnol, Goldwyn press agent who is now in Hollywood supposedly negotiating with Paramount for a studio publicity post, has assumed responsibility for the issuance of the stories, but he said the material was a compilation of what Mr. Colman had said and what others had said about him and was by no means an original "brain-child" of his.

Through his attorney, Neil McCarthy, Mr. Colman issued a statement which said in part: "I regret that it is necessary for me to take these steps, but certain publicity material of a slanderous and destructive nature to myself has been prepared and distributed to the press by Goldwyn's office, without the knowledge or authority of myself and without foundation of fact. Goldwyn and his associates, after two weeks of urgent representation from myself and my personal manager, William Hawks, had not seen fit to protect my name or safeguard my interest in the way of retraction, denial or support of any kind. I was left with no option but to place the matter in the hands of my attorney. I further regret that after eight years with Goldwyn, such action should be necessary, but an actor's reputation is his principal asset economically."

The Goldwyn office in New York and executives at United Artists were not aware of the suit until it was reported in press dispatches from the Coast. They could throw no light on the nature of the material referred to by Mr. Colman.

Elliott Quizzes Union Officials In Kaplan Case

Charges of malfeasance in office against Samuel Kaplan, president and organizer of New York local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators, are being investigated by William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE and the national executive of the international organization.

Mr. Elliott is interviewing officers of the local following his pledge to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in Atlantic City, July 13. The executive council of the AFL had conducted a hearing on the charges and President Green had announced that the Federation was pledged to purge itself of any forms of racketeering and even to suspend an international union on proof of failure to act when a law violation had been established.

Edward F. McGrady, legislative agent of the AFL, had reported to the council that Mr. Kaplan had been charged by members with fixing his salary at an unreasonable amount, with forcing through motions providing that members make large donations to him, and with being head of a company manufacturing motion picture projection machines used by the employers of his union's members.

Denying the charges, Mr. Kaplan said that they "emanate from persons who have been disciplined by the union." And one of the officials of the union in defense of Mr. Kaplan said: "As chief union organizer he receives $20,000 a year, and as president $5,000. However, when the operators took a cut he also reduced his salary 10 per cent."

At Washington officials of the AFL are maintaining a "hands off" policy pending Mr. Elliott's report. Federation leaders said they lacked authority to charter the Empire State local, which has been formed in opposition to local 306, and that such authority rested in the international.

Local 306 is picketing theatres employing Empire State members and Empire State is picketing houses having local 306 employees.

Empire State says it has signed 178 theatres and is negotiating with 30 others.

Universal Dividend Declared; Contract Changes Made

The regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the first preferred stock of Universal Pictures Corporation, payable October 1 to stockholders of record August 24, was voted by directors on Tuesday.

Two changes in the 1932-33 Universal sales contract have been made following informal discussions with exhibitors and exhibitor representatives. Both changes involve provisions for substitutions and are intended to liberalize the clauses.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Rain

(United Artists)

Drama

Once before, several years ago, this picture was made under the title "Sadie Thompson." It was quite a box-office sensation. Previous to that the story enjoyed wide popularity as a stage play. Consequently its theme is pretty well known to all, but the younger generation of theatre goers.

To refresh your memory, it's the story of a girl who gets mixed up with a missionary on a South Sea Island. Professing rigid morality, the missionary is set on two objectives—to drive this girl out of the islands and back to the States to certain punishment, and to show her the way to salvation. In the end, he succumbs to her charms and is a suicide.

In this case, because the producers have made such a strong attempt to establish the stern impressiveness of the story, it is rather slow. In its drive to become powerful, it appears to have lost the spark of spontaneity.

Yet the drama and scope of "Rain" is sufficiently strong to inspire interest if it is presented to your patrons in the right way. And the first suggestion to that end is that you avoid comparisons either with the original stage play or the picture that featured Gloria Swanson and Lionel Barrymore. In the same roles, Joan Crawford and Walter Huston are satisfactory and liberal use of the name Joan Crawford not only will prove a strong magnet to her own fans, but should stimulate the curiosity of the rank and file.

Care should be taken to shy away from anything that might tend to stir up controversy. Because it so vividly displays the downfall of a minister, certain religious bodies may make attempts to have it barred from the screens. Therefore, in advance publicity, be careful to avoid anything that might tend to arouse antagonism.

Concentrate chiefly on the idea that "Rain" is new. Don't let your patrons get the idea that this picture is just another repetition of something they have seen before. You probably know only too well the results that ensue when the public gets the idea that a current feature is just a rehash. One or two recent remakes bear eloquent testimony to that. Follow the "new" idea up all you can, with all the prestige of Joan Crawford.

The picture is a natural for some effective lobby exploitation, reproducing a South Sea Island scene, with mechanical arrangements and lighting effects that will show passing clouds and falling rain. In Hollywood, the Chinese theatre has used 24-sheet boards and newspaper space to guarantee "Rain" on the opening night. The throb of tomtoms runs generally through the last half of the picture and if you can conceal one in your lobby or on top of the marquee and have it beaten in a muted manner, this may attract a lot of attention.

There is hardly anything in the picture that will be appealing to children, but there is plenty that will interest both adult men and women. Giving the names of Crawford and Huston equal prominence with the title, and handling your advance campaign with smart showmanship, should insure your theatre doing much better than average business.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

A Parisian Romance

(Allied)

Comedy Drama

With Lew Cody very much the actor that made him a prime favorite in other days, here is a picture that is worthy of consideration for anybody's booking sheet. A catchy story, well acted, with enough romantic glomour, "A Parisian Romance" is essentially a gay comedy.

As the title indicates, the picture is laid entirely in Paris. Cody is a philandering boulevardier, who is content to have innocent bystanders choose his companion for the evening by selecting one of the many keys he has on his ring. But he falls in love with a real girl, though there is drama between him, Marion Shilling and Gilbert Roland, with Cody trying to be a friend to the jealous lover but always being misunderstood. The picture has a climax full of heart-interest as Cody realizes that he is too old for this young girl and gracefully steps aside to make the way smooth for Miss Shilling and Gilbert.

The combination of romance, drama and comedy, which provokes any number of laughs all the way through the picture, is so nicely welded that interest is maintained. Where the picture tends to become serious, there is always a snappy interlude, both in sequence and dialogue that seems to start everything out on a new track.

Stirring up much better than usual audience interest in this picture should not be a difficult job. First, with Cody, Shilling and Roland heading the list, there is a cast of names pretty well known. You can promise your patrons plenty about the first three and their work will make good anything you say. In addition, the romantic theme, with Cody the "big shot" for the ambitions of four girls, three of whom play him for just what they can get out of him in the way of money, jewels and clothes, with the fourth, Miss Shilling finding him an honest lover, should give the real showman plenty of material with which to work.

Along this line, try to get over the idea that the picture is a gay romance, one that carries more than its share of fun and laughter yet has ever-present the element of suspense. There are opportunities for plenty of tieups, particularly with jewelry stores, fashion shops, florists, and the like.

"A Parisian Romance" is sufficiently strong to stand on its own and needs nothing other than the regular supporting program. Direct as much of your advance campaign as you deem advisable towards the feminine element of your patronage, but don't make that appeal so strong that the men folk will get the idea that it is a woman's picture. It's a little too smart for the younger children, which is probably the quickest way of saying that it should prove popular with those from the flapper stage up to the most mature adults.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Merry Go Round

(Universal)

Melodrama

Politics and gangsterism, plus a vivid excursion into ruthless police department framing and third degree methods—that's the meat of "Merry Go Round." It will take its auditors on a spectacular ride into the invisible inside of big city government affairs.

It is strongly done. Little is left to the imagination from the time one gangster murders another right down to the final fadeout where the two bigs shots pull some dirty work and get off scot free while their three compatriots as well as the murderer take the rap in the name of civic righteousness.

A quick resume may give you an idea of what to expect. Linden is wounded as he witnesses the murder of Stansky by Jig Zelli. Under the patriotic pleas of the Commissioner

SAM, SAM, THE NEWSREEL MAN IN THE FLESH!

This is the only time he was ever caught unaware.

You see him on his way to get another scoop for the Universal Newsreel. He is sneaking up on it, disguised in a cane and a trick hat.

He and his play-fellow, Graham McNamee, will catch this scoop and, between them, they will add it to the smartest newsreel the movie business has ever known.

They laughed when Sam, Sam hit upon the idea of making a sound newsreel as rapidly as a silent one. They laughed at the idea of announcing the news with the voice. But the Universal Newsreel grew so fast and was grabbed by so many theatres that now they all try it.

Often the Universal Newsreel steals the show from the feature! If that is not happening in your theatre, you are not running the modern type of newsreel. Maybe you're still living in the gay nineties!

and guarantees of protection, he identifies the killer. Instead of protection comes a shower of machine gun bullets. When the powers that be arrest Zelli, they find that he has a lot of "hot" papers that are dynamite to their ambitions. Next Linden is framed and you see him get a vicious third degree. Then the honest police commissioner sets out to save the kid.

All the hysteric hullabaloo of reform is rung in. The civic soul is stirred and it arrives at the jail hospital just in time to save Linden, who has been hanged by a couple of killers. Then comes the blowoff, with the district attorney, Mayor, Zelli and one other getting theirs, while the big boss and the assistant district attorney who are responsible for the whole situation laugh at them and Linden wonders "why they don't elect the right guys."

It is bold and brazen and is marked by some great performances all the way down the line. There are only two feminine names in the cast, Sidney Fox as Linden's wife, and Noel Francis, a gangster moll. For that reason and on account of the story, it looks as if "Merry Go Round" should be a man's picture. It deals with a subject in which right now there is great interest—politics, and it brings back the gangsters purporting to show what a grip they have on municipal government.

It looks as if selling it as an expose might be the medium that will excite the maximum interest. There is no question that it has plenty that will hold the interest of the grownups and the older children, and probably some reform candidates will hop on the picture as proof of their campaign assertions. But don't hazard the risk of trying to make it the campaign argument of any candidate or party.

Promise your patrons that they will see drama, intrigue, chicanery and finally honesty that wipes out all but a couple of the cankers that fester the body politic. As the picture has a sensational theme, make your advertising copy just as sensational. Give them straight from the shoulder arguments that here is not only a piece of entertainment but also something that might inspire them to exercise a little more care when they get around to thinking about whom they could vote for.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Crash

(First National)

Drama

There are two excellent selling angles in this marital drama, which centers about the complications which result from stock market manipulation, and the catastrophe which followed the famed "crash," October, 1929. As the production is scarcely outstanding, concentrate on the cast leaders, Ruth Chatterton and George Brent for the marquee lights, and on the story angle of the crash of the market, echoes of which are still reverberating.

Besides the Chatterton and Brent names, there is none in the cast which will mean much on the marquee, although several are well known as character players, and they all do satisfactory work. A glance at the cast will indicate to the individual exhibitor which of the names there will have the greatest effect in his particular situation in support of the two leading players. Sell Brent to the women, he is something in the nature of a new type of masculine figure on the screen, at least from the physical standpoint. Miss Chatterton is as usual capable, handling herself with the expected confidence, her role with intelligence. She wears beautiful clothes with a manner which should attract the women.

Play up the story as perhaps the best selling point. A woman, Miss Chatterton, comes from poverty into wealth and luxury with the success of her young financier-husband, Brent, in the stock market. She fears the poverty she knew before, and cannot stand the thought of returning to it. Forced to exercise her wiles upon a wealthy banker to obtain tips for her husband, she becomes too friendly, excites her husband's jealousy. When the crash comes, she cannot endure the idea of reduction, goes to Bermuda, and there captures a sheep-raiser, and the possibility of wealth. She returns for a divorce, but Brent succeeds in convincing her that she should stay with him for a new start.

Feature the idea of wealth on a foundation of sand, resting on a base of figures on a ticker. Indicate the result on the lives of the wealthy of the crash. Feature in the advertising that fateful date, October, 1929. A marital drama centers about a financial situation. The crisis brought the wealthy to poverty, in certain instances brought the poor into sudden and dramatic wealth.

The title, if tied to the date, can be made to mean much in drawing power at the box office. This is perhaps not strong enough for the best nights, but undoubtedly will offer satisfactory entertainment. There is nothing in it for the youngsters, in any sense.—Aaronson, New York.

Those We Love

(World Wide)

Comedy Drama

How far you will go with this picture depends in part upon how much interest your patrons have in problem plays. That is what "Those We Love" is. Opening with the hysteria of Armistice Day in New York in 1918, it details the romance of a struggling young author, who, during the time it takes his boy to reach the age of 12 or 13 years, rises to wealth, fame and happiness. The designs of a vampirish charmer almost wreck the entire setup, but it is saved by the father and mother love for their boy, plus the good influences of those omnipresent "friends of the family."

Undoubtedly the double-bill condition has given birth to a special kind of picture to meet the situation. Thus, even though "Those We Love" has a cast that is studded with pretty good names, the development of the story, that has become altogether too common and wellknown, practically dictates that it be presented along with other attractions.

Yet, without becoming too enthusiastic, there are several media for arousing patron interest in the picture. First is the cast, with the first five names being used to the utmost advantage with plenty of stress being placed upon Mary Astor, Lilyan Tashman, Kenneth MacKenna and Tommy Conlon. Follow this angle with catchlines bringing out the idea that a father and mother loved their boy too much to permit one worldly failing to leave a blemish on his life.

Go after the family trade by emphasizing the thought that one indiscretion should not be the cause of blighting three lives. Play up the human-interest angle with cleverly worded ads and prepare publicity stories that have particular local significance. The appeal of the picture will be essentially to adults, however. Even the presentation of a juvenile actor, Tommy Conlon, in an important role, does not bring it into the classification that will make it very attractive to youngsters.

There is hardly any chance for extra exploitation, which indicates that the title, combined with an effective playing up of the cast names in both straight advertising and publicity, as well as in lobby displays and programs, will be the means of stimulating interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Night of June 13

(Paramount)

Mystery

For small town and neighborhood houses, this bit of familiar yet novel screen story looks to be a piece of good entertainment. Larger, first-run houses may not fare so well with it, because it is a sort of over-the-backfence gossip story, it has that appeal that should register in communities where everybody knows everybody else and where they talk about the things that happen to each other.

Here's the story. A jealous wife is murdered. The audience knows who committed the crime, but the characters in the story are in the dark. Her husband, unable to establish an effective alibi, and being suspected of carrying on an affair with a neighbor, comes under suspicion. The stories the neighbors tell are not related in dialogue form; the camera whirls back and presents each one's story in picture form. This clever bit of direction lifts the picture out of the ordinary class and makes for sustained interest.

Just when things look blackest for Brook, along comes the neighborhood ne'er-do-well, who, through a lot of fine comedy, gives everybody connected with the crime the jitters, but finally drops information that clears the innocent man.

While it is a mystery picture, it steers clear of the ordinary method of putting mystery into a picture. Everything is intimately familiar and the murder is plain to all, but the ringing in of small town gossip is the angle that gives it its particular appeal for small town and neighborhood.

There is plenty of drama and suspense presented in such a different way that your audiences will find it easy to understand and thus it has the stuff to make it strongly interesting. The cast is more than adequate, boasting a number of outstanding names. While Brook at times appears a little too austere, his role calls for a man pretty much bewildered by the chain of circumstances that surround him. Most of the laughs are contributed by Charles Grapewin, and his comedy is one that should be stressed in any campaign. Much can be done with the title, building up a teaser campaign that should create unusual interest by arranging all sorts of gags about it in question form.

Understand that you have a clever picture, well acted and smartly directed; spend a little more money in advertising this picture and put in a little extra effort to convince your patrons that you have a sweet treat in store for them, and there is no reason why "The

There are several million kids, more or less, waiting for this picture all over the United States, just as they have been waiting at 7.15, five evenings a week, during the last year for the latest episode of "Chandu, the Magician," over the air. Judging from the reception two or three hundred youngsters gave the production last night, even though their elders smiled indulgently at Eddie Lowe's feats of magic, this picture will spread a new crop of black ink on the Fox books.

After the exhibitors have played this one, they'll probably start wiring their local Fox exchange to find out when they can book "The Further Adventures of Chandu, the Magician." And if the Fox production heads haven't already started that, they're not nearly as smart as they have recently shown themselves to be.

"Chandu" is built according to the good old-fashioned formulas that brought millions into the pockets of the early picture magnates. It's a lineal descendant of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and the "Tarzan" series. And produced with all the modern resources of the motion picture, it proves there's just as big an audience for this type of picture as there ever was. Especially when the story has been sold to millions via the air for a year.

"Chandu" is a yarn that every kid with a radio knows by heart, visualized by a cast largely composed of his favorite players. He'll be more sold on "Chandu," on the air and on the screen, after he sees this picture.

Eddie Lowe is a nicely convincing Chandu with just the right amount of unction and suggestion in his performance. Irene Ware, as Nadji, is easily the best of the women, though little June Vlasek gave a good account of herself. Walthall is excellent as Robert Regent. Bela Lugosi's accent is t[illegible] for [illegible]mf[illegible]at times as [illegible]is neighbo[illegible] of directio[illegible]mooth and Raves from the critics and praise from audiences are in the bag. But be smart. Get the jump on word-of-mouth by exploiting this to a grand-slam opening. The kids are back from school . . . their parents are back from vacations . . . and with "Chandu" on your screen you'll sing "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Josser on The River

(British International)

Thick-ear Comedy

The showman who thrives on easy-come-easy-go custom may be able to do business with this picture; the showman who is jealous of the reputation of his theatre for family attendance will avoid it. It's a melange of silly music hall situations held together by dialogue that for cheap vulgarity and coarse suggestion would be hard to equal on the most hard-boiled downtown stretch.

The story, such as it is, is another variation of the "Man in Possession" theme, Josser and his partner Hank cause complications in the Kaye household—that is to say, houseboat—with their efforts to give the rich uncle a good impression of his nephew and niece. There's a spot of blackmail as make-weight and a lot of vulgar byplay concerning the supposed children of the young couple. And there is a rough scene in which Josser endeavors to cook a meal.

It's no easy matter to suggest explotiation for the film, unless you have played—and got away with—any of the earlier Josser pictures, in which case you just have to advertise it as the next in succession. But if you specially desire to screen it, play up its farcicial plot, have a man dressed as a woman on the street, and spill a bit about Lotinga being a favorite English touring comedian. You can, on the other hand, throw it in as second feature to fill the bill and say nothing more about it.—Charman, London.

No Living Witness

(Mayfair)

Drama

Here is an active, fairly entertaining independently produced film, which cannot be rated in the class of first-run attractions for key city houses, but will do very well for the house in the smaller situation, or on a double-bill program.

The title, obviously, has selling possibilities. Indicate in the advertising only briefly that a dictaphone becomes the silent witness to murder and its confession, but it would be well, also, to somehow make clear that the film has nothing to do with court or trial procedure, as may perhaps be indicated by the title, to avoid the disappointment of patrons.

The cast has a few names which should be found of selling value. Notable among them is Noah Beery, who as a crooked criminal attorney, attempts to fleece a simple westerner of his money, but is murdered by an accomplice with whose wife he had been too familiar, before he has even an opportunity to enjoy the crookedly-procured money. Gilbert Roland, as the district attorney's assistant, and Barbara Kent, as the daughter of the westerner, form an attractive, quite capable couple in handling the romantic angle of the story. Carmel Myers warrants a play, because of her name and her manner of handling her role. The others in the cast are of no particular importance to the box office, yet are reasonably capable, especially J. Carol Naish, who as the murderer of Beery, and husband of Miss Myers, is effective in his work.

There is comparatively little to work with in the matter of story. Sell the film as a dramatic story of big-time crookedness which meets its end more completely and thoroughly through the vengeance of its own kind than through the efforts of the police and the forces of law. Indicate something of the simplicity of Otis Harlan as the Colorado horse raiser, who is bilked of his money chiefly through his passion for gambling on the races, a factor which is not overlooked by the brutal looking Beery.

This is best played midweek, rather than on the best nights. There is very little in it for the juvenile trade, and at the same time nothing objectionable, with the possible exception of an occasional bit of gun play.—Aaronson, New York.

Chandu, the Magician

(Fox)

Mystery and Comedy

Here's a lot of grand hokum that should hand your patrons laughs and thrills. From the youngsters' viewpoint, it is undoubtedly the best picture that has been made for their entertainment in a long time. Magic, mirth and mystery are the keynotes of this dab into the mystic occult sciences of India and Egypt, and it takes in just about everything from crystal gazing, hypnotism, the evil eye and magic down to one of those Harry Houdini escapes from a sunken coffin.

Making liberal use of camera tricks, it gets right down to the fundamentals of motion picture production, with laugh provoking comedy gags, both subtle and evident, as the basic idea. The mystery and thrills have for their main purpose the heightening of the comedy. You'll probably get your best results from this picture if you make every effort to get over the idea that the whole thing is a lot of good, wholesome fun, dished up in such a novel manner that they are bound to get a whole lot of enjoyable entertainment.

On those grounds, selling "Chandu" to real box-office business should not prove a too difficult task. In the first place, the nationwide radio broadcasts of the story have formed a ready-made audience and if you happen to have a station in your community that is releasing the serial, the natural thing to do is to try to work out some kind of a tie-up with it, to plug your playdates. Don't overlook the interest creating possibilities of the broadcasts in all your advertising and publicity. Likewise see if you can work out contacts to get hold of some of those "Chandu" magic sets that the sponsors of the broadcast were giving away. Go in for weird, mysterious stuff that will stir the imagination, and with whatever tricky mystic ballyhoo you use, always get over the idea that "Chandu" shows how it all works.

Make your big play for the youngsters, both the real youngsters and the grown-up ones. It's one of those "Perils of Pauline" things that should have them booing the villains and cheering the hero. It should be an ideal picture for Saturday afternoon and Sunday. Yet you want to plan on having as many youngsters as possible in the house at every performance in order that they may transfer their enthusiasm to the adults.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Great Hokum Mystery

Fair Amusement

The first subject, "Hypnotizing for Love," in a new Educational series provides some moderate amount of amusement as a re-run of what is apparently an old heavy drama of the early days of the motion picture. Lew Lehr adds a running fire of amusing and sarcastic comment which is meant to give the spark of comedy to the subject. Often enough the spark fails to flash, when the dialogue makes too great an attempt to be funny. However, there is novelty and humor in the appearance today of that which at one time was weighty, blood-curdling drama.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Union Wages

(Universal)

Fun and Action

There's much of rollicking humor of the slapstick mode in this picture in which Louise Fazenda, Sidney Toler and Jim Finlayson precipitate the complications, Toler with something of a more or less quiet form of comedy, Finlayson with a broader and more roaring type, and Miss Fazenda with both. Situations are routine, but the unplumbered and therefore overflooded bathroom and the finger jammed into the firehose nozzle provide laughter because of treatment by veterans of the comedy field.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Butcher's Boy

(Universal)

Fair Cartoon

Universal's Pooch the Pup has a rather hectic time by reason of the cat and an electric clothes ringer when he attempts to deliver a chicken to the fair animated girl. There is a measure of amusement, able musical synchronization in the short, and the youngsters in particular should find it reasonably enjoyable.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Pickin' A Winner

(Vitaphone)

Novel

There is good novelty in this number of the group of shorts in Technicolor which Vitaphone recently produced on the Coast. The color makes it unusual among short subjects, and it possesses a touch of brightness, of the musical comedy nature, which is quite effective. The comedy is only moderately comic, but the subject as a whole, with the addition of chorus numbers, dancing girls and an expert adagio turn, combined with the well handled color, is worth special attention.—Running time, 16 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 10, 1932, reaching $1,589,367 from 108 theatres in 20 key cities over the country, registered a marked increase over the previous calendar week, ended September 3, when 106 houses in 20 cities amassed a total of $1,389,894. The increase, therefore, amounted to $199,473. During the more recent seven-day period three new low individual house record figures were established, and no new high individual records were recorded. During the preceding week as well, three new "lows" and no new "highs" were noted.

Story by Sam Marx • Directed by BEN STOLOFF

He Put the IT in Politics!

Politics was his profession—love was his pastime!

As a politician he CHOSE TO RUN.. after the most glorified!

Bossing a city was sport—campaigning a blonde was Heaven!

PLAY IT AT ONCE
GO AFTER IT FOR A CLEAN-UP !

THERE'S A MILLION DOLLARS' WORTH OF PUBLICITY BEHIND "THE NIGHT MAYOR!"

WHO Has To Be SATISFIED?

MILLIONS spent for picture production! Millions for distribution! Millions for theatre operation! And the theatre patron finally foots all the bills—for one reason only—to be entertained.

EDUCATIONAL builds its product for theatre patrons. They are the ones to be satisfied. Not the producer. Not the sales force. Not even the theatre manager. These pictures are made to entertain the patrons. And they have been entertaining them successfully for years in all parts of the world, reflecting their public popularity through the box-offices of leading theatres everywhere.

But never before has EDUCATIONAL offered a program so rich in diversified entertainment material, so sure of public acclaim, as its new line of short subjects, ranging all the way from tabloid grand opera to slapstick comedy.

For the theatre that makes satisfaction of its patrons its controlling principle, there is box-office satisfaction aplenty in this line of short features.

A Message from the Makers of the World's Finest Trailers

That big cigarette-maker —

who takes half-page advertisements in the newspapers—he would pay heavy dough to be in your boots! He's keen to advertise his wares on your screen!

But you couldn't have that! Your people, your audiences, come to see MOVING PICTURES not COMMERCIAL ADVERTISING. They're interested in pictures!

There you are! Your audience is all set and your screen is in front of them: give it to them! Tell them about pictures—in trailers—trailers which show the actual scenes—trailers which give the actual dialogue—trailers which are pictures in themselves, and which they are waiting for!

Snap to it, man! The greatest advertising force in existence, the screen, is at YOUR command at a cost so slight as to be negligible. Boost your patronage. TRAILERS BUILD BUSINESS!

National Screen Service
Ad-Vance Trailers

Trailers capture an interest that is WAITING to be captured. Trailers sell on the line of least resistance—and build patronage at the least cost!

National Screen Ad-Vance Trailers are your first aid to better business

MEETINGS

MOTION PICTURE HERALD presents each week a calendar of events and meeting dates of exhibitor and production associations and other non-commercial organizations in the industry. The secretaries of all such associations are urged to forward to the editor necessary data for inclusion herein, of both regular and board of directors meetings.

SEPTEMBER

15—Associated Motion Picture Advertisers: Weekly meeting and luncheon, at Sardi's, West 44th Street, New York. President, Hal Horne; Secretary, Al Sherman.

Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences: Nominations to be closed for acting, directing, art directing, cinematography, writing and production awards, at 7046 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. President, M. C. Levee; Vice-President, Conrad Nagel.

Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences: Branch and section chairmen appoint tellers to count nominations cast by actors, directors, producers and writers branches and art directors and photographic sections, at 7046 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood.

United Scenic Artists: Monthly meeting, at 2560 North Beachwood Drive, Hollywood. Executive Vice-President, William B. Cullen.

Files Bankruptcy Petition

The Alexander Industries, Inc., Colorado Springs, Colo., majority stockholder in the Alexander Film Company, has filed a petition in voluntary bankruptcy. The Alexander Film Company, which will continue to operate, is said to be in excellent financial condition.

THERE are good reasons for the superiority of "CERTIFIED PRINTS." They are made of only the finest raw stock and chemicals by the most skilled in their craft. The results of every process are predetermined. Quality is CONTROLLED.

Even though our prints now represent every action in your negative naturally and vividly, we maintain a costly research laboratory where expert chemical and technical engineers seek the means of making them MORE accurate and prolonging their life.

At Consolidated Park your negatives and prints are guarded against every conceivable hazard by modern protective devices which government and insurance officials enthusiastically endorse. And our employees' pledge to secrecy guarantees the same safety to the originality of your ideas.

Our plants can operate twenty-four hours a day and make overnight deliveries when occasion demands. They have a yearly capacity of over a billion feet of film printing.

The largest release printing contract is easily accommodated by our ample working capital. And there is always a surplus from which to make loans to our customers and finance independent production on a large scale.

If you're not already familiar with the unusual advantages offered by a large, specialized organization, send your next production to Consolidated. Compare results. You'll readily agree that twenty years of practical printing experience makes a big difference in release print quality and service.

Our New York and Hollywood plants are especially equipped to develop negatives—to render a COMPLETE film laboratory service.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 143.—(A) Can you offer any illustrative proof that something actually does pass from one point to another when current "flows"? (B) Does electric current seek to pass into the earth? (C) If you say that current generated in a dynamo has no affinity for the earth, explain why it often leaves the wires and flows into the earth. (D) Explain, in your own words, just what takes place when current finds a path and passes from positive to negative.

Answer to Question No. 135

Bluebook School Question No. 135 was: "(A) What sets the practical limits of distance from light source (arc) to collector lens? (B) Should the projectionist refuse any collector lens containing color, or do you regard certain tints as of sufficient advantage in softening the light to justify the loss set up by their use? (C) Will a collector lens, the face of which is pitted considerably, cause sufficient light loss to justify discarding it? (D) Does a pitted collector lens cause any ill effect except light loss?"

Out of the mass of answers, those of the following have been passed as either correct or approximately so: Lester Borst, Evans and Rau, G. E. Doe, S. G. Williams (except as to Section B, which failure to answer is explained by the statement that he has never had any), Roy Arntson, Bill Doe, J. L. Bernard, T. Van Vaulkenburg, W. Broadbent, A. Zerach, T. T. Garling, D. L. Binkendorfer, O. L. Darls and J. B. Oleson, J. Wentworth, P. L. Davis, A. Bailey, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, L. R. Mitchel, Mic Granby, L. D. Davis and L. Thomas, S. D. Love and W. Love, J. Ahrenson, G. Tinlin, O. L. Evans, J. Cermak, B. Wheeler and R. Shuler, F. F. Franks, S. G. Williams, H. B. Coates, J. Daniels, T. Davis and T. Lambert (who also disclaims experience with color in condenser lenses), D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant, A. Wells, N. McGuire, J. Hendershot and L. G. Gregeson, A. Geibto, R. Geddings and L. Grant, H. Edwards, J. L. Hanson and F. Hanson, D. L. Mason, D. Lambert and T. Davis, G. Farmann, H. D. Schofield, D. L. Sinklow, D. Anderson, J. Billings, H. D. and B. L. Palmer, D. K. Ormie, L. B. Singleton and J. B. Buckley, M. H. Lonberger, D. V. Peterson, P. K. Daniels, D. Holler and D. R. Peters, D. Emmerson, K. O. Allbright, T. McGruder, L. D. Simmons, C. Peters, S. Howard and D. L. Kurts, G. Deckson, R. D. Konley and S. Maybe, E. Rymer, P. Kackson and B. Diglah, R. Singleton, D. Michaelson, K. L. Knight, T. Murphy, F. Harlor and G. Harrison, D. U. Granger, J. H. Rathburn and D. Little, C. Ray and T. Taylor, A. Breaston and L. Haber, H. D. Tyler, F. Rickey, J. Williams, F. Ferguson, A. Jones, P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks.

I have selected the answer of Lester Borst to Section A. He says: "Heat is the most important factor in determining distance from light source to collector lens—assuming the light source to be an arc, of course. Once the minimum distance that the lens may be from the light source without excessive lens breakage or pitting has been determined by experiment, we may proceed to select and arrange the rest of the optical system, knowing we will have available to the converging condenser lens the greatest possible amount of light."

Section B was answered as follows by G. E. Doe: "It would depend upon (a) the views of the manager, (b) the surface of the screen (also the condition of its surface), (c) the amount of illumination available. My own reaction to this matter would be as follows: If the exhibitor or manager prefers a brilliant, dead-white picture, then any lens containing color should be discarded. If a soft tint is preferred instead of brilliant white, then a yellow condenser might help, though to use such a lens it would be necessary to have plenty of light available, since the tint would reduce the effective screen illumination considerably.

"I personally would discard any lens containing color of any sort, and with the notation before set forth, colored lenses, or perhaps I had better say tinted lenses, should be refused if received in that condition, or discarded as soon as color may appear in them. Color in a lens means added light absorption, and except for yellow, an objectionable effect upon the screen.

"I have spoken of the screen surface with relation to yellow light. If its surface should have a tendency to be yellow, either naturally or by reason of discoloration, then of course added yellow from a tinted lens would be bad."

I have selected the foregoing answer because of the argument presented with regard to yellow tint. However, I hold the safest procedure to be to discard all lenses containing any color of any sort. True, some softening of the dead white effect might be set up by yellow-tinted condenser lenses, but the value or density of such tinting is more or less unreliable and apt to change under the effects of high temperatures.

Evans and Rau, as well as several others, say: "Under no consideration would we have anything to do with any condenser containing color. A green tint is especially objectionable," with which view I think I must agree.

(C) This is well answered by T. Van Vaulkenburg, who says: "Much would depend upon just what is meant by 'considerably.' Pits are caused either by hot carbon particles, or by incandescent particles thrown off from the metal coating that some carbons carry. Each such pit ruins the area of lens surface it covers. All light striking that area will be either reflected or dispersed in many directions. The lens surface covering the area of the pit is translucent, not transparent.

"It then may be said that any 'considerable' pitting of the surface of a collector lens should be quite sufficient cause for its replacement with a new lens. The replacement will cost money, true, but wasted light is not an entirely free commodity."

(D) I believe M. H. Lonberger did best on this one. He set the matter forth after this fashion: "A pitted spot on the face of a collector lens will disperse all light passing through the point, some of it to such an extent that it may not reach the converging lens. If it does reach that lens much of it will be reflected by reason of the heavy angle at which it will reach the curved surface. Very little of the light which does get through the pitted surface and reach the converging lens, will reach its surface traveling in the right direction. The rest will be misdirected, and if it gets through the converging lens at all, will set up confusion in the beam between the converging lens and the 'spot', as well as to some extent as far as the screen, I believe."

Well, done, Brother Lonberger. Your answer shows you have studied the projector optical train to good purpose. I am not myself quite certain as to the exact effect in the matter of confusion between the projection lens and the screen, though surely it must exist. May I suggest that some of the lens manufacturers help?

Dear Mr. O'Neill:

Things seem to be showing signs of life and our business is gradually increasing—it may be a forerunner of a profitable Fall and Winter season. We sincerely hope so, both for you and for us.

During the past few weeks we have received inquiries from Japan, Australia, Venezuela and Costa Rica, all of which state that "we have seen your ad in BETTER THEATRES . . ." (By the way, we received an order from the party in Costa Rica this morning). It sure makes us feel good to receive inquiries such as these because we know that our product is being brought to the attention of exhibitors and theatre supply houses in other parts of the world as well as the United States.

With best regards, I am

Very truly yours,

DEAR HERALD:

This is the town where our Nebraska Cornhuskers come once a year to get a good walloping. Boy, how these Missouri crackers can play football. They say that when you are in Missouri you should do as the Missourians do, but we just can't do it. Down here they eat lobster salad, tune their radios in on crooners and jazz orchestras and some of the boys are going to vote for Roosevelt, thinking he is the Bull Moose candidate, and that lets us out.

John L. Yous, who opens and closes the doors of the Delpheus Theatre at Mount City, says that the show business interferes with his religion. We asked him what religion and he said he had been in the show business so long that he had forgotten. He's a queer guy, this John is, but he swears by the HERALD, and that's sumpin.

Chester Bell manages the Fox DeGraw Theatre at Brookfield. The last time we saw Chet he was managing some houses in Redlands, California. The fact that they moved him to Brookfield, Missouri, proves John McAmley's statement when he was elected justice of the peace and said to Emmet Bonlore, "Emmet, they just can't keep a good man down."

Chet asked us if we know Carl Reese, who sells Fox pictures out of Omaha, and we told him we did. He said he used to change on Carl when his mother wasn't around, and we told him he didn't change him often enough.

Chet gave us a little booklet put out by the Fox Company. On the title cover we read this: "The Movie World Wakes Up." Then it goes on to say: "For two years the producers have been making picture to please themselves—now they are making pictures to please You."

On the inside of this booklet we find the following confession:

"It must be frankly admitted that the movie, during the last two years, has lost some of its popularity. True, the depression has kept some people away from the theatres, but undoubtedly the great majority of the stay-at-homes had become dissatisfied with the current movie style.

"When the movie found its voice, the producers grew so enthusiastic they overdid the thing. Emphasis was placed on words. Action and scope were neglected. The screen became a mirror of sophistication, and the movie studio an experimental laboratory. In a word, the movie world lost touch with its followers. Now these sad experiments are over. The studios have been reorganized. The movie world has come down to earth. Its ears are open only to You. The producers have awakened to the demand for more humanity and less hokum. More wholesome comedy and less stilted satire. More red-blooded action and less swank."

There you are. They say that an honest confession is good for the soul, and Fox has had the nerve to make an honest confession, and this ought to put the Fox soul in clover clear up to the waist.

Mr. Davis manages the Fox Grand and Fourth Street theatres in Moberly. He took time out to drive us out to their park and show us a beautiful lake where they catch bass and crappies and then he took us out to the Brown Shoe Factory and other places of interest, which proved to us that these theatre boys are a whole lot nicer than most people credit them with being, all of which is further proof of what we have contended all along.

The last time we met Mr. Davis he was managing some theatres in Parsons, Kansas. We hope the next time we see him he will be managing theatres in Nebraska, and that's where he ought to be.

Columbia has three theatres, all independent, and all managed by Mr. H. G. Woods, who, by the way, is a most. delightful gentleman to meet. He remembered us from four years ago when we called on him, which proves that he has a remarkable memory. The Variety was closed during school vacation and the other two theatres were just barely ahead of the hounds, according to Mr. Wood's statement. Columbia ought to be a good show town when the University is open.

We met a theatre man yesterday who told us that he had known for two years that he ought to have the HERALD because it was a necessity, but he couldn't subscribe for it then because his wife was going to Indiana for a month to visit her folks and was leaving their six little children for him to take care of, two of which were twins and had just been weaned, and he wouldn't have time to read the HERALD if he had it.

We told him not to let a little thing like that stand in the way, that we'd stay there and take care of the children until his wife returned, but he was adamant, or cement, we don't know which. We have seen some that were both, but not often.

Jefferson City

This is the town where the state capitol and penitentiary are located.

We have been dodging penitentiaries all our life and now we would pick this town to Sunday in. There is something chilly and uninviting about a penitentiary; that's why we don't like 'em. We hope the warden is a nice, sociable kind of a fella. The main street in this town runs right on top of a hog-back and slopes from the center down a steep hill on both sides. That's why so many men wear out the seat of their pants sliding down these hills when it is slippery. We don't know how the women manage it.

There is a caucus of Democratic state candidates here in the hotel today. They elected Roosevelt twice in the lobby this morning and we were glad of it, for we have been a little leary about that November election.

Last night we attended the Miller Theatre of the Dubinsky Brothers. They were playing "Tom Brown of Culver," a very good picture, but one would have had to have a searchlight to find the audience. Perhaps Barnum & Bailey's circus, which was playing the town, had something to do with the attendance.

If we had our fishing tackle we'd go down to the Missouri river, which is only a block away, and catch ourself a nice big catfish.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR VALUE!

SEATED IN ONE OF the New York film exchanges, we listened to one of the best known film salesmen in this territory discuss present-day business with a group of some ten or twelve local independent exhibitors.

While we cannot recall his remarks word-for-word, we know they ran something like this: ". . . The losses in the movie industry are not being made by the producers or distributors . . . it is the theatres who are losing all the money, and the reason is as plain as the nose on your face. . . . They fired practically every manager who was earning a decent salary and replaced competent, money-making showmen with thirty and forty-dollar-a-week head-porters. . . . You fellows sitting around my desk will bear me out when I say that any theatre executive or owner who invests thirty dollars a week in the man who runs the theatre is going to get just that much value out of his investment. . . . Managing a theatre is a big, responsible and important task and if the owner of a theatre can't afford to pay his manager at least one hundred dollars a week then he deserves to go on losing money. . . ."

THE FILM SALESMAN who made these remarks is a man who has watched local movie history being made for a score of years . . is a thorough showman and capable of handling a theatre himself. . . He was not talking to hear himself gab or to amuse his listeners. . . He was merely giving vent to his honest feelings and, what's more, he was hitting the nail right on the head. He bemoaned the fact that the many showmen he knew in the prosperous days had seemingly faded out of the picture. He no longer encountered those real managers who ran their theatres so competently and profitably.

If those who O.K. the pay checks and pay the losses do not know it, may we inform them most emphatically that hundred-dollar values are not selling now or ever for thirty or forty bucks per head. . . You may buy cattle that way . . but you may find that the meat is tough and will give you a bad case of indigestion. . . And so with managers. . . If you are looking for bargains, you're gonna get stuck good and proper, because the man who will take a hundred-dollar job for thirty is going to end up by being worth about fifteen dollars in results. . .

WHEN BUSINESS IS BAD it is apt to sour a man's usual sunny nature. . . Perhaps that is why opposition managers took to pulling slightly off-color gags at each other's expense . . with the inevitable result that where local showmen were once friendly and working together for their common good they are now enemies and stop at no opportunity to throw mud at each other. . .

Which is hardly a nice state of affairs . . and believe me, when I say that I know from whence I speak . . 'cause only a week ago I stopped off in a town where I once had an interest and was surprised to hear Manager A knock Manager B, and vice versa. . .

Then the newspaper editor . . an old friend . . commented to me about it, which shows that the feud . . if you want to call it that . . was no local secret . . and the only way to put a stop to it may mean two new managers. . .

If YOU happen to be in such a frame of mind, better bury the hatchet . . (not in each other's head) . . and go back to working together again. . .

AND FROM 'WAY OUT West where some showmen are still showmen . . and we don't mean silent . . an old time member rises to ask: "Really, Chick, something must be radically wrong . . when theatres must resort to turning their theatres into grocery stores. I personally know the manager of a house giving away on different nights such stuff as bacon, bread, butter, cookies, cottage cheese, milk, lard and several other items. . . This particular manager would never use such inducements to get them into his house if he could help himself . . so maybe, up to this time, it has been poor product. . ."

Just to prove that we can only see sunshine where others see rain, we are of the opinion that the manager of a theatre giving away items as listed above is one lucky guy . . at least he doesn't have to worry about where his next meal is coming from . . he knows . . it's coming right from his theatre and he won't have to pay for it . . . Hey, hey . . I wish he would send me a case of that stuff . . the ol' cupboard is getting rather bare . . and the missus is starting to dun me for a new winter coat . . I hope she gets it. . .

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

After a hot and humid summer we suddenly found little ol' New York swept with brisk north gales, so we rushed this cartoon into print for fear that if we kept it back much longer it would be of no use at all. At any rate, it is said to represent an actual occurrence. So well . . . ?

HICKS RIGGED HUGE MARQUEE MEGAPHONE TO SELL "CROONER"

An immense megaphone rigged up under the marquee was the means of selling a lot of extra tickets on "Crooner" for J. Hicks, manager of the Hollywood Theatre, Los Angeles.

Inside the megaphone were six loudspeakers with the microphone connected to a vacant store next door to the theatre. This enabled the announcer to see the people on the sidewalk and talk to them through the megaphone. In addition to the announcer, song pluggers crooned song hits from the picture and other numbers, which were heard blocks away from the theatre.

The above stunt is reported as inexpensive and one that acted as a strong attention-getter for the picture. The accompanying photo will convey a fair idea of the huge dimensions of the megaphone. Note that it extends the entire width of the theatre front. The girl on sidewalk with hand pointing at marquee is Sheila Terry, who plays a part in the picture.

BOUCHER IS HITTING USUAL STRIDE DOWN IN WINCHESTER, VA.

A tie-up with a clothing store proprietor, distribution of star photos through another tie-up and a co-operative ad gag, all figured in recent promotional stunts engineered by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va.

One thousand cards, bearing a photo of George Brent at the top and plugging "Miss Pinkerton," were used to handle the giveaway of guest tickets made by the clothing store. On the same picture, another shop tied-in with the guest ticket idea by distributing to women five hundred autographed prints of Joan Blondell. The reverse side of the photo carried store and theatre copy. The co-op occupied a full half-page and was put over by the missing-words-in-ads gag.

Typical of Boucher's work, the above stunts only set the theatre back a matter of twenty-five guest tickets for each one.

ED LYNCH PUT ONE OF KEN LONG'S ADS TO PRACTICAL TEST

In connection with the vast amount of interest stirred up by the Ken Long ad series of articles carried by this department several weeks ago, here is direct evidence of how one of the layouts was put to practical use by Ed Lynch, manages of the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn.

The Powell-Francis mat, with exception that it came through reversed as to positions of the two stars in "Jewel Robbery," and the general lay-out of the ad, is almost identical with the Long ad on "Letty Lynton" illustrated on page 66 of the June 4th issue of the HERALD. However, Lynch used his own copy and also inserted a small box in the heavy rule to plug his "last times" on the current attraction.

Other recent activities at the Cameo reflect the efficiency of the street bally as a powerful means of attracting attention. Lynch has a young fellow over in his town who appears to be quite a versatile performer. During the real warm weather when it is advisable to stress the cooling system, he goes out dressed in a coonskin coat, ear muffs, golashes and carries an oil heater by one hand and a suit case by the other. Copy on the suit case reads: "On The Way To Cameo Theatre—Cooled By Refrigeration." He also rigged himself in a cut-away coat, high hat, cane and b. v. d.'s, with face made up in bright red grease paint in advance of "Is My Face Red," and consequently helped out the box office.

Other Club members have cashed in the same as Lynch on the Ken Long series of articles on ads and it's gratifying to learn of the widespread interest displayed by Round Tablers. We will publish other examples from time to time.

EDDIE LEWIS HAS JOINED THE COLONY OVER IN GLEN COVE

Some data at hand discloses that Eddie Lewis, manager of the Glen Theatre and comparatively a newcomer to the select Cove colony on Long Island, N. Y., has found his way 'round since locating there.

For instance, take the case of the Grant store over in his town, one of a chain of department stores in Greater New York. Eddie called around to see the manager and it wasn't long before he secured a full window for a gag entitled, "Who Is The Ann Harding of Glen Cove?" The store offered awards to every girl entering the contest.

We also have a snapshot showing a couple of frames used in the Glen's lobby. Standing in the background, or rather in the "black" ground, is another member of our Club—Leon B. Sternberger, Eddie's assistant manager. Next time he has his "pitcher took" may we suggest that a little more light would help us out in the matter of reproducing photographs.

HAROLD KAY USING BIG BOY BALLY OUT IN HIS HOME TOWN

While we haven't had a line on showselling activities of Harold Kay for many a moon, we're now able to report that he has been very busy working out his own problems, at the same time keeping up with his fellow Round Tabler's activities through this department.

The accompanying photo shows a Big Fellow he unearthed out his way to use as a bally. He is seven feet eight inches tall, weighs 270 pounds, is only nineteen years old, and a more than willing worker. The small colored boy on his left, used for contrast, is some more local talent and the two make a great team. On the right of the giant is Kay himself.

The giant and the sandwich boy are generally put out two weeks in advance and they make the whole town talk, according to Kay. He also tells us that he'll be glad to "ship" his big boy to anyone who wants the loan of him for awhile. He's ambitious and wants to get along, says Harold.

MANY COSTLESS ADS PROMOTED BY ENOCH FOR STRAND THEATRE

We've stated before that Bob Enoch, publicity director of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, Va., was doing some excellent work with promotion of no-cost ads and a batch of tear sheets at hand offers further evidence of his ability as a space grabber de luxe.

He gets around his town, does Bob. Here's an ad deal he made with a big daily concern, copy stating that guest tickets would be given with the purchase of each quart or two pints of a favorite ice cream. It really amounted to a two-for-one, as the dairy concern paid for each ticket received at the box office.

Here's another one dealing with unemployment that's real interesting: It was promoted through a tie-up with a local newspaper and a box in one of the upper corners stated that the paper would present two guest tickets to the Strand to anyone who would call the City Employment Bureau and give one of the unemployed a job that paid not less than 75c. This one ran for three days, and the latest word is that the newspaper intends to use it as a weekly feature. Other ads dealt with hosiery stores, etc., each one tying up with the sale of merchandise and guest tickets.

Bob and his boss, Mr. Barrett, stopped in at Club headquarters a short time ago to say hello. They were on their way home from a Canadian fishing trip, all set to tackle the new season selling campaign. Lots of luck to them both, and we'll hope to hear more about what they're doing.

Harris' Special Bulletin

John H. Harris, zone manager for Warner Bros. in Pittsburgh, has issued a special bulletin for all managers in his terrtory to use during September, October, November and December. It runs to fifty pages, giving managers hints on mechanical operation, operation policies, promotion ideas, tie-up suggestions, contest possibilities and special material for holidays.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Jones devised this method of making customers laugh at some of the funny-less comedies being released. Just rig up an attachment to fit under the patrons' arms; when patron works the board under the seat with his foot it causes the attach ment to tickle 'em under the arms. Result: they will laugh at the comedy, regardless.

STEVE BRODIE AND ASSOCIATES MAKING GOOD OUT IN DENVER

Sometime ago we paid tribute to the very attractive theatre tab paper published by Steve Brodie and his associates in the interests of the Harry Huffman theatres out in Denver, Colo. At that time, however, we referred to the maiden issue and now that the masthead of the one we have at hand proudly reveals that it has reached Number 6 and is growing bigger and better every week, we think it no more than due Mr. Brodie and his gang to add a few more words of praise for making even a free publication acceptable reading matter to the public—for after all, it's quite an effort for anyone to digest a lot of words unless the material and general make-up interests the reader. Evidence of the paper's popularity lies in the fact that its circulation is constantly growing and by letters received from readers.

We note on the front page that another big Mickey Mouse picnic was announced for the following week at the Lakeside Theatre, which included a colorful parade through the business section of the city. Sponsors agreed to have on hand a procession of handsome floats, bands, and other attractions. Incidentally, this club has reached a membership of over 10,000 and is growing into one of the finest promotional stunts ever put over by the Huffman staff.

As a sidelight on the efficiency of Huffman management, it is interesting to note that since the RKO Orpheum was added to the theatres under Mr. Huffman's control, the second week of the new regime changed from red to black; which is something to shout a little about in these times of overseating, etc. "First Year" was played the second week, together with a personal appearance of Mitizi Green. Through Mitzi the Orpheum was able to crash a leading, or we might say the leading paper on three successive days, getting two columns the first day, two the second and a three column photo and two column story on the third day. Readers familiar with this particular newspaper will appreciate the results.

Directing publicity for a good-sized group of houses, which includes editing of his tab paper and active participation in many matters of exploitation keeps Steve Brodie pretty well occupied.

Paper Praises Picture Ads

In a recent letter to S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Bros., an advertising executive on the "New York Times" stated: "Please accept our congratulations on the effective display secured in the "Life Begins" advertisement. . . . We are of the opinion that because of the attractive manner in which the lettering was handled and the judicious use of white space, this ad will attract the favorable attention of all 'Times' readers."

PAPER GAVE ALDEN FRONT PAGE STORY ON STUNT HE USED

A newspaper thought a plan used by C. J. Alden, manager of the Fox-Martin Theatre, Globe, Ariz., to exploit "Skyscraper Souls" so unique that it gave the stunt front page mention.

Alden had a small desk placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre, on which was a telegraph instrument connected with the box office. A lady sat at a typewriter taking the messages as they were flashed to her over the instrument. Copies containing descriptive catchlines on the pictures, addressed to "Mrs. Globe and Miami" (the two communities) and to well known citizens, were given to patrons.

We note also that Alden has been treating himself to one of those old-time baby contests, for which doting mothers always seem to go like a ton of brick if the stunt hasn't been worked to death. He worked this one with a tie-up with newspaper and local photographer. The entire cost of taking the photographs was absorbed by the paper, photographer and theatre. The paper carried entry blanks to be properly filled in by the applicants, the only requirement being that the baby be three years old or younger. The weekly awards were made according to applause of audiences.

When a stunt is good enough to sell itself to the managing editor of a newspaper for front page material it goes without saying that it must have attracted attention. Nice work on Alden's part.

"CRUSOE" PREMIERE

Here is a photo of the bally arranged for the Atlantic City World Premiere of "Mr. Robinson Crusoe" at the Warner Theatre by Joe Snellenberg. The truck was used ten days in advance and leather-lunged newsboys of the boardwalk plugged the special heralds. Snellenberg also arranged for attractive window displays in the public library and in a leading department store.

AWARDS FOR BEST CAMPAIGN ON "PARADISE"

Smart, aggressive showmen will have another chance to win cash awards as the result of an announcement made recently by RKO in connection with exploitation on "Bird of Paradise." Five hundred dollars, split three ways, will be given for best campaigns; $250 for first, $150 for second, and $100 for third. The contest closes Nov. 30 and all material should be in by that date.

The campaigns will be considered from an all-around angle, which will include newspaper advertising, lobby displays, exploitation, and publicity. The winners will be selected by a group of judges chosen by RKO Radio, consisting of two trade paper representatives, three advertising, exploitation and publicity experts. All campaigns should be forwarded to "Bird of Paradise" Dept., RKO Radio Pictures, 1560 Broadway, New York City.

This picture is claimed to lend itself exceptionally well to a variety of exploitation and publicity angles, and to encourage maximum of effort the company has made reductions amounting to one-third of the original prices on advertising accessories. Get behind it and strive for one of the handsome awards. Anyone of them ought to make a fine Christmas present.

INTRODUCING A NEW SLANT IN PUTTING OVER A FASHION SHOW!

Planned To Aid Unemployed Through Local Relief Committee, Will Open Up Many New Angles of B.O. Appeal!

THE new style season is here for Mr. Merchant as well as the new picture season for Mr. Exhibitor. With both trying to create interest in their respective products, the possibilities of a Fall Fashion Show on the theatre's stage looms as a mutually successful means of stimulating this interest.

Worthwhile support and added publicity can be gained through arrangement with the local Relief Committee or Junior League in making this Fall Fashion Show a charity affair.

The following is a suggested outline for a benefit Fall Fashion Show. It is given in this form to assist in making clear the points of contact and requirements of those participating. A resumé of the points contained in the outline is also given. It is understood that many suggestions herein will necessarily be changed to conform with local conditions and individual operations. However, the outline has been made as simple as possible and is adaptable to most localities.

3. Newspaper
   a. to assist in community welfare through co-operation with those engaged in raising money for the unemployed.
4. Theatre.
   a. no-cost advertising and publicity through merchants' ads and stories in newspaper.
   b. increased attendance.
   c. good-will through co-operation with Relief Committee.
   d. added publicity through mailing list of the merchant.

In this, the second of Floyd Fitzsimmons' manuals on special campaigns, you will find an already good box office builder made better by reason of the new appeal which Floyd has worked out through the medium of tying the local unemployment relief, or some other worthy local cause, into the whole business.

Towns where Fashion Shows have been staged regularly will probably jump at the opportunity of injecting this new angle so as to maintain the interest among merchants and at the same time give the newspapers a chance to get away from routine material about the Show.

This new idea has a wealth of possibilities for showmen accustomed to tackling a worthwhile suggestion and following through to a successful conclusion. We will be interested to learn how this idea works out; so, if you make use of it, be sure and send us all details and tear sheets.

ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY

1. Relief Committee or Junior League
   a. mailing list.
   b. word-of-mouth.
   c. promoted window cards.
   d. promoted street banner.
2. Merchant
   a. newspaper space.
   b. window display.
   c. mailing list.
3. Newspaper
   a. publicity through advance and current readers, pictures, etc.
4. Theatre
   a. trailers.
   b. lobby.
   c. mailing list.
   d. programs—if used.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF EACH—

1. Relief Committee or League
   a. to make the coming Fashion Show a topic of discussion wherever possible—club rooms—teas—bridges—at home—etc.
   b. to promote free window cards and space.
   c. to promote a street banner if permissible to use.
   d. supply the models unless the merchant prefers doing so.
2. Merchant
   a. to supply the gowns, etc., used in the show and sale.
   b. to accept by agreement some way of selling the dresses—his remuneration to come from a percentage of sales.
   the sale of dresses displayed at the Fashion Show to take place at his shop or some other mutually designated place.

Much Good-Will Publicity and Increased Attendance as a Result of Injecting New Ideas Into Your Show!

   c. to run special ad or ads on the show, using theatre's sig cut—mentioning the show, dates, etc.
   d. to send out appropriate mailing piece.
3. Newspaper
   a. to generously assist the Fashion Show by newspaper stories and and pictures.
4. Theatre
   a. to run a special announcement trailer.
   b. appropriate lobby displays with credits.
   c. to use theatre's mailing list for merchant's mailing piece.
   d. to act as campaign manager.
   e. the use of the theatre's stage and facilities.

The above outline should furnish a rather definite idea regarding the entire campaign.

Many successful fashion shows have been held without the charity angle as mentioned here. The entire campaign then being conducted jointly by the merchant and theatre. Nevertheless, every exhibitor and theatre manager realizes the tremendous value of tieing in with a local relief committee or charitable institution and newspaper on such occasions.

Only one department store, gown shop or merchant has been mentioned so far. This does not mean, however, that the combined co-operation of several would be injurious to the success of the show. Separate credit for each display on the stage would be required in the event more than one merchant participated, of course. In some towns the combined efforts of all or a number of dress merchants might determine the success of the show more readily than the selection of a single shop. This is left to your discretion.

After all contacts and arrangements have been made, prepare your advertising material for a definite date—say ten days in advance. Then, Mr. Merchant can be ready with his first ad—the newspaper will be set with its opening story—the theatre with its trailer and lobby announcements. Keep in mind credits due in all advertising and publicity.

Newspaper stories can be written around new Fall fashions, the coming attraction playing your theatre on opening night of the Fashion Show, the names and pictures of girls who will act as models, what is to be done with the money raised through the sales of dresses, mentioning local statistics showing need for such funds.

Mailing pieces, suggested in the outline, can be sent out by Mr. Merchant to further stimulate interest. Make sure these reach all women's clubs and organizations. Here again, see that all necessary credits are carried and that the theatre's name, the dates and time of each showing are prominently set.

If your town is one where the combined

THE A. B. C.'s OF A FASHION SHOW!

Women's Wear Shops would be most successful, a special Fashion Edition or Supplement might be promoted through the efforts of the newspaper. "Blanktown Relief Committee's Fashion Show Edition." Your assistance and enthusiasm will mean considerable towards the success of this idea. The theatre's name, the Show dates, the name of the picture, etc., should be conspicuous throughout. Likewise, the merchants, who are presumably doing their share, should be given due credit in connection with the sale of their merchandise, the proceeds of which are to be turned over to the local Relief Committee. If a Fashion Show Edition is too much to expect from your location, suggest a double truck—or even a full page.

Yours, is the responsibility of staging the show. Your ability to put it over effectively will determine its success. Plan carefully and rehearse as often as is necessary. If your stage is well equipped there will be sufficient material to work with, i.e., drops, lighting effects, etc.

Set the stage so that the models may enter on a raised platform with ample space for the necessary movements in displaying the gowns. After these "display gestures" are completed, exit is made down a flight of stairs onto, then off the stage. Proper lighting effects will assist in showing off the gowns, and the models should exit under a booth spot. Your entrance set or frame will necessitate a front traveler or curtain. The thought is self-explanatory.

ADDED ATTRACTIONS

To relieve the monotony of a continuous stream of models pouring on and off the stage, I would suggest one or more added attractions on the program. This may be done quite simply yet effectively through the use of local singers, dancers, pianists or an orchestra.

There should be no trouble in this direction. Just bear in mind that your show must be kept dignified when selecting talent for this purpose.

Though not an added attraction, it would be well to have one or two small girls dressed in pages' uniforms assisting on the stage. Their duties would be to place and remove credit or style cards on easels occupying each side of the stage, operate the curtain or traveler, carry announcement cards for the added attractions. Two young girls, costumed alike and with clear, strong voices, might make verbal announcements simultaneously instead of the card and easel suggestion. Both can be used if desired.

DIVIDING THE SHOW

The number of parts into which the Fashion Show is divided will depend upon the type and style of wear displayed. For example: morning wear; sports wear and afternoon apparel; evening gowns, dinner and formal dress; pajamas, negligees, etc.; coats. A similar program could be broken into three divisions, using one of the specialty numbers between the first and second, and between the second and third. These numbers will allow the models to make required changes, thereby eliminating a crowded backstage through the use of too many girls.

The number of models used will depend upon the variety of styles to be shown in each division and your facilities for handling them. To be more explicit, we'll say you have five styles of morning wear and six of sports wear which comprises your first division. Then, eleven models should be used. Each girl must be fully dressed, ready to step upon the platform immediately following the model ahead of her. However, it isn't pertinent for me to suggest a definite number of models. Your tie-ups will be a determining factor here—your facilities another.

THE FINALE

The finale might be presented in a number of ways. One of the most common is a wedding scene in which the entire group takes part.

Another is a setting of huge clocks, made from compo board by your house or local artist. The hands of the clocks point to the hours between which morning apparel is worn, the hours between which sports wear is generally acceptable, and so on. As the traveler opens, the girls in their respective costumes are hidden behind each clock. As each division steps from behind its clock music appropriate to the suggested hour is played by the orchestra. For example: morning wear, "Across the Breakfast Table From You"; Sports Wear, "The King's Horses"—"Horses Horses"; Afternoon Wear, "Tea For Two"—"When I Take My Sugar to Tea"; Dinner Clothes, "When Day Is Done"; Evening Wear, "Lady of the Evening"—"Save the Last Dance For Me"; Negligees, pajamas, etc., "Good Night Sweetheart"—"Ho Hum."

You may have thoughts of your own for an effective finale.

Keep your show moving along at a fairly rapid pace. Don't let it slow down or drag to the point of becoming boresome. Too little is better than too much in this instance.

A word about selecting the models. Whoever has charge of this should see that only girls of reputable families are chosen. Any indiscreet selection might result in other girls refusing to participate. Suffice to say that for the good of the entire program, this point should be watched.

THE SALE

The advertised sale of dresses and gowns modeled in the Fashion Show is to be held on the following day at the shop or shops of those merchants who participated. The sale can be for one day, or as long as desired. A vacant store might be secured for the display and sale of Fashion Show gowns.

It is not to be expected that Mr. Merchant will donate part of his new Fall stock without some remuneration. An agreement can be worked out which will assure the Relief Committee of a reasonable percentage of the total sales. The Chairman of the Relief Committee might be given the privilege of an appeal from the stage on opening night, requesting support of the sale by women of the town, etc., etc.

MISCELLANEOUS

Here's an additional thought regarding the merchant's ads: A series of personal message ads, directed to the attention of prominent women in town. Each ad from Mr. Merchant, inviting a particular woman to the opening night of the Fashion Show at which his advance Fall styles will be shown, etc. Intense reader interest and curiosity can be built up around this type of ad. In towns where there is a prominent, recognized stylist, this type of invitation should definitely be used.

Banners and window cards, previously mentioned in the outline, should be promoted by the Relief Committee with your assistance. Where promotion is impossible, it is suggested that the Relief Committee—merchant and theatre defray printing costs. Copy and credits to be agreed upon by all.

Undoubtedly other mediums of advertising and exploiting your Fashion Show will present themselves through regular channels. No rigorous plan can be followed precisely as outlined.

Remember, when presenting the plan to your local Relief Committee and Mr. Merchant (separately) to wax enthusiastic over the possibilities—from their point of view. Once you have them sold, your job is half done.

FLOYD FITZSIMMONS' B.O. MANUALS!

We are certainly delighted with the fine comment regarding this new feature of the Club section. Many members and readrs found Floyd's first manual on Grater Show Season particularly timely and helpful. We know the second, on Fashion Shows, will be equally well received.

For his third, and scheduled for publication next week, Fitzsimmons has selected a request manual:

"PLANNING YOUR ANNIVERSARY CAMPAIGN"

Hardly a fall season goes by without anywhere from a dozen to a hundred appeals for some hints on making a theatre anniversary a really outstanding event. Now, instead of offering an assortment of ideas all scrambled together, to be unraveled by the manager, we will present the suggestions in manual form all carefully worked out from start to finish so that you can be reasonably certain of a successful anniversary celebration.

Another manual on "School Contacts" has been set back one week, due to the many requests for the Anniversary material.

A limited number of reprints will be available to regular subscribers as well as divisional circuit offices. Please do not ask for any more than you actually need and make your requests on theatre or circuit letterheads.

UNIQUE FRONT AND OTHER STUNTS USED TO EXPLOIT "IGLOO"

Sweltering passers-by on Broadway, New York City, were considerably intrigued a short time ago when a combination of the cool drafts from Rivoli doors and unique front made for "Igloo," a picture of the frozen north, for a time distracted their attention from wilting collars and hot feet.

In addition to the attractive front pictured on this page, credit for the building of which must be given to the well-known Ralph Stitt, a number of attention-getting gags were used.

The two photos, one a head-on shot and the other a close-up will convey a good idea of the flexible compo-board title letters, the striking aurora borealis effect across the entire front and the cutouts of hunters and bear at either side of entrance. Evidently the head-on shot was taken at high noon, as the sun has lent depth to the title letters. Also note the panel on right hand of close-up, explaining by numbers one to five special thrills in the picture. Other art work was inserted in the side-walk level panels and the box office was dressed to resemble cut cakes of ice used for igloos.

One of the stunts consisted of a bally of an authentic Eskimo travelling outfit of sled, snowshoes, harpoons and sealskins. A team of three dogs, driven by two local "Eskimos," completed the outfit.

The other stunt was "Moro," billed as the human iceberg who has himself sealed in an ice cake and remains there for thirty minutes. Crowds jammed the block while this gag was going on and the idea was tied in with that part of the picture which describes the sealing-in of the physically unfit of tribes while others seek new hunting grounds.

"BETWEEN US"

"Suppose every dollar you have or hoped to have was invested in this theatre. Could you go right to sleep tonight or would you lie awake and wonder?

"WONDER if everyone in town knew all there was to know about the picture coming to your theatre?

"WONDER if tomorrow's ad copy could persuade anyone to do without something else in order to buy a ticket?

"WONDER if your trailer made people read or yawn?

"WONDER if the paper your good money bought was posted where people could see it, or down an alley where only a bloodhound could find it?

"WONDER if that Broadway star in the short shouldn't be billed as an added attraction?

"WONDER if the window cards landed in windows or in the creek?

"WONDER if that shot in the news reel which reports a front page sensation shouldn't be given a special card in the lobby?

"WONDER if the stills you displayed were a careful selection which told just enough and not too much?

"WONDER if your lobby has the color and intrigue to make people stop . . . the power to make people buy?

"WONDER if the opposition is setting the pace for you?

"WONDER if you are following or leading?

"WONDER if you had trusted too much on the picture's strength to hold up your reputation, or given enough of your strength to hold up the picture's reputation?

"WONDER, if this theatre belonged to you, would it be a tombstone to a weak spirit or a monument to a fighter?"

Ranger Club Activities

Recent activities of the Buck Jones Rangers Clubs of Greater New York included a visit to the Curtiss-Wright airport at Roosevelt, L. I.; a swimming meet at Luna Park, Coney Island, and participation in a subway stunt at 42nd street and 7th avenue.

Representatives from twelve theatres were conducted about Roosevelt Field and taught the fundamentals of the various types of 'planes, a feature of the day being an air broadcast.

Every Ranger Club in the city was represented in the Coney Island meet and many members gave interesting exhibitions of their aquatic skill.

The subway stunt consisted of a display showing Buck Jones on horseback and four panels presenting the youngsters on their way to Luna, the first time, it is claimed, that this sort of merchandising stunt was ever used at a subway entrance.

TED HILGENDORF IS BUSY SHOWMAN OUT IN NORTH MILWAUKEE

No news from Ted Hilgendorf, manager of the Ritz Theatre, North Milwaukee, Wis., does not necessarily mean that this Round Tabler hasn't been stepping along at his usual rate. Here's a few notes we've gathered on Ritz activities, thereby proving our contention.

Instead of window cards Ted has been using a window streamer—home-made and done in two colors. All the material necessary is stencil paper, some oil paint and strips of white paper. The cost is negligible, since most anyone can paint the letters after the stencil is cut. We have a sample at hand and it is most attractive.

Public interest in the coming presidential election prompted Hilgendorf to hold a straw vote for "Dark Horse," a picture with a political theme. The vote tickets were passed out the week prior to showing of the picture. Purely as a matter of reporting, we might add that Roosevelt won out in this North Milwaukee neighborhood by about 15 to 1.

Also included among his recent activities was a bally for "Tenderfoot." A little fellow dressed in cowboy costume rode a pony around town and the kids went for the stunt in a big way. We have a snap-shot of the boy on his pony at hand but it's a bit too faint for reproduction.

The small illustration on this page will show that Hilgendorf is another Club member to make use of the mimeograph for folders, etc. The portion shown here is the inside spread of a four-page folder, and a good example of what can be done along these lines.

A tear sheet from the neighborhood newspaper Ted uses to advertise his current and coming attractions discloses that he uses only type and rules for his set up and he wants to know what can be done to make them more attractive. We suggest that he follow the Ken Long and other articles that have appeared in this department of the HERALD for the past several weeks. Various ways have been illustrated whereby small space (Ted uses 6" in two columns) can be adapted to use of display mats to make a most attractive layout.

BICENTENNIAL WIND-UP THIS FALL!

The schools will no doubt become active again on the Washington Bicentennial Celebration which comes to a close on Thanksgiving Day.

Theatres should make some effort to tie in with such activity because of the many advantages it can derive therefrom. In fact, any form of school cooperation generally reacts favorably for the theatre.

Contact the school authorities and find out what their plans will be for the remaining weeks of the celebration and then see if you can work something out for the theatre.

If the plans are rather hazy you may be able to come to their aid with some good suggestions in which case the theatre will certainly get the breaks.

TWO FULL PAGES OF NEWSPAPER CO-OPS SECURED BY MACRIS

Not long ago we mentioned that Orestes Macris, manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., had been convinced as the result of a recent advertising splurge that this so-called depression business was a lot of bunk. We note that he's been keeping up his good work—to the extent of promoting two full page cooperative ads within a period of three days. An American Legion Benefit was the occasion for the promotion. Local talent contributed to the stage show.

It's no easy matter to sell two full pages of ads in as many days to merchants in a community such as Wellsville and Macris and the newspaper boys deserve a lot of praise for their efforts. The accompanying illustration shows one of the two pages. Right about this time Mac will undoubtedly be working out some other selling stunt for September, and we'll be looking forward to hearing how it turns out.

I AM A SMALL-TOWN THEATRE MANAGER!

I know of many men of my acquaintance who are managers of theatres in towns of 30,000 population and under that chafe because they are small town theatre managers. They are envious of the fellow who manages a super theatre in one of the larger cities. Their one hope seems to be that some day they may get the "breaks" and get such a job. It all looks very rosy to them from the distance, and they feel that holding down that sort of job is showman's heaven.

Maybe they're right, but I prefer the smaller town. True, I don't have a beautiful office with mahogany furniture; I don't have a staff of ushers trained by a U. S. Marine Sergeant, nor do I play pictures for a week and then because they break a record hold them over for a second week's run. I grant you that I do not have the services of a high-geared advertising man to work out my exploitation and lay out my ads. I don't play vaudeville nor operate a super-de luxe theatre in the sense known today. No one has to send in their card to get an audience with the manager where I hold out.

I am a small town theatre manager. I know the people who come into my theatre. I get a great kick out of standing in the lobby and in the foyer of the theatre and greeting the folks when they come in and when they go out. I enjoy having the mothers in town call up and ask me whether or not the current picture is one that will be all right for their children to see. I enjoy attending Kiwanis club luncheons and calling my neighbors by their first names. I enjoy working out my campaigns and laying out my advertising. I really like to put a few programs in my pocket and go down the street and talk with the folks and incidentally hand them a program. I like to talk shop. I enjoy helping put my front up with the aid of the ushers and doorman after the show is out. To tell you the truth I even like to ride the truck with the advertising man and help him put up paper once in a while. It's great fun to go out and show him how to get window cards in good spots without putting out passes. My staff are my friends and I take them into my confidence, and, boy, how they work for me. I'm a small town theatre manager and I like it. It tickles me to have the kiddies come to my show and ask me all about the picture that's coming.

Hastings' Lobby Music

William Hastings, manager of the RKO Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, dispensed Hawaiian music via string quartette in the lobby to produce colorful atmosphere for his showings of "Bird of Paradise." He believes it puts a patron in a more receptive frame of mind on entering the theatre.

LOBBY DISPLAY OF FIGHT RING AIDED BROWN SELL CAGNEY

A replica of a full size regulation boxing ring was constructed to exploit "Winner Take All" by William Brown, manager of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, a stunt which materially aided in putting the picture over to satisfactory returns.

The ring was 14 feet square, 6 feet high and two corners contained the usual galvanized pails, sponges, water bottles and stools. Two pairs of boxing gloves and fighter's trunks further helped out the atmosphere. Over the ring the house electrician strung three powerful lights of 300 watts each. Cutouts of Cagney in fighting poses rounded out the ring scene. On the rear wall of the ring about 75 photos of different fighters were spread around.

Brown arranged with a neighborhood haberdasher for a large window display of James Cagney shirts, a card tying in for name of theatre, playdates, etc. Banners on the foyer ringside also tied-in with an announcement that 12 of the shirts would be given away each of the three nights.

All the above stunts cost the theatre was $1.25, which is certainly in keeping with the low cost displays being made by all the boys on the Randforce Circuit. That Brown and the rest of them are most resourceful, we think all will agree.

ATMOSPHERIC DISPLAYS FOR SOUTH SEA FILM

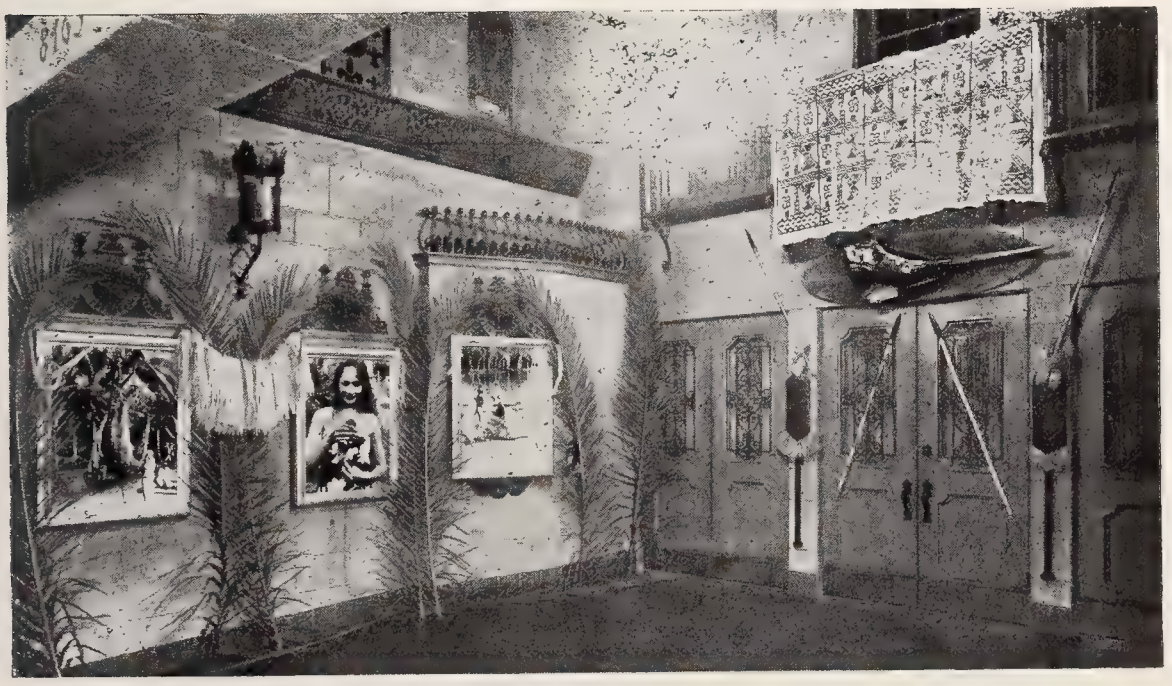

Photo above shows lobby display used at the Carmel Theatre, Los Angeles, on "South Sea Adventures," consisting of six 30 x 60 colored enlargements; four South Sea spears; two South Sea grass skirts; one 6′ x 5′ South Sea Tapa cloth; a 5' replica of the head of a sword fish caught by Zane Grey; two South Sea paddles; native leis; 35 feet of marquee banner, and 20 especially treated genuine palm leaves. The photo was sent the Club by Round Tabler Jack Proctor, now with Principal Distributing Corp., and he tells us these displays are obtainable at all company exchanges.

IMPROVING YOUR ADS!

Resumé of Long Series Briefly Outlines Important Points in Theatre Ad Construction Work!

By KEN LONG
Editor, "R.K.O. Now"

YOUR ADVERTISEMENT is your salesman in print . . . its purpose is to sell the show. The extent to which this purpose is carried out, however, depends entirely upon the thought and preparation put into the layout of the advertisement. For after all, no matter how big the show, or how much punch the copy has, if your ad is not seen and read, it is not worth the paper you write it on.

Make your add dominate the page . . . not in size, but in attention value. . . . Make your ad compel the attention of the reader and keep it. Use clear, simple illustrations . . . unusual catchlines . . . and good typographical display. Keep the reader reading by making it easy for him.

Ads of this calibre can be made up from press-book material plus standard newspaper equipment . . . stock lines, rules and borders. You should, however, be thoroughly familiar with your local newspaper's equipment for the making up of advertisements. Most newspapers, upon request, will issue a "type book" showing the full assortment of type styles, rules and borders which it has in stock. This book should be studied carefully . . . with this information you will, when giving specific directions, know it is possible for them to be carried out.

It is essential that a distinct picture be made of the ad in the rough . . . a neat appearing layout has a direct bearing on the appearance of the finished advertisement.

Helpful Suggestions

Here are a few rules to keep in mind when preparing advertisements of this type . . .

1. Select illustrations (mats) that are clear and simple. Never use a portrait illustration that is not a good likeness.
2. Use medium or bold-face type for catchlines. Bold-face or characteristic lettering from press book for all display lines; and light-face type for body copy of ad.
3. Devote at least one-quarter of the ad to white space.
4. Unusual catchlines that tease the imagination are a great asset.
5. Solid black in illustrations does not necessarily mean dominance. In the face of heavy pictorial competition, a delicate outline will catch the eye first. It is a matter of contrast . . . do what the majority are not doing.
6. Read the rough layout carefully before it goes to the newspaper to be set . . . a few minutes thus spent may save hours of time when an error is noticed on the first proof. In reading the layout, keep in mind the four basic facts which should appear in every theatre advertisement . . . namely, who, what, when and where.
7. It is not advisable to use a heavy black border around the entire ad. Such treatment is out of line with the spirit of the theatre.

Make Ad Readable

Keep the reader reading your ad by making it easy for him.

Six point, upper and lower case should be the minimum size for body copy. Avoid setting this copy too wide . . . thirty-five to forty letters and spaces to the line is plenty. Also avoid setting it too narrow . . . this necessitates the dividing of too many words, which naturally makes the reading hard.

Too many imaginary margins are harmful. It gives an ad "that hard to read" appearance.

White letters on black have attention value, as has black lettering on a gray background, but both are hard to read, especially when letters are small.

Simplicity Is Keynote

When all is said and done . . . SIMPLICITY is the keynote of a good advertisement. Intelligent use of white space will go a long way toward making an ad attract attention and be easily read. Clear, cleancut, legible type should always be used.

Using Press Book Material

The RKO press-books on "Bird of Paradise," "Age of Consent" and "Hold 'Em Jail" have some excellent illustrations which lend themselves exceedingly well for adaptation. The layouts which appear on the opposite page are made up from material in these press-books. They show how such material can be manipulated to fit your own requirements.

An important feature in these layouts is the white margin entirely surrounding the ad . . . that is, an eighth to a quarter of an inch white space on both sides, top and bottom. An ad, with this margin, appearing in the newspaper will stand out by itself. No matter what kind of pictorial competition appears beside, above or below . . . it will not destroy the appearance of your ad with the white margin. The width of this margin will vary according to the type of layout . . . but the fact that there is a distinct white margin around your ad will tend to make it dominate the page.

Know Your Compositor

Often the compositor may complain that he can not set in the manner designed in your layout, such as setting on an angle . . . but the right kind of persuasion will prove differently. Be on friendly terms with your compositor, visit him frequently . . . he may have valuable suggestions which will help you in designing your advertisement. After all, the appearance of the ad in the newspaper rests entirely with this particular person.

It is advisable to see a proof of every ad, no matter how small, before it is published in the newspaper . . . errors may have been made in the composing room. Furthermore, if you have difficulty in visualizing your layout in type, you may find something on the galley-proof which should be corrected.

Type or Rules on Angle

In making the layouts reproduced on the opposite page (with the exception of two) type and rules set on an angle have purposely been avoided. However, if your newspaper will set on an angle, many interesting and compelling layouts can be made from press-book material, plus standard newspaper equipment. In making layouts of this type, be careful not to defeat your own purpose by setting copy or rules on such unusual angles as to make the advertisement hard to read.

The accompanying article is a resumé of what Ken Long conveyed to you in his several discussions on newspaper advertising through the medium of exchange mats. The series appeared in the Club section from the early part of June to the end of July.

No feature of our pages created as much favorable comment as did Ken Long's ad suggestions and articles; and to satisfy the demand for such material we secured the aid of Eddie Hitchcock, publicity director for the RKO St. Louis and Missouri theatres, to carry on the work which Ken had to drop for awhile due to his duties as editor of the RKO house organ, "NOW."

The ads on the opposite page are typical of the many ads originally published during the Long series and are excellent examples of what can be accomplished in theatre newspaper advertising without the aid of an artist. Since there are thousands of theatres so situated that they cannot possibly afford to carry an artist on their payroll, these suggestions have really been a God-send.

Most gratifying of all has been the hundreds of sample ads sent to us by many of our members and readers to prove that they benefited through the following of the series. We sincerely trust that many more will do likewise and that between Ken Long, Eddie Hitchcock and many others capable of passing along these suggestions we will be able to carry on long enough to insure a complete education in newspaper ad construction for those many showmen who must depend upon their own initiative to sell their attractions through their advertising.

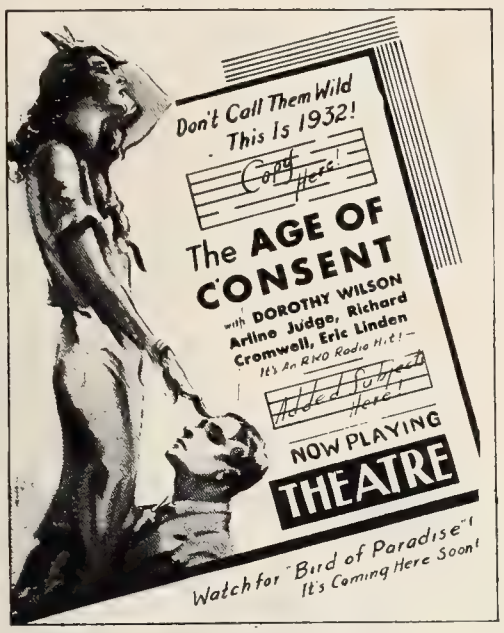
MURRAY MADE DEAL WITH FLORIST FOR A WINDOW DISPLAY



A tie-up with a leading florist for a novel window display drew a lot of attention to "Jewel Robbery" for Bob Murray, manager of the Music Box Theatre, Seattle.

The display consisted of oil paintings of Kay Francis and William Powell ornamented with beautiful flowers. Across the bottom was a strip reading "Say It With Flowers." Other copy carried names of the stars, picture, theatre and playdate. Two ribbons leading from the centre of the display led down to a wire sent by Francis and Powell congratulating the management for arranging such an attractive display. The florist also donated 300 corsages which were given to the first 150 women who attended the first two days' showings of the picture.

JACKSON'S B.O. BUILDERS!

Dozens of Tried and Proven Campaigns Were Included in This Timely Contribution!

Here is the final installment of the article started in last week's issue on Fall Merchandising Suggestions. Those who failed to go through the first chapter are urged to do so now.

Editor.

Tailoring Establishments

Contact immediately the larger cleaning and pressing establishments and prevail upon them to distribute small 3 x 5 or 4 x 7 heralds advertising the stars and attractions at your theatre.

It is suggested that you approach this from an angle convincing the merchant of the general appeal that surrounds any talking picture personality and that your copy will convey the fact that this appeal is due to the neatness of attire and cleanliness of person and that the reader can always remain neat by entrusting their garments to the care of the particular establishment cooperating. It is necessary that you watch, 1st, the grade of paper on which your message is printed, it being necessary that this paper come in weight similar to the pages of the Saturday Evening Post in order to insure its not crumpling and becoming lost, 2d, that a definite place be decided upon for the insertion of the heralds, A, in men's garments in the upper breast pocket of the coat with sufficient of the herald sticking out to command attention; B, on women's garments appended to the tissue paper on the hanger that ordinarily accompanies the garment when delivered. 3rd, copy for this herald should in all instances carry an illustration of the star appearing in your picture and at no time should it be allowed to be straight type. Next, watch the text and make certain that every verbal appeal is exerted to attract the reader's patronage at your theatre.

Hotels

Arrange to survey immediately all class B, C and D hotels effecting solicitation of managers or owners and prevailing upon them to place 3 x 5 card copy in the boxes of their guests calling attention to the attractions playing your theatre.

In selling this idea it will be necessary for you to convey forcibly to the cooperating party the thought that they are simply duplicating the services of large establishments in supplying information to their guests as to where to receive good entertainment and that they elevate themselves in the minds of their patrons in manifesting this interest in their recreation and welfare.

In carrying out this idea it is necessary that the person making the solicitation secure the name of the hotel, its address, name of the party who agrees to insert the cards and the number of rooms to be serviced. This last should be kept on file in the office and on receipt of the bulk order of cards from the printer be counted according to requirements and given to the ushers for distribution.

It is suggested that this advertising message be on three ply mixed cardboard stock and also be very definite in sales appeal with illustrations used wherever possible.

It will undoubtedly be necessary to recompense the cooperating party from time to time with passes to your theatre but it is suggested that these be granted at irregular intervals and that no definite commitment be made at the time the contact is effected. The passes used are to be of the service tax variety.

All of these tie-ups should be handled to hold for a minimum of six weeks and in the event of allocating this work to a member of the staff such member should thoroughly be rehearsed with the sales approach and all details of the activity.

Credit Clothing Store Tie-Up

Canvass Credit Clothing merchants in an effort to prevail upon them to insert a small plug on your show that will carry an ad tying in the neatness or beauty of garments worn by the stars and the inference that similar attire can be purchased on a credit plan.

In effecting sale of this idea to the managers of the respective stores it will be necessary to lean very heavily on the popularity of picture stars and the place they hold in the mind of the average American citizen. Point to Lux, Lucky Strike and other national advertisers and the importance placed in indorsements of stars. The tremendous sales of these articles is attributable in a great measure to the fact that they are sold in the reflection of nationally known personalities. Under no circumstance is the name of the personality to be used to indorse, sponsor or vouch for the merchandise sold by the cooperating merchant. Following is an example of style of copy to use:

"Mary Brian is the very essence of sweetness in 'Only Saps Work,' the all-talking comedy riot with Jack Oakie, Leon Errol and Stuart Irwin, now playing at the Orpheum. Miss Brian owes a good deal of her charm to the correctness and smartness of her attire and it is possible for every girl in Podunk to be as charming and attractive—it's easy!—take advantage of our easy payment plan."

Other copy that avoids direct endorsement can be written for any particular article the merchant wishes to exploit.

The mailing lists of furniture dealers is open to you by using the furnishings of various picture scenes to reflect credit to their merchandise.

The ramifications of this idea are too many to chronicle. Just use your imagination and see how far you can go.

In carrying out the tie-up it is necessary that you watch—

1. The weight and size of the paper used in printing the circular as size and weight will affect mailing cost. 3 x 5 light weight paper is suggested.
2. Make sure that you have a fairly accurate idea from the manager of exactly how many pieces of mail leave his establishment.
3. Ascertain dates and days of mailing and have your copy on hand accordingly.
4. Order printing for one set-up for the entire contact using the base for the address of the cooperating merchant to minimize printing composition costs.
5. Endeavor in every way to prevail upon the merchant to accept a portion of the cost of this printing using the argument that the loan of star names, the prestige of your theatre and the attractions that play therein all represent a monetary outlay to your company. The week to week advertising activities of your theatre and the publicity secured over radio, newspapers, and by word of mouth makes every personality in your show a kitchen byword in the homes and the merchant is certain to benefit by tying his merchandise into the popularity of these stars during the period they play at your theatre.

MERCHANTS GLAD TO HAVE HOWARD WAUGH BACK AT THE WARNER

One of the finest testimonials of cordial relations between theatre manager and merchants appeared recently in the shape of a full page co-operative ad on the occasion of Howard Waugh's return to Memphis, Tenn., as manager of the Warner Theatre, the company's ace house in that city.

Waugh, it will be recalled, left Memphis early this past summer as the result of a local pooling arrangement consummated between Warner Bros. and Loew, Inc., and spent most of the past season managing a Philadelphia house. Well, to make a long story short he's back at the old stand and the accompanying reproduction of the ad speaks for itself. It certainly does look as though the hometowners were glad to see the "Old Colonel from Dixie" once again in their midst and a-running the same old Warner in the same old way.

We at Club headquarters are just as glad as the folk down in Memphis to know that he has returned to the theatre he operated so efficiently. We and his fellow Club members congratulate him on his reassignment and wish him all the luck in the world. We'll tell you more about his return just as soon as he gets the time to send us a little information.

OLD TIME AMATEUR NIGHTS GOING OVER BIG FOR DR. JOE LEE

We're sure many of our members will recall that old institution of the theatre down in the twenties on Eighth Avenue, New York City, known as Miners, where Amateur Nights and "The Hook" flourished and made all other efforts in this direction look very tame in comparison. We're bringing this up for reason that it is claimed that the "Hook" really originated at the famous old house. It, you will recall, was a most practical instrument for removing under-average amateur entertainers from the stage, an act usually accompanied by a shower of not-too-fresh eggs, potatoes, overripe tomatoes, other aged vegetables from discerning fans in the balconies.

Now that that is off our chest we'll get down to facts, for it seems that the "Hook" idea has been revived over in Brooklyn by the well known Dr. Joe Lee, division manager for RKO in that portion of New York City. Dr. Joe chose Greenpoint for a try-out, a section bounded on one side by Newtown Creek and on another by Kelly's Park. The neighborhood is sometimes referred to as "Greenpernt" by smart Manhattan 'round-the-towners, who sometimes violate all tradition by crossing the bridge when something novel in theatricals is noised about. They even went to Hoboken when Chris Morley and his crew put that town on the map with the aid of pretty fair beer and the most terrible dramas anyone ever sat through.

This Greenpoint Amateur Night, according to what we hear, has caused almost as much of a sensation as the Hoboken shows —at least much more of a sensation in the immediate section of Greenpoint. When figuring out the revival, Doctor Joe had an idea that he could bring back some of the old-timers to the fold and, at the same time, provide some novel entertainment for the newer generation. Well, its worked out great! Not one of the houses in Lee's division has a real cooling system but on the hottest Friday nights, all through this past summer, all hang out the S. R. O. sign.

As Joe observes, there's nothing new—just an old gag dressed up in a new suit. He buys a full two-column space in the neighborhood paper and bills his acts just like they do at the Palace. (And maybe they don't holler, says Lee, if the names are not spelled correctly.) We would like to reproduce one of these ads but it's too long; however, fully one-third of the space was given over to billing of the amateur performers. Names were printed, as are their acts and addresses. What we can show you though, is a copy of one of the heralds he uses to plug this particular attraction. Note that the illustration shows a stage hand with a long hook, all ready to drag a couple of would-be entertainers to the wings.

As to quality of entertainment by those who survive the hook, let us quote from a write-up in the editorial section of the "Brooklyn Star": "Frankly, we expected a lot of hokum and slapstick stuff on Friday night and were pleasantly surprised at the way the acts were received. They were good enough to be well received and the patrons showed their appreciation by encore after encore." And so it goes . . . another writer in the "Chat" pays tribute to Manager Johnny Sheridan and his versatile back-stage crew composed of Ike Russell, George Rosen and Johnny Stone. This crew has made such a hit with the way they put over the numbers that Doctor Joe has made arrangement to have them at other houses on Friday Amateur Nights.

It seems to us that the real success of Joe Lee's Amateur Night stunt lies in the fact that it is bona fide in every respect. This same sort of gag was done to death in the neighborhoods a few years back under a number of different names—"Opportunity Night" being one of the favorites. Lee goes about it in the old time method—recruiting entertainers direct from his neighborhoods and thereby eliminating chances of professional entertainers to enter the lists under the guise of amateurs. It was that angle of the "Nights" that finally and justly caused their downfall as an attraction of merit. The average public is too wise these days to be taken in by ringers. They know an amateur when they see or hear one.

In any event, it's S.R.O. on Friday nights at the Greenpoint and other points in Lee's division. "Come over and see for yourself," he says, "but be sure to let me know so I can hold seats for you. You see it's a big social event with the natives and local clubs buying up large blocks of seats for the occasion. With exception of the Press, all free seats are suspended on Friday evenings."

The above ought to be enough to enlist attention from most any showman who is searching for some novelty to jack up interest in his theatre and we're thankful to Doctor Joe for reminding us that this old timer can be brought up to date and made to act as a box office attraction. Credit to Johnny Sheridan, too, for his part in the stunt. We'll be interested to hear how the same shows are going over in the other houses.

IT WON'T BE LONG NOW!

In fact in some communities it will be quite soon. Meaning the start of the boiler and heat.

This is our third warning and word of caution. If that heating plant is in need of attention it ought to be taken care of now. Ditto for fuel contracts if it is up to you to negotiate them. The longer you wait the more you will have to pay for coal or oil.

A careful check-up on all hand valves and air valves is most important before the plant starts working. Packing is generally required every few years on the hand valves.

All gauges, connections, grates, blowers, etc., etc., should be gone over thoroughly so as to give you all the time necessary to make repairs and replacements if you find it is needed.

Last year a wise-cracking manager wrote and kidded us about these little reminders. But the laugh was on him. His boiler went blooey the day he started it working. He should have taken the time to look over his furnace that he took to tell us how silly it was to publish this sort of information.

DAVIDSON'S NOVEL AND EFFECTIVE FRONT

The accompanying photo shows the unusually attractive and effective front recently promoted by Sidney C. Davidson, manager of the Earle Theatre, Philadelphia, in conjunction with the personal appearance at the theatre of Warren William and Bette Davis. Note the reproduction of the rear platforms of two crack Philadelphia trains, with cutouts of the stars and porters. The railroad company paid the several hundred dollars expense attached to the display because of Davidson's tag line, "The Route of the Movie Stars". Nice work, what!

Hello Belgium!

Further evidence of the international scope of the Round Table Club was recently indicated when membership applications were received from two M-G-M representatives in Belgium. One of our new members is Andre F. Delvigne, chief engineer of the M-G-M Belgium chain of theatres; the other is Elie J. Saul, manager of the Queen's Hall, M-G-M house in Brussels. We're glad to have both these men with us and hope they'll send along some news of what's taking place in showbusiness in their part of the world.

MANY OWNER-MANAGERS JOIN CLUB

B. V. McDOUGALD hails from out in Monticello, Ark., where he is in charge of the Amuse-U Theatre, an independently operated house. We also take it for granted that Mac owns the house and we're glad to welcome another owner-manager to the Club ranks. Just as soon as the opportunity comes along, McDougald, shake out a few sheets of paper and jot down some notes on what you've been doing to sell your shows. Then shoot the dope along to Club headquarters so we can pass the news along the line.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

A. N. MILES is the owner and manager of the Eminence Theatre down in Eminence, Ky. At the present time he's only showing two shows per week on a schedule of two nights for each picture, but with the start of the new season we presume that this will be stepped up to meet an increased demand. Miles is another new Round Tabler and we're very glad to have the opportunity to introduce him to his host of fellow members. We will take it for granted that he'll pass along any good show tip that comes his way, at the same time make an effort to keep the Club duly informed on what is taking place in showbusiness down his way.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

R. F. CLAMPITT operates the Trona Airdome Theatre out in Trona, Calif., and he's still another owner-manager to become a member of our Club. Neither is he affiliated with any chain or big circuit theatre organization, for his application card indicates that his house is independently operated. We'll also be looking for news of showbusiness from Clampitt's section of the country and hope he'll do his best to keep his brother Round Tablers informed on what's going on.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

D. B. FISKE is located down in Oak Grove, La., where he seems to be getting along pretty well without any circuit affiliations; at least his application for membership states that he isn't hooked up with any of the chain theatre organization. It is also a pleasure to record Fiske's application and we want him to know that he's one of the gang right now. We'll be on the lookout for his next communication.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

F. W. AMSDEN is the manager of the Isis Theatre out in Sidney, Montana, and since his card for application to membership does not indicate chain or big circuit affiliation, we'll take it for granted that he is also the proprietor of his house. We want Amsden to know that he's a welcome recruit in this organization and we'll hope he'll develop into a regular contributor.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

G. J. HAINLINE operates the Palomar Theatre 'way over in Oceanside, Calif., and neither does he list any chain or big circuit affiliations on his application for membership in the Round Table Club; so we'll also assume that he's another owner-independent member of this outfit. We're mighty glad to have him with us and hope he'll do his share to keep the ball rolling along. Let's hear further from you, Hainline.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

S. E. HELLER is located out in Grand Rapids, Minn., where he operates the Rialto Theatre and we're more or less inclined to believe that he also not only manages but owns his house. At any rate, his application for membership states that he's an Independent and that's a pretty good indication. He's another welcome member and we'll be looking for more news from his neck of the country.

LOREN J. WAHL is located out in Bellingham, Wash., where he both owns and operates the Grand Theatre. He is another independent theatre man to become a member of this ever-increasing army of showmen and we're taking this opportunity to introduce him to his brother Round Tablers. Now that Wahl is one of us we hope he'll do his level best to keep up the good work. Let's hear from you, Loren.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

L. F. EICK operates the Fenray Theatre out in Martin's Ferry, Ohio, and his is another name to add to the long list of showmen in this constantly increasing army of theatre managers. Eick is another owner-manager and we want him to know he's due the same cordial welcome extended all newly elected Round Tablers to become regular contributors to this department. We and his fellow members will be interested to learn what methods he's using to bring in trade.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

ELY B. SEFF is in charge of the Rialto and Loop Theatres out in Sioux City, Iowa, both privately owned houses, and it's a pleasure to include this live manager's name on the Club roster. We've already had an insight into Seff's work and we're sure his contributions to this department will be enthusiastically received. Don't let your first letter be your last, Ely, but make up your mind that your fellow Round Tablers shall regularly observe what show-selling methods you are using to boost trade at the Rialto and Loop.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

LEON MILNE owns and manages the Ritz Theatre out in Chickasha, Neb., and his name adds to the growing number of owner-managers who are coming into this organization of showmen every week. It goes without saying that we're glad to have him with us and we want him to help keep up the good work his fellow showmen started when they formed this Club. Shoot along some of your ideas of showmanship, Leon. We'll do the rest.

D. C. TAYLOR hails from out in Westwood, Calif., Lassen County, where he operates the Westwood Theatre. Whether Taylor is owner, manager, or what, we don't know, for he didn't indicate his executive position on his application for membership. However, he sent in the card and signed his name to it and that's enough to show us that he's some kind of a boss. Now that Taylor has become a Round Table member, let us hope that he will also keep these pages filled with interesting happenings in showbusiness.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

HARRY HOFFMAN is the owner-manager of the Soboba Theatre in San Jacinto, Calif., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. Harry is another Independent to join our ranks and he may be sure that all his fellow members are mighty glad to have him in this great organization. Get the "Club Spirit," Harry, and shoot along some dope on what you and your boys are doing to sell shows. The rest of the gang will be interested.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

MAX ZAGER is in the business of selling shows in the city of Greensboro, N. C., where he both owns and manages the Palace Theatre. He is another live showman to join up with this outfit and we're glad of the opportunity to introduce him to the other fellows. North Carolina boasts many a Round Tabler and there's no reason why we should not assume that Zager will do his share to keep the ball a-rolling along. We'll be looking forward to hearing from him again.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

J. R. STRANGE manages the Model Theatre down South in Nicholasville, Kentucky, suh, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this ever-growing organization of showmen. Glad to have you with us, Strange, and your membership makes one more from a state that has been well represented among these pages. Help keep up the good work by regularly sending along some news of what you are doing to boost showbusiness in your city. What methods did you employ the past season to boost trade at your theatre? Your fellow showmen will be interested.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

N. J. ZIMMER owns and manages the Rialto Theatre out in Wessington Springs, South Dakota, and we take pleasure in acknowledging his recent application for membership in this great army of showmen. He has found Club pages interesting in the past and now wants to do his share to help the good work along. We're mighty glad to have him with us and will be awaiting his next communication. Drop your Club a line, Zimmer, and let the rest of the fellows know what you are doing to put over shows in your town. Perhaps you have a gag up your sleeve that the rest of the fellows can use. Shoot it in to Club headquarters.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

MAX GOLDBERG is another gentleman from the South to join this week's crop of owner-managers and he makes his headquarters down in Falmouth, Ky. He operates the Kentucky Theatre in that town and also controls another house in Berry, Ky. We also extend a cordial welcome to him and hope he will become an enthusiastic contributor to this department. What was that last stunt you used, Max, to bring in the good old customers? Share your ideas with the rest of the gang. Every one of your fellow members will appreciate cooperation.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

13 BANDS AND MANY STARS TO GET OPENING AT CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

SINGERS

Mildred Bailey (5)
New York Paramount

Mildred Bailey, formerly star vocalist of Paul Whiteman's band, accompanied by two pianists, a violin and a guitar, offers ballads, semi-spiritual and rythm numbers, which earn her a pleasing reception. Miss Bailey is well known due to her radio reputation and should be a good bet.—H. P.

Gus Van
New York Palace

The surviving member of the Van and Schenck team, Van offers a routine of songs in a "round-the-town" visit, in which he sings Chinese, Irish, Italian, Harlem and Hebrew, his mimicry and dialects being unusually good. His story of the Bronx proves his ace. This audience liked him immensely.—H. P.

Miriam Lax
New York Roxy

Miss Lax displays her singing ability very nicely in the small part she has in the "Spanish Fiesta" scene in the current stage presentation. —E. D.

Madeline Patrice
Omaha Orpheum

Madeline Patrice, soprano vocalist and violinist, sings "Old Man River" to the delight of her audiences. She appears in formal gown and her poise and artistry give the week's bill a pleasing touch of dignity. She also plays a group of songs, asking the audience to recall them from memory.

Mata Cora
New York Roxy

This concert star, held over for the second week, is featured in the second act on the program. She sings beautifully the "Swiss Echo" song, with a voice that proved a pleasure to the audience.—E. D.

Tito Coral
New York Roxy

This Spanish tenor sings two numbers in his native tongue and closes his bit with the singing of "Marta." The audience would have enjoyed more of his work.—E. D.

Ivie Anderson
Milwaukee Wisconsin

As a blues singer who knows her stuff, Miss Anderson clicks nicely. She sings "I'm a Little Blackbird" and "How Am I Doin'," and comes back for an encore to offer "Minnie the Moocher."

Sophie Tucker Will Have Charge of Night Club Building at the Exposition in 1933; Two Weeks' Booking for Each Star

The Chicago World's Fair in 1933 will open up new fields for stage and screen talent. Sponsors and operators of the forthcoming international exposition have completed plans for a special night club building to be erected and operated on the fair grounds, and Sophie Tucker, now engaged in a 12-week route over Loew time, will be in complete charge of operations, which also will include a dance hall during daytime and early evening.

Stars of Hollywood and of the stage will be booked individually for two week periods each, to appear as entertainers and hostesses, and leading name bands will be signed, also to appear for two weeks. Thirteen bands will be needed to cover the six months' duration of the fair, which opens about May 1, 1933. Each musical unit contracted for will embrace an extra large complement, and will be accompanied by heavy billing.

The night club was voted after considerable internal wrangling among Fair executives, which include leading businessmen of Chicago and thereabouts. Many were against it because it must of necessity stay open until early morning, long after nightly Fair activities are ended. Those in favor of the plan won, however, and architects are now at work on building details.

The final details of Miss Tucker's alignment with the project came this week on the return of Chicago's mayor, Anton Cermak, from a vacation abroad. Actual plans will be worked out soon by William Morris, who will stop off at Chicago, en route to Hollywood, to confer with officials of the exposition.

The location of the night club at the Chicago Fair has not been selected. The committee plans a central spot near administrative headquarters. Picture stars engaged for appearances will be concentrated principally at the afternoon dance functions. Ballyhooing will center about "see your favorite stars in person."

In the meantime Miss Tucker will continue with her Loew engagement.

INSTRUMENTAL

Duke Ellington and Orchestra (13)
Milwaukee Wisconsin

This group of tooters, with the Duke himself at the piano, offer a galaxy of numbers as only Ellington's band can play them. Selections include "Ring Them Bells," "Dina," "Trees," "Black and Tan Fantasy," "Tiger Rag" and "Mood Indigo." The unique presentation drew a big hand.

Connie's Inn Orchestra
Baltimore Hippodrome

Plenty of rhythm, stepping and comedy are offered in an unusual manner after "I've Got Rhythm." Harlan Lattimore sings "If It Ain't Love." The Five Percolators do some fast stepping and some jokes and songs, followed by Mary Dixon (called Sepia Songbird) singing "Everything's Gonna Be Okay" and "You're Drivin' Me Crazy," followed by "Paradise," with Redman playing the clarinet, then three trumpets and three trombones in trios and Lattimore singing. Nicodemus presents his band of comedy and songs and dancing. For encores they give "How Am I Doing," Redman playing the sax and singing.

Bret Wood
Detroit Fisher

Wood is a harmonica player who dresses his act with a droll rustic monologue. As a harmonica player he is the envy of every small boy in the house.

NOVELTY

Edgar Bergen
New Orleans Orpheum

This is a ventriloquist act which is different. It opens with a doctor finding a newsboy (the dummy) asleep on the park bench. A nurse arrives and they both take interest in the dummy, who is ill. Second scene is the operating room with the dummy wisecracking and the nurse looking pretty.

Huber
New Orleans Orpheum

This French-speaking, suave, disciple of magic, supported by four pretty girls, packs almost all the sure-fire, if somewhat old, stunts in about twenty minutes of fast entertainment.

Three White Flashes
Detroit Fisher

Two men and a girl, in gleaming white, offer fast action on roller skates. One of the men plays a violin while being whirled from the other's shoulders. The act is good for a fair round of applause.

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

DANCERS

Gracie Schenck and Co. (4)
New York Palace

This is one of the best opening acts we've ever seen. Two boys and a girl offer acrobatic, adagio tap and hand dancing in rapid succession, followed by a human barrel roll, each in turn earning an enthusiastic response. This trio performs a difficult triple split pyramid while a most effective finale, in which a boy and the girl dive over the piano, proves a sensational finish.—H. P.

Kid Charleston
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Here is a neat little tap dancer. A novelty feature of his offering is a bit of facial maneuvering done to music, which is good for heavy laughs.

Florence and Alvarez
New York Roxy

In the current stage production, "Spanish Fiesta," this dance team presents a colorful and spectacular tango. Their work is superior in its smoothness and grace.—E. D.

Lowe, Bernoff & Wensley
New York Paramount

This adagio team opens with a gracefully executed dance routine, then suddenly turns to a burlesque of this type of dance with falls, knockdowns and ill-timing. This act features plenty of laughs and should prove effective anywhere.—H. P.

Gold and Ray
New York Palace

Imitating a pair of amateur tap dancers, these two boys nervously announce themselves and their talent in a manner which the audience finds amusing. They then proceed to offer a slap-bang-knockabout bit of hokum interspersed with several clever tap routines. Entertaining.—H. P.

Margo
New York Roxy

Miss Margo is a dancer who offers a number of routines in the current "Spanish Fiesta" scene. Miss Margo not only does a Spanish specialty of her own, but effectively leads the Ballet Corps in two most pleasing numbers.—E. D.

Russell Markert's Roxyettes (32)
New York Roxy

The famous Roxyettes are on the stage in two spots this week. First of these is when they are featured in the presentation "Ruffles," in which they do an effective routine while lying on the floor. They are costumed in suits having many colored ruffles, which make a pleasing picture as they work. Their second appearance is in the "Spanish Fiesta" number, and in this they present an outstanding Spanish dance.—E. D.

ACROBATICS

Six Maxellos
San Francisco Warfield

These tumblers have a lively act, mixed with a lot of laughs, since they understand the fine art of comedy. They are a riot when they press into action Jess Stafford, the band leader and master of ceremonies, putting him through a double somersault.

Reopen Theatres For Stage Shows

Stage shows are on their way back as far as San Francisco is concerned, but to make this a reality it has been found necessary to open houses that have been closed much of the time in recent years.

The President theatre has been remodeled by Sam Harris and associates for reopening this month with first-run pictures and elaborate stage revues. The stage company will include a chorus of 20 girls trained by Nell Harding.

E. J. Norman, local theatre man, has taken over the historic Tivoli and will reopen about the middle of October with pictures and vaudeville. The house will be known as the E. J. Norman Theatre.

Across the bay, in Oakland, the Uptown, which recently engaged Del Courtney Collegiate band for Sunday and Monday appearances, is supplementing this with stage acts.

RKO House Resumes Acts

September 23 has been definitely set by RKO for the resumption of vaudeville at the Majestic in San Antonio. On that date the theatre will resume the combination policy which was suspended for a film policy last spring. Publix is watching the San Antonio situation keenly. Should vaudeville go over Publix will meet the competition with big single acts in its Texas theatre.

Roxy Orchestra Back on Air

The 70-piece Roxy Symphony, largest theatre orchestra in the United States, resumed its schedule of WABC-Columbia broadcasts on September 4, after a seven-month absence from the air. The programs originate in the broadcasting studio of the Roxy under the direction of David Ross.

Charles at Boyd Organ

Milton Charles, organist over a long period at the Mastbaum in Philadelphia, has transferred to the Boyd, where he will be the first to play the organ since the house opened, four years ago.

Olsen and Johnson on Stage

Olsen and Johnson, comedy team, have been booked into the Warner Earle theatre, Washington, for the week of September 23.

Orchestra Leader on Air

Ted Fiorito, songwriter-orchestra leader, will direct his band in a half-hour weekly broadcast from San Francisco over the Columbia Broadcasting System every Saturday beginning September 10.

Damrosch to Resume on Air

Walter Damrosch, dean of American music, will resume on October 14, his fifth season of the NBC music appreciation hour.

SONG AND DANCE

Rosita Moreno
New York Paramount

This comely brunette offers a Spanish specialty dance, a pleasing combination of grace and technique, following with a vocal rendition of a flower girl number during which she passes flowers to the audience. Called back. Miss Moreno favors with a clever American tap dance.—H. P.

Georges Carpentier and Girls (5)
Baltimore Century

With a winning personality, charming smile and excellent command of English, Carpentier won audiences here and is backed up excellently by four pretty and talented girls who sing, dance and offer comedy. Carpentier introduces three girls who go into song with him, then some dancing. Then another girl does toe dancing. One of the others presents clog and tap work on steps.

Four Frankenburgs
San Francisco Warfield

There's no doubt about the talent of these youngsters. They go through intricate dance steps seemingly without effort and do a song number or two just to show that their voices are trained as well as their feet.

COMEDY

Si Wills and Joan Davis
New York Palace

Opening with comedy chatter of the "Dumb Dora" type, Miss Davis succeeds in arousing several laughs, after which Si Wills offers a novelty bit on a piccolo. Joan clicks with the old "Stutter Song," followed by a very funny crystal-gazing bit by Wills. Miss Davis proves to be an able acrobat in a one-hand flip finale. Very entertaining.—H. P.

Solly Ward and Company (3)
Baltimore Century

Here is a comedy act with some pathos. Ward and an elderly woman, supposedly his wife, quarrel in broken English, and it's funny. She leaves and in comes a young girl vamp asking for charity for orphans. The elderly woman returns and there's a great misunderstanding over the request for money for children. There's a pathetic song about a lost child, with a laugh at the end.

Three Loose Screws
San Francisco Warfield

This trio seems to have selected an appropriate name, although stove bolts might have been better. Their offering is smutty and fails to get over. It could be cleaned up with little effort.

Named Musical Director

Karl Lambertz has been reappointed musical director of the RKO Majestic, Dallas, for the vaudeville season opening next week. He will be in charge of a 12-piece orchestra.

Ben Bernie on Air

Ben Bernie, orchestra leader, has returned to the air over a National Broadcasting Company-WEAF network, offering programs weekly. The broadcast will come from Chicago.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount), for his first organ concert since his return from his vacation, offers selections from "The Student Prince." Opening with "The Serenade," Crawford follows with other well played renditions of "Deep in My Heart," "The Student's March Song," and a finale of a novelty collegiate patter, that proved highly entertaining. Crawford continues to mean a lot to the audiences of Paramount's "ace" house.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) recently offered a program of old and new popular songs. His selections included "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," "So Ashamed," "Down by the Old Mill Stream," (with signs and pictures flashed on the screen instead of the words), "Masquerade," "Blue Heaven," and a series of tongue twister words to the tune of "You're the One." Al receives fine cooperation from his audience in singing.

WILD OSCAR (New York 175th) presented as his organ novelty, this week, a group of popular songs that as usual had the audience singing. His manner of introducing numbers is distinctly different and is done with sophisticated witticisms and dry humor. Numbers offered were: "Silent Love," "Couldn't Say Goodbye," "Hold My Hand," a clever "lisping" chorus, two choruses of "Here's Hoping," and a final chorus of "Shanty Town," with special lyrics. "Here's Hoping," a new song, got the outstanding plug. The audience sang the first chorus softly but the second chorus was done as lustily as any old favorite.

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State). The popular "boy" organist recently presented an outstanding novelty which he originated and entitled "Summer Symphony." Opening with "In the Good Old Summer Time," Leverenz effectively rendered the following; "Trees," "Blue Skies," "Old Apple Tree," "Lullaby of the Leaves," "With Summer Coming On," and a finale of "Lazy Day," with a "lazy stunt" which included a pedal-solo that won enthusiasm.

MARY DOBBS (Denver Isis) presented a brief but excellently played arrangement of "Canadian Capers," for the first half of the week. Her sense of orchestration and rhythm drew good response, considering the fact that organ solos are not built up but just thrown in between pictures. Her solo the last half of the week was "Dark Eyes." It was played far too loudly. The number is not strong enough to stand alone, but proper registration would have helped.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) uses a "help wanted" plea to invite audience cooperation on this solo, including "One Hour With You," "My Silent Love" and "Lullaby of the Leaves," the latter winning by far the best response. In a novel presentation of "In My Hideaway," in which three sections of the audience clap, sing and whistle, the organ is silenced and the audience carries on with undiminished volume. The closing number is "Let's Have Another Cup Of Coffee."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Harry Engel, Joe Keit and Harry Link have their first number one seller since the realignment of the company. . . . The number is "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby," and the writer is Harry Woods. . . . Number two seller is M. Witmark's "Shanty in Old Shanty Town," written by Little Jack Little, Joe Young and John Siras. . . . Leo Feist's beautiful "Masquerade," written by John Jacob Loeb and Paul Webster, is number three. . . . Incidentally all three of these tunes are so darned close that by the time you read this, either of the other two may be first. . . .

Bernie Pollack, diminutive but plenty energetic all-around music man, is now featured in the Mills Music company. . . . Bernie has had a long and varied experience in the music business and has held executive positions with some of the largest music publishers in the business. . . .

Ada Rives, organist at Loew's State, New Orleans, narrowly escaped drowning in the Boguefalaya river near Covington, La., on her vacation. . . . Miss Rives swam out into an undertow and was sinking for the second time when her husband swam to her rescue and pulled her out.

I have often wondered just what became of the organists who went out of the field. . . Well, I have found out about three of them. . . . Jack Ward, organist in many of the metropolitan theatres, has organized a dance band . . . and the other two, Gray Burt and Bob Roso, have done the same thing. . . .

I have been trying for the past week or so to get in touch with Mitchell Benson, assistant to Louis K. Sidney, of the Loew's circuit . . . and the Loew circuit must be having the same difficulty, because when I last called the Capitol, the operator connected me with the "Lost and Found" department. . . .

Mary Dobbs, organist at the Fox Isis, Denver, has made a record that few, if any, in the country can equal. . . . She has just celebrated her ninth anniversary at the Isis, and if the applause given her at the end of each performance is any criterion, she will be there for many more years. . . .

Don Miller is not at the Michigan in Detroit any longer but within two days he was engaged as staff organist over the Kunsky-Trendle radio station, WXYZ, and is broadcasting from there daily. . . .

Bill Dalton, theatre organist of note in Columbus, Ohio, has been signed to preside at the big, new console in Neth's Grand, that city, beginning September 1. . . . Bill has been featured on the Loew circuit for a number of years in and around Columbus and it is interesting to note it was at the Grand that he started his career several years ago. . . .

ED. DAWSON.

OVERTURES

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra depart from the classics to offer a program of modern rhythm. Included are selections from Ferdie Grofe's "Metropolis," along with much of less worth. The program proves a novelty, but after three years of near-symphonic music it scarcely satisfies. Lovers of jazz should find it entertaining as there is no question about the fine musicianship. Along with the classics has gone the vocal ensemble. May both return soon.

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy) conducted the 70-piece Roxy theatre orchestra in the overture of the opera, "Il Guarany." Ross' superb directing brought forth all the musical ability of this aggregation.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) bids for general approval with a two-part overture opening with a medley of classic Hungarian airs, "Hungarian Sketches," and closing with two modern syncopated scores, "If You Were Only Mine" and "Dinah." Arrangement of the gypsy bit was excellent. The popular numbers were embellished with the crooning of a boyish young artist who was well received.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) offers his overture entitled Rhythmania, made up of a number of popular melodies with the surprise when James Bohn, local singer, arises in a box and sings the refrain in "Martha," theme song of "The Street Singer."

DAVE RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) offers a medley, "Chanson Russe," consisting of the better known Russian folk and classical songs. The opening ensemble has a chorus of "Black Eyes," the orchestra then plays a Russian Dance, the drummer offers an effective tambourine flourish, the violins modulating, following into the chorus of "The Volga Boatman," the brass section joining in at the ninth bar, the violins again taking the lead to finish the number. Rubinoff then features a violin solo of "Two Guitars," from which the entire orchestra modulates into the militaristic air of "1812," for a flare finale.

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) offers the score of "Rio Rita," which is not only a beautiful overture, but also serves to pave the way for the tabloid version coming to this house in a week. Jack doesn't hesitate to announce it either. Bobby Shaw, saxophone player, sings a refrain from "Rio Rita." The entire overture pleased mightily.

JAMES INNES (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin theatre orchestra present selections from "The Desert Song." Included are "The Desert Song," vocal, and "One Alone," by Jimmy on the violin. The offering meets with a happy reception.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher), with an announcement that Von Suppe's Overture to "Poet and Peasant" is most requested in fan mail, offers a standard arrangement of this classic. Benavie seems capable of pleasing with any type of selection, but he seems most at ease with classical music..

RKO Will Book Cherniavsky

Josef Cherniavsky, known as "The Russian Jazz Maestro," and his 160-piece orchestra, who recently headlined for RKO in Cincinnati, will be given an RKO route. The outfit has played 37 weeks in Cincinnati hotels, in addition to a daily broadcast.

FRANKIE: This Fox bunch is turning out the pictures . . . and getting behind them with some swell exploitation, too.

JOHNNIE: Yeah, they certainly gave us a lot to work with on "Congorilla" . . . no wonder the picture cleaned up.

FRANKIE: And don't forget Fox was first in the field with a radio teaser campaign.

JOHNNIE: Then they topped that with the "Chandu" tie up. What a darb. So's the picture. I can't wait till I get my hooks on it . . . one of those that draws the whole family.

FRANKIE: Yep. It's sure a pleasure to work with a crowd that helps you put over your pictures.

IT CAN BE DONE—THUS

FOR a year or more New York's Forty-second street burlesque has been getting hotter and hotter. The most casual observer could have noticed a progressive spreading of the aromas of the art up and down the street, giving what might be called a certain atmosphere to the district and withal contributing very little indeed to the good repute of the amusement industry.

Many months ago various properly interested persons sought to have something done about it. Representatives of religious and civic bodies and a number of business organizations, including the Forty-second Street Property Owners Association, made protests. James F. Geraghty, license commissioner, held hearings early in the summer, and then "reserved decision." To the layman, however, the facts were obvious, also malodorous. That could have been decided in five minutes any evening.

Now, this week, of a bright September Monday, came Mayor McKee with an order to Commissioner Geraghty to revoke the licenses of the chief offending theatres, the Eltinge and the Republic, saying: "New York has no place for the filth those theatres are purveying." Incidentally it was done with no censorious quibbling. "I am not going to allow open filth," he observed, "but there is no attempt on my part to lay down a general standard for the theatre. The standards of the theatre are set by the people themselves."

Briefly, there was obviously something rotten and Mr. McKee did something about it. Once upon a time burlesque promised to clean up from the inside—and did not.

BABY PAP

SOME of the supersensitive sectors of the industry are a bit a-twitter because Mr. Henry James Forman is presenting in McCall's Magazine a series of articles based on a scientific study of the influence of motion picture upon children. There are reasonable grounds for argument here and there among the findings, but the first two of Mr. Forman's carefully written presentations embody no indictment of the motion picture. They do infer, imply and suggest that there is an obligation and a necessity for attention to the screen fare of children by their parents. If parents would accept this proper responsibility and do as much screen shopping for their children as they do in matters of clothing, schooling and diet, there would be much less of the futile but hampering pressures for censorships and various regulations aimed at making the whole motion picture output into baby pap.

Even Castoria, which has the oldest of movie reputations, has decided to advertise again.

THEY "GO WASHINGTON"

AN editorial in the Chicago Tribune, commenting on the success of such books about the national capital as "More Merry-Go-Round,' remarks: "Better Washington correspondents are needed," and continues to observe that "if the people are to get an idea of the gilded life . . . they must seek it outside the average Washington correspondence. . . . Washington newspapermen seldom puncture its pomposities. . . . " Now the fact is that in Hollywood people "go Hollywood" and in Washington they "go Washington." Once again we find our only troubles are with the human race.

PROMISED AND DONE

MR. EDWARD GOLDEN, general sales manager of Monogram Pictures Corporation, takes his pen in hand anent The Herald's recent article on deliveries by major producers, to point with pride to the fact that his concern announced 28 features for the season of 1931-32 and delivered all of them, on schedule. "Monogram Pictures," he observes, "have every right to be classed among the majors." This performance, we should say, entitles them to be colonels.

MR. LASKY CONTINUES

THERE'S a touch of the thrill of romance in the announcement that Mr. Jesse Lasky, now after a period of some uncertainty, is to set out again on a career of independent production, for those of us who remember his gala adventures of years ago, when Cecil DeMille wired to him back in New York, "We have rented a barn in Hollywood." Faith and hope were high then. They made "The Squaw Man" with Dustin Farnum and presently the name of Lasky was blazoned around the world. For two full decades it has been on the screen. It is pleasant that it is to survive the mutations of today. The adventuring Mr. Lasky once sought gold at Nome but he found it in his native California.

FROM ILLINOIS

ONCE in a while a slogan appears to say something. Just at the moment we are charmed with the assertion of the Continental Illinios Bank and Trust Company that "The rhythm of business gives promise for tomorrow." It pictorially suggests the incontrovertible fact that the graph of American business down the decades has just as many peaks as valleys. Business has not only rhythm but also what the motion picture makers were delighted to call "tempo" about the time they discovered "montage." Incidentally our tempo does appear to be quickening, too.

"SPECIAL FILMS FOR THE YOUNGSTERS"

—THE PIONEER PRESS OF ST. PAUL, MINN.

EVIDENCE

Pictures produced with the juvenile audience directly in mind will provide the solution of a large problem in entertainment, thinks an editorial writer in the PIONEER PRESS of ST. PAUL in MINNESOTA, who refers to the attendance of 2,000 children at a Saturday showing and adds this:

> The answer to the dilemma certainly cannot be a censorship of motion pictures that will bring all screen entertainment down to the level of children. Many a theatre production, not only acceptable but thoroughly worthwhile for adults, would lose an audience through criticism on such a basis. The solution is entertainment especially produced for the youngsters. . . .

FORTUNATELY

Seeing a wholesome effect in Americans' insistence that stars speak correct English, the MORNING POST of LONDON in ENGLAND, quoted by the Kansas City Star, comments as follows on the general aspect of dialect in pictures:

> . . . There were not lacking cynics who prophesied that the whole world would be speaking the dialect of Hollywood within a generation.
> Fortunately, the Americans themselves have decided that the Hollywood dialect is not good enough, and are insisting that "movie stars" must talk correct English.
> This is all very encouraging both for the British industry and for British actors and actresses; but it must be extremely annoying to the irreconciliable nationalist, in southern Ireland or South Africa for example, who is straining every nerve to resuscitate an indigenous language.

MUSIC

A writer in the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR sees a wholesome development in an announcement that "music is to be used as background to the action of future Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer films," and says:

> This is a welcome sign of a growing freedom in picture making from some rather narrow notions as to screen "naturalism." . . . Certainly music from an unidentified source is as acceptable a convention as the transportation of the spectators into physically impossible places by way of the camera lens. . . .
> Objections to music during talking sequences of films are well taken, we believe. . . . Motion to music, yes. Movement while talking, yes. But all three together, continuously, is simply dizzying.

GOING NATIVE

The day of "pink tea fiction" is off the horizon and the Westerns are back in the trend of reading, says the NEWS of CLEVELAND in OHIO, quoting Frederic Melcher on a subject pertinent to the matters of the motion picture:

> Back to the "westerns" is the trend in reading, according to Frederic Melcher, an authority on books. . . .
> Maybe America is "going native," or maybe the swing toward stirring tales of the cattle country is merely the reaction from too many gang stories, too much sophisticated slaughter. The reading public grows tired of one kind of mental pabulum continually. . . . The garish lights of modern speakeasies, the blare of motor horns could well be supplanted for a while by soft moonlight over western plains, by the lowing of western herds. At any rate, they are. . . .
> The reading mind is taking pretty strong stuff these days.

UNDERRATING

An editorial writer of the TIMES-PICAYUNE at NEW ORLEANS in LOUISIANA thinks the askance with which exhibitors view much continental product may be attributable to their "lack of faith in the public's intelligence," and points to recent successes:

> We are missing a good many superb movies in the United States that are being denied us, we greatly fear, merely because the film exhibitors lack faith in the public's intelligence. The pictures we have in mind . . . are of French, German or Russian speech. . . .
> Take, for example, the German film "Kameradschaft" ("Comradeship"). . . . Chosen for a special midnight matinee in London . . . English subtitles were superimposed and . . . the success was tremendous. . . . From that tentative midnight presentation a demand for the film has literally swept the country. . . .
> So the success of "Kameradschaft" has been such that other great Continental films are to follow, the next being an English language version of Fritz Lang's talkie, "M."

CRIME FILMS

There seems to be considerable difference of opinion among attorneys of OHIO as to the effect of socalled crime pictures upon the popular mind, judging from the following item in the TIMES of AKRON:

> Akron attorneys sitting as jurors on the merit or demerit of criminal trial motion pictures failed to agree.
> There were 36 attorneys who believe pictures of this type cause disrespect for the courts and bring the legal profession into disrepute.
> But 32 others dissent, placing a stamp of approval on the pictures. . . .

PREJUDICES

Noting that Ethel Barrymore and George M. Cohan had been "added to the list of those (from the stage) who have surrendered to the inducements of big salaries (on the screen), contracts for definite periods with no hazards as to the length of the run, and no risk of having to go on the road," the NEWS of SAN FRANCISCO in CALIFORNIA says editorially:

> One by one, the lure of Hollywood is overcoming the prejudices of actors who once curled their lips when the movies were mentioned. . . . It has been proved since the coming of the talkies that some actors can work before the microphone without sinning against the art of the theatre.

MPTOA JOINS ALLIED IN DRIVE FOR FEDERAL FILM REGULATION

Leaders of Rival National Groups Organize for Aggressive Move to Achieve Reforms for the Theatres

Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America buried the hatchet this week at a dramatic harmony conference in Chicago, and as a result both agreed on a draft of a measure for federal regulation of the motion picture industry in behalf of the exhibitor.

Al Steffes, president of Allied, and Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, led an executive committee into a "neutral" suite in the Congress hotel to talk with M. A. Lightman and other MPTOA leaders on unification of the widely divergent policies and platforms of each, and when the conference adjourned late Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Lightman's organization of affiliated and unaffiliated theatre owners had substituted its heretofore highly conservative policy for the more aggressive platform of federal regulation for which Allied and its independent exhibitor membership have been campaigning.

Mr. Steffes told Chicago newspaper reporters that the leaders of both organizations were speaking for 10,000 theatres and that the joint executive committee represented 90 per cent of the independent houses of the country.

On September 29 a joint legislative and contract committee will meet in Washington—the home of Allied's headquarters—to formulate ways and means for carrying on the proposed campaign for passage of a federal bill at the next Congressional session. Mr. Myers, Mr. Steffes and Mr. Lightman are members of the committee, which also includes H. M. Richey, Ed Levy, Fred Wehrenberg, Col. H. A. Cole, Nathan Yamins, George Aarons, Sidney E. Samuelson, Fred S. Meyer and one other to be named. This committee also was instructed to work for the passage of state legislation in the furtherance of the reforms to which the conference is committed, such legislation to be drafted by the committee for submission later to the joint interests.

Exclusive selling policies of distributors and alleged excessive protection and unfair exhibition contracts were the outstanding issues of the meeting, which marked the first time that the two organizations got together publicly on any ground. The growing exclusive movement would be curbed and outlawed by the bill which the conference will sponsor, and, like the measure introduced by Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart at the last session of Congress, it would also regulate compulsory block booking under certain conditions, and provide for an amendment to the Clayton anti-monopoly act to include copyrighted motion pictures in its specific relation to leasing or licensing.

Both parties agreed to withhold announcements from the trade during the early sessions, but at the conclusion of the conference, a joint statement was issued over the signatures of Mr. Lightman and Mr. Steffes. "Both realized the seriousness of the situation," it said, "and the vital necessity for prompt and effective action if the interests of theatre owners were to be protected.

"With the executive committees of both organizations committed to an aggressive campaign to carry out the program decided upon, further cooperation between the two organizations will undoubtedly come," the statement continued, thereby verifying the popular impression that what virtually amounted to a "mental" merger of Allied and MPTOA was accomplished at Chicago. Previous to the conference there had been reports of both executive groups intending to discuss the possibilities of a physical

THE CHICAGO PLAN

The plan of action jointly agreed upon by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the Allied States Exhibitors' Association at the Chicago conference represents a development of major significance to the whole industry.

The plan in substance is an appeal to the Government to come into the motion picture business as an arbiter over trade practices. As such it aims for a further extension of governmental activity in business—something which is undesirable, both to the best interests of the Government and to the best interests of business.

The joint plan closely resembles the effort which the Allied Association has been conducting individually for some time and which found expression in the Brookhart Bill which was introduced in the past session of Congress. Previously the MPTOA did not cooperate in the Allied effort and did not support the Brookhart Bill. The fact that the two groups of organized exhibitors have come together on a plan of action is important and the fact that the plan of action which has been agreed upon contemplates a line of procedure similar to that provided for in the Brookhart Bill is still more important.

While any and every effort calculated to extend the scope of governmental activity in business must, especially under existing conditions, be viewed with sharp apprehension, it cannot be denied that every person when confronted with a sufficiently serious emergency has the right to avail himself of every legal and proper means for the protection of his interests.

The Chicago conference describes its plan as an effort "of last resort." If that is in fact the state of affairs which confronts the exhibition interests represented in the conference, then it cannot be denied that they are within their rights in seeking relief along the lines decided upon.

There then remains a question of fact to be determined—and this question revolves around the point whether things have so far fallen out of joint in this industry that it is no longer possible for this business to settle its own affairs without resort to the wholly undesirable extremity of calling in what amounts to the Government's police powers.

We are reluctant to acknowledge that any such situation has been arrived at. Governmental interference with the business of motion pictures would be expensive and troublesome. It would be bound to involve the industry in the turmoil of politics. It would amount to a dismal confession to the world that we cannot properly attend to our own business.

We earnestly trust that the whole industry may immediately awaken to the seriousness of the situation into which we are driving, as reflected in the Chicago conference developments, and that prompt, thorough and effective steps shall be taken to put our house in order so that the threat of governmental interference will be once and for all put away.

DEMAND LIMITATION OF BLOCK SALES

Draft of the Federal Measure Proposed by Allied-MPTOA

Meeting in joint conference at the Congress hotel in Chicago, executive committees of Allied States Association and the MPTOA this week agreed to sponsor federal regulation of the motion picture industry. The complete text of a draft of a bill to be recommended to Congress at the next session follows:

To prevent the obstruction of and burdens upon the interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion picture films and to prevent restraint on free competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of copyrighted motion picture films (A) by prohibiting contracts limiting the run of a particular picture to a single theatre in any competitive area, (B) by prohibiting the compulsory block booking of copyrighted motion picture films unless the theatre operator is given the right to cancel out of each block pictures unsuitable for showing in his theatre, up to a certain maximum, (C) by making unlawful and providing a remedy for unreasonable and discriminatory protection in favor of certain theatres over others, and, (D) by amending Section Two of the Clayton Act to license agreements and leases of commodities as well as sales in interstate commerce:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Section One—From and after the approval of this Act it shall be unlawful for any producer or distributor of copyrighted motion picture films engaged in transporting, leasing or licensing such films in the current of interstate trade and commerce to lease, license or sell such motion picture films to the owner or operator of any motion picture theatre, or theatres, upon the condition, understanding or agreement, express or implied, that such motion picture films shall not be leased, licensed or sold to any other motion picture theatre owner or operator for exhibition in any competitive area.

"Unreasonable" Zoning Barred

Section Two—Six months after the date of the approval of this Act it shall be unlawful for any producer or distributor of copyrighted motion picture films, engaged in transporting, leasing or licensing such films in the current or interstate trade and commerce, and having and offering for lease or license blocks or groups of films containing five or more photoplays, to insist that a licensee, or lessee, shall take all, or a designated number of such photoplays out of the total number offered, in order to obtain the ones which the lessee or licensee desires, or to refuse to lease or license such lesser number of photoplays, out of the total number offered, as the lessee or licensee desired, provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any producer or distributor of copyrighted motion picture films from leasing or licensing the same in groups of five or more if, in the contract of lease or license, the lessee or licensee is given the right in his discretion, and without payment therefore, to cancel not less than twenty per centum of the pictures so leased or licensed after the same have been released and their suitability for showing in the theatre of the lessee or licensee has been determined. The purpose and intention of this Section is to make unlawful the practice of block booking, as known and practiced in the motion picture industry, and to confer on the operators of motion picture theatres the right to lease and exhibit only such motion pictures as in their judgment will be acceptable to their patrons.

Section Three—Six months after the date of the approval of this Act, it shall be unlawful for two or more producers or distributors of copyrighted motion picture films in the current of interstate trade and commerce, acting jointly or in concert with one another, or with any theatre or chain of theatres, or for any producer or distributor of such motion pictures, by means of any contract or arrangement with any motion picture theatre operator, to agree upon or observe any plan or schedule of zoning or protection which results in withholding such copyrighted motion picture films for any unreasonable time from any theatre or class of theatres after the same have been exhibited in any other theatre, or class of theatres, or to take an unfair or unreasonable competitive advantage over any other theatre, or class of theatres, not warranted by competitive conditions in the competitive area where such theatres are located, or to subject any theatre or class of theatres to an unfair disadvantage or unjust discrimination in the matter of obtaining copyrighted motion picture films in interstate trade and commerce.

Section Four. Administration of Sections One, Two and Three of this Act is vested in the Federal Trade Commission, which is hereby authorized and empowered to make suitable rules and regulations to conduct investigations and to hold hearings and to enter orders for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of those Sections. Whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that Section One has been or is being violated, it shall proceed in the manner provided in Section Five of the Federal Trade Commission Act for preventing the use of unfair methods of competition. Disagreements between the producers and distributors of copyrighted motion picture films on the one hand, and the operators of motion picture theatres on the other hand, concerning the proportionate part of the total rental, asked for a block or group of pictures, which shall be demanded and paid for such lesser number as the theatre operator may elect to take, in case the producer or distributor does not choose to grant the cancellation privilege described in Section Two, shall be settled by the Federal Trade Commission after hearing. Disputes arising between the producers and (or) distributors of copyrighted motion picture films on the one hand, and any theatre or class of theatres on the other, or between different classes of theatres, regarding the reasonableness of the protection given any theatre, or class of theatres, in the matter of withholding pictures from the subsequent run houses, and all complaints of unfair, unreasonable or discriminatory protection made unlawful by Section Three, shall also be settled by the Commission. The procedure of the Commission in the settlement of disputes under Sections Two and Three hereof shall conform as nearly as may be to that prescribed in Section Five of the Federal Trade Commission Act and, except as herein otherwise provided, the orders of the Commission may be contested and (or) enforced as provided therein. Any order entered by the Commission in settlement of a controversy or dispute, arising under Section Two or Three of this Act, shall become immediately effective and binding on the parties. In case of an appeal to the courts, such order shall remain in effect unless and until the party prosecuting such appeal shall give bond in such amount and with such security as the Commission shall provide to act as a supersedeas.

Price Discrimination Attacked

Section Five—That Section Two of the Clayton Act be and it is hereby amended to read as follows: "Section Two—That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price rentals or royalties between different purchasers, lessees or licenses of commodities, whether patented or unpatented, copyrighted or uncopyrighted, which commodities are sold, leased, or licensed for use, consumption, resale or exhibition within the United States, or any territory or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price rentals or royalties between purchasers, lessees and licensees of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, leased or licensed, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling, leasing, or transportation or discrimination in price, rental or royalty in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition, and provided, further, that nothing herein contained shall prevent persons, engaged in selling, leasing and licensing goods, wares or merchandise in commerce, from selecting their own customers; lessees and licensees in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade."

Section Six—That this Act shall be included in the definition of antitrust laws contained in the Clayton Act and any person, firm or corporation, injured in his or its business by any violation of this Act, shall have and enjoy all of the rights and remedies conferred by said Clayton Act on persons, firms or corporations injured in their business by violations of the anti-trust laws.

Church Official Advocates More Stringent Censorship

Declaring that motion pictures are responsible for at least part of the crime in this country, because they exert a greater influence on children than does the church, Dr. B. F. Lamb, secretary of the Ohio Council of Churches, in addressing the Northeast Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Worcester, Ohio, last week, decried the existence of excessive drinking scenes shown in pictures, as well as scenes depicting crime and sex. He advocated more stringent censorship of pictures.

Dr. Lamb said: "The average motion picture has many things tending to the wrong side of character building. We cannot enforce the prohibition laws as long as pictures show numberless scenes of drinking parties. There are, also, too many pictures showing crime and containing sex problems. The censorship board of Ohio does cut out some scenes, but it certainly does not do enough of this sort of thing."

ATTACK ZONING AND EXCLUSIVE RUN

MASS MEETING

What would be probably the largest and most representative mass meeting of the country's exhibitors ever held, looms in the near future. Out of it may develop a new national exhibitor organization. The problems of exhibitors again would come up for serious discussion and observers at the Allied-MPTOA conference pointed out that such a meeting, which would solidify the nation's exhibitors, is a logical development to come from the action taken at the joint session this week.

The mass meeting, it is felt, would tend to cement exhibitor interests in one great national organization. Included in the possible results of such a meeting would be the construction of a complete program of action on every exhibitor grievance and the launching of a determined fight for alleviation through legislative and other channels.

Missouri Owners Plan Court Fight

The Independent Theatre Owners Association of Greater Kansas City plan to file charges of conspiracy in restraint of trade against Fox Midwest Theatres and principal distributors as a result of distributors' insistence on protection in favor of Fox neighborhoods over competitive independents.

Members of the ITOA are reported to have contributed or pledged $3,000 to finance the proposed action.

Jay Means, president, said the officers probably will make a decision within a few days. It is expected a complaint will be filed with the government. While protection is the chief point, other practices in restraint of trade will be alleged, according to the attorneys. An inquiry into the policy of exclusive runs at Loew's Midland will be requested, it is said.

A suit against two distributors and possibly a theatre circuit also is contemplated by Nugent J. Flynn, operator of the Wonderland in Kansas City. Mr. Flynn, who, with his brother, the late William Flynn, Sr., operated the old Globe, charges Fox and Metro refuse to sell him product. The Wonderland is a downtown double bill "grind" house charging 15 cents adult admission.

Philadelphia Plans Tax

Philadelphia theatre owners are vehemently protesting the proposal of the city council to levy an admission tax of five cents on admissions between 26 cents and 99 cents and five per cent on higher prices. The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware protested that the tax would result in the closing of many of the smaller houses in the city.

Predicts Trade Conference To Seek Solution of Problems

merger, but leaders of each denied that such a move was contemplated.

Continuing, the joint statement said: "It was apparent from the start that exclusive selling, excessive protection and unfair contracts were to be the outstanding issues and these have been met in the most effective manner the conference could devise. On the standing committees will fall the burden of carrying out the plans for an aggressive campaign to insure the success of these necessary reforms and in such a campaign we feel we have the backing of every thinking theatre owner.

"The bill as drafted is more complete than former proposed measures, covering exclusive selling, and is, in the opinion of the conference, the only weapon at hand to combat the evils that, if allowed to continue, will close thousands of theatres."

Surprise to Executives

News of the proposed campaign for federal legislation was received with surprise by executives in New York, although practically all refused to discuss the situation or to predict the possible outcome. One official, however, who has been importantly identified with exhibitor-distributor discussions in the past, said that the action taken by Allied and MPTOA in Chicago undoubtedly would result in a trade conference at which attempts will be made to work out a solution to the problems complained of by exhibitors.

"I believe that the two national exhibitor groups will seek federal intervention only as a last resort," he said. "The industry still has two months to adjust its difficulties before Congress convenes."

As anticipated, the current tense situation regarding a standard contract was taken under advisement by the joint interests which will set about to draft a new agreement. At the conclusion of the session on contracts, the committees adopted the following resolution:

> "Whereas the two committees representing the Allied States Association and the MPTOA, respectively, agree that the use of a standard form of exhibition contract is a desirable thing for the orderly conduct of the motion picture business,
> "Be it resolved that the respective presidents of the two aforesaid organizations appoint a committee of five each and that these shall constitute a committee empowered to draft a fair and workable standard exhibition contract and to submit such proposed contract to the boards of directors of the respective organizations for approval. After their ratification by said boards, this committee shall be empowered to forward said contract to every distributor of motion pictures, with a request that it be used in the contractual relations between them and the members of said organizations or such other theatre owners who may desire it.
> "Be it further resolved that to insure proper interpretation of necessary amendments to said contract from time to time said committee of ten remain a standing committee. But in case of a disagreement with the distributors' committee, the committee of ten be empowered to select one man to represent it for one year in arbitration of these disputed points and that the distributors be asked to appoint one and the two select a third and the decision of these three be final and binding on all parties. In case of a disagreement, the selection of the third man is to be made by the then governor.

It appeared that shyness pervaded the immediate atmosphere when the leaders first met on Monday, but this situation soon gave way to one of friendliness and the groups launched into heavy discussion with "all cards on the table." By the time adjournment rolled around late Tuesday, after an all-night session Monday, members were joking with one another freely. Asked if Allied and MPTOA had any remaining differences, Mr. Myers remarked, "I don't know of any." Everyone was virtually exhausted after the lengthy session. Mr. Lightman acted as chairman and Mr. Richey was secretary.

It was reported that Allied went into the conference determined to obtain a commitment from the MPTOA that it would support anything agreed upon. In any event, complete harmony prevailed and Mr. Myers characterized the get-together as one marked "by the utmost good feeling" and said there was a "desire to accomplish something tangible for independent theatre owners."

Steffes Arraigns "Exclusives"

Chicago reporters and news writers for press syndicates stormed the doors of the conference suite, and Mr. Steffes obliged with the following statement:

"The public is vitally affected by this new sales policy of the movie producers. Briefly, the 'exclusive selling' plan limits the showing of the best pictures to one theatre in each town, the theatre charging the highest prices of admission. Neighborhood theatres, or 'repeat runs,' as they are called in the trade, which have hitherto been permitted to buy these same pictures for showing several weeks after the first run at lower admission prices, will now be denied the right to buy them at any time or any price.

"This plan aims to take the movies from the masses and to make them a class entertainment. The past loyalty of the millions of movie goers in popularizing by their support the stars and directors of today is to be completely ignored. If the exclusive selling plan is put in operation, those patrons who now wait until the better class of pictures come to their neighborhood theatres at admission prices within their reach, will be obliged to journey with their families downtown and pay the higher admission prices charged there. We believe that when the public learns the extent and purposes of the plan to deprive them of their favorite stars and pictures at the prices they are now paying, the movie goers will rise up against the producers and the first run theatres that are sponsoring the plan."

The exclusive selling plan has thus far

SEIZURE LAW BRIDLES VERA CRUZ EXHIBITORS

Mexico City Papers Protest Measure Giving Commonwealths Right to Confiscate Property; Theatres Puzzled

by JAMES LOCKHART

Mexico City Correspondent

Exhibitors and distributors in Mexico oftimes find themselves confronted with queer problems and in strange predicaments. But the biggest and most perplexing of these tangled circumstances that ever has faced the industry in this country is the wild-eyed expropriation law approved by the Vera Cruz state legislature. This measure is even more red than is the radical similar measure that Hidalgo state has enacted. Those of the industry whose interests are in the former state, which was once the world's greatest silver production center, are confronted with a difficult enough situation, but their brethren of Vera Cruz find themselves in a veritable quandary.

Subject to Confiscation

This legislation practically amounts to the commonwealths giving themselves the right to seize all property, real and personal, present and future, that exists in their domain. And the motion picture industry in these territories is right in the path of these mad measures. Trouble aplenty seems to be in store for exhibitors and distributors doing business in Vera Cruz state, as may be judged from the following highlights of the commonwealth's expropriation law:

All industrial, commercial and agricultural enterprises are subject to confiscation when they suspend activities or go into bankruptcy and if the proprietors cannot state in their defense the origin of these things; if working staffs and salaries are reduced; in case of accidents due to the negligence of the proprietors; if the enterprises' operation is unprofitable because of faulty use of raw materials, maladministration, or faulty installations which the proprietors don't want to remedy with modern technical equipment, and if systematic violations of the labor law necessitate the frequent intervention of the arbitration boards.

Attacked in Editorials

These laws have provoked general disgust throughout Mexico. They have had a highly unfavorable reaction for Mexican commerce and have resulted in the dollars' value soaring to 3.75 to one against the peso, when the normal ratio is near two to one, on the Mexico City market, and have prompted many firms in the United States to adopt a strictly cash policy toward customers in Mexico who up to now enjoyed abundant credit. Americans who have resided long in Mexico, and study closely economic political developments in the country, point out that such crazy legislation has found favor in only two of the 28 states that form this republic, and that these radical commonwealths, while of considerable importance some time ago, now are of relatively little importance in Mexico's economic and political picture. However, these measures are presenting an awkward situation to exhibitors and distributors in Hidalgo and Vera Cruz states.

The Vera Cruz law has been attacked bitterly in editorials published by all leading Mexico City newspapers. El Nacional, organ of the National Revolutionary Party, which dominates the federal government, says the party cannot support such a law.

MR. MYERS EVIDENCES OPTIMISM OVER FUTURE

Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied States Association and general counsel, said that the joint conference of Allied and the MPTOA was "characterized by the utmost good feeling and desire to accomplish something tangible for independent theatre owners. Unity of thought, resulting in unanimous agreement on every measure, augurs well for the future of organization work. MPTOA should not be charged with abrupt reversal of policy. The decision to support legislation as a final resort was the evolution of thought born of experience reached only after painstaking consideration. Their good faith and fearlessness in facing the issue must be respected. A joint legislative committee will meet in Washington on the 29th to plan for waging an aggressive campaign."

Columbia's Year Net Is $574,292

Columbia Pictures Corporation reports for the 52 weeks (fiscal year) ended June 25, 1932, net income of $574,292 after all charges and taxes, equal after preferred dividends to $3.09 a share on the 167,933 shares of no par common stock outstanding. This compares with $560,869 in the fiscal year ended June 27, 1931, equal to $2.99 a common share on the basis of present common capitalization and to $3.09 a share on the smaller number of common shares actually outstanding at that time.

The consolidated balance sheet as of June 25, 1932, shows total current assets of $4,340,129, against which here were total current liabilities of $1,145,669, leaving net working capital of $3,194,460. Cash aggregated $954,831 on June 25, including $350,000 United States Treasury certificates. The company had no bank loans outstanding at the end of its fiscal year, the report stated.

Propose Taxes On "Exclusives"

been introduced in scores of cities by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists and Paramount-Publix. Among the towns already affected are Kansas City, Wilmington, Waterbury, Hartford and Williamsport, Pa.

The joint conference adoped a threefold plan to combat the spread of exclusive sales:

First: The drafting of a measure to be introduced in Congress which calls for the outlawing of exclusives and permits the exhibitor to cancel such objectionable pictures in his block buying contract as are salacious, or immoral, and therefore unsuited for his patrons.

Second: The sponsoring of state laws taxing theatres showing "exclusive pictures" on the grounds that the State will be deprived of revenue through the closing of the smaller theatres thus deprived of desirable pictures.

Third: An appeal to the public on the screens and in the newspapers to support the stand of the independent theatre owner and "oppose the attempt of a few producers and circuit theatres to raise admission prices."

Four major problems were outlined by Mr. Myers of Allied in an opening address in which he said he appeared hopeful that constructive cooperation between the two groups would result in their satisfactory solution. Mr. Myers urged the meeting to give these four questions immediate attention and suggested that a satisfactory agreement would leave "time to consider less important matters at future meetings."

Four Issues Raised

The four questions which he suggested be given consideration are: block booking; an industry conference to draft a new uniform contract; definition of a common policy in opposition to exclusive runs, and establishment of a permanent industry conference board to arbitrate all serious differences within the various branches.

Among those in attendance at the two-day session were: Mr. Lightman, David Barrist, Fred Wehrenberg, Jack Miller, Fred S. Meyer, K. B. Fishman, E. J. Levy and E. Van Hyning, representing MPTOA; and Mr. Steffes, Mr. Myers, H. M. Richey, Sidney Samuelson, Col. H. A. Cole, Aaron Saperstein and B. Benfield, representing Allied. B. K. Fischer, George Fischer, A. C. Gutenberg, all of Milwaukee and members of the MPTOA, attended in unofficial capacities.

In the meantime, and apart from the Chicago conference, Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, headed by Sidney E. Samuelson, this week announced a protest meeting, to be held soon in New York, which will be aimed principally against alleged high percentages. Exhibitors of the metropolitan area will be invited.

In announcing the meeting, Julius Charnow, vice president of the unit, issued a statement on Monday to the effect that distributors "either want to put the small man out of business or they think the independents are robbing them."

Would Settle Cagney Dispute

Through the conciliation machinery of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, negotiations were launched in Hollywood this week for a settlement of the contractual dispute between Warner and James Cagney, player.

LASKY RETURNS TO INDEPENDENT FIELD

Own Unit's Productions May Be Marketed by Fox; Terminates Paramount Association That Began With 1916 Merger

Jesse L. Lasky terminated his association with Paramount Publix Corporation last Thursday and returned to the field of independent production. He will assume leadership of his own unit, Jesse L. Lasky Productions, Inc., releasing through a large distributor. Financial arrangements are understood to have been completed.

There is a strong possibility that Mr. Lasky's feature pictures will be marketed by Fox Film, tentative discussions already having been held with Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, and with Winfield Sheehan, in charge of production at Movietone City. Mr. Kent and Mr. Lasky were executive associates in the Paramount companies for many years. In any event, Mr. Lasky said he will have no announcement to make regarding his future affiliation until the end of the week. He said he has several deals under advisement.

Late in April Mr. Lasky announced he had been asked by Paramount to take a three-months' leave of absence as first vice-president and one of its pioneer operators. At that time he fixed the expiration date of his contract as Dec. 31, 1934. On May 17 he was retired from the vice-presidency and since then it has been generally understood that Mr. Lasky had been discussing with executives of the corporation the status of his contractual relations. Last Thursday in Hollywood he announced that "because of Paramount's breach of contract with me, I have felt it necessary to sever relations with the company."

Contract Remains Unsettled

Mr. Lasky's contract remains unsettled, and Lloyd Wright, his attorney, indicated it will be at least ten days before action on Mr. Lasky's part will be determined. Inference was made that a suit is in preparation, but no specifications of the case were divulged.

Mr. Lasky expressed regret over ending a long and intimate association with Adolph Zukor, president, and pleasant business relations with Sam Katz, executive vice-president of Paramount. He said: "To every member of the Paramount Publix Corporation; to the fellow workers of my 20 years in the motion picture industry; to my friends among exhibitors, distributors, producers, actors, directors, writers, and every other branch, and to my friends of the press, I wish to extend my sincere thanks and grateful appreciation for the fine loyalty, friendship and support that have kept me supplied with the inspiration so necessary to progress. Termination of my affiliation with Paramount Publix Corporation enables me to fulfill my ambition to return to the field in which I started—independent production."

The announcement which marked the separation of two of the oldest executives of the industry, Mr. Lasky and Mr. Zukor, was followed by a statement from Mr. Lasky which said:

"The hope of the picture business today rests in important contributions from independent producers as well as major studios. I am concentrating on a small number of productions and I will be unhampered by certain restrictions which inevitably affect large scale organizations. The independent has unlimited scope to instill into his pictures those qualities of showmanship, timeliness, daring and originality which the public demands today.

"When theatres will receive productions of this nature from independents, plus a high quality of standard pictures from major studios, prosperity will return to the box office."

Born in San Francisco, Mr. Lasky was one of the first to reach Alaska at the time of the earliest gold rush, this after a brief reportorial experience on San Francisco newspapers. Not all the prospectors were successful and Mr. Lasky returned from Nome to become a musician, subsequently leading the Royal Hawaiian Band of Honolulu. He turned to vaudeville on the West Coast and presented a number of important musical acts in association with the late Henry R. Harris.

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, of which he was president, was organized by him in association with Samuel Goldwyn and Cecil B. DeMille. The company started in business in January, 1914, and successfully produced many of the Belasco dramas, among them "Rose of the Rancho," "Girl of the Golden West," "Warrens of Virginia," "Governor's Lady," "The Woman." Under the Lasky-Goldwyn-DeMille banner appeared Edward Abeles, Edmund Breese, Thomas Ross, Blanche Sweet, Dustin Farnum, Max Figman, Robert Edeson, H. B. Warner, Theodore Roberts, Edith Taliaferro, Wallace Fedinger, Edith Wynne Mattison, Victor Moore, Mabel Van Beuren, Ina Claire, Geraldine Farrar, Laura Hope Crews, House Peters, Fannie Ward and other stellar lights of those days.

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was combined with Famous Players Film Company in June, 1916, and Mr. Lasky was made vice-president and Mr. Zukor president. Mr. Lasky concentrated on production.

30 Floats in Parade At Hollywood Pageant

What is expected to be Hollywood's "greatest show" is scheduled for Saturday night when the motion picture electrical parade and sport pageant will be held at the Olympic Stadium. Jack L. Warner is director general. Picture companies have entered 30 floats.

Conrad Nagel will be master of ceremonies; Joe E. Brown, grand marshal of the parade. Sports events and drills will be described by Will Rogers.

Joint beneficiaries of the parade and pageant are the Motion Picture Relief Fund and the Marion Davies Foundation.

Publix, Dubinsky Dissolve Circuit

The circuit of Publix-Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, in Kansas and Missouri, has been dissolved, and the properties have been returned to their respective interests, which hereafter will operate separately. Differences had reached a litigation stage when Ed Dubinsky was called to New York last week to discuss the situation with Publix officials. Publix, in New York, announced:

"Ed Dubinsky and Paramount Publix Corporation announce that they have agreed upon an amicable and satisfactory settlement of the differences existing between them relating to the affairs of Publix-Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, Inc. For the best interests of the respective parties they have agreed to dissolve Publix-Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, Inc., and, effective forthwith, to return the Newman and Royal theatres in Kansas City, Mo.; the Paramount in Joplin, Mo.; Paramount in Springfield, Mo., and Paramount in Kansas City, Kan., to the subsidiaries of Paramount formerly controlling the same, and to return to Mr. Ed Dubinsky the Liberty and Regent theatres in Kansas City, Mo., and the theatres in Leavenworth, Kan.; Jefferson City, Mo., and Fulton, Mo., which were operated by Dubinsky Brothers before the formation of Publix-Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, Inc., and turn over to Mr. Dubinsky the various theatres in St. Joseph, Mo. Contracts are being entered into for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in Dubinsky theatres.

"The settlement carries with it the termination of the litigation affecting Publix-Dubinsky Brothers Theatres, Inc., which was instituted as the result of internal differences between the parties arising out of the construction and interpretation of the contracts between the parties which then appeared to be impossible of speedy and amicable disposition.

"No question of the efficiency or the integrity of Mr. Ed Dubinsky and his brothers in the management and operation of the theatres of the company has at any time existed between the parties, Paramount Publix Corporation expressing high appreciation of their abilities."

STEFFES IS SUING DISTRIBUTORS OVER ZONING AND PROTECTION

Allied States President, in U. S. Court Action Filed as Theatre Owner, Charges Monopoly and Unfair Privileges to Publix

Publix Northwest Theatre Corporation, a group of distributors and the Film Board of Trade are named defendants in a zoning, protection and anti-trust suit filed in U. S. district court at Minneapolis, by W. A. ("Al") Steffes, president of Allied States Association and a theatre owner of Minneapolis.

National Allied headquarters at Washington have dispatched a special communication concerning the action to all members, and Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and Allied's general counsel, has been enlisted to assist in prosecution of the case.

The suit was filed by the People's Theatre Company, operating the Paradise in Minneapolis, and also names Paramount Publix Corporation, First National Pictures Distributing Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal, United Artists, Fox Film, RKO-Pathe, RKO Distributing Corporation, Vitaphone and Columbia, and alleges that the defendants are engaged in a combination and conspiracy in violation of the Sherman law to create and establish in the defendant Publix Northwest circuit a monopoly in Minnesota, the Dakotas and western Wisconsin, and to fix, regulate and control admission prices in that territory.

Like its predecessors, the Youngclaus suit and other zoning and protection cases which were subjects of federal litigation, the action filed by Mr. Steffes is expected to be a long-drawn out affair, taking months before a decision is made by the court. In the current situation the means alleged to have been employed in carrying out the combination and conspiracy are the granting of special privileges to Publix-Northwest in the selection and leasing of product, and denying to other theatre owners and operators the right to select and lease films "upon terms and conditions which will enable them to compete with the theatres of Northwest, or to retain the patronage to which they are accustomed and which they must have to remain in business."

Basically, the workings of a zoning and protection regulation are said to have created an allegedly unreasonable situation as regards playing time and admission prices. The court is asked to cancel, annul and enjoin the further carrying out of the zoning and protection plan in the Minneapolis territory, and also to adjudge and decree that the alleged combination and conspiracy and things done in pursuance thereof are in violation of the Sherman act. Mr. Steffes asks $3,000 damages which he says he suffered from purported "oppressive discrimination in securing an adequate supply of pictures."

Branch managers of exchanges in Minneapolis are also listed as defendants, including C. A. Roeder, Paramount; Leo Blank, Vitaphone; W. H. Workman, of Metro and president of the local Film Board; Frank Mantzke, Universal; N. C. Sinift, United Artists; Jack Lorentz, Fox; M. J. Frisch, of RKO-Pathe and vice-president of the Film Board, and B. C. Marcus, Columbia. All are members of the zoning and protection committee.

Mr. Steffes, in charging that he cannot obtain sufficient films for the operation of his theatre without dealing with one or more of the distributor defendants, said that these distributor defendants together own and control not less than 75 per cent of all motion pictures leased and distributed in the Minneapolis territory, and more than 94.5 per cent of the features leased and distributed therein.

"As a result of said combination and conspiracy, and of the acts and things done in pursuance thereof," Mr. Steffes' complaint says his company "has been put so far behind the theatres of the Northwest Company in playing time, and has been so interfered with and harassed in the conduct of its business, and has been subjected to such unreasonable and oppressive discriminations and disadvantages in obtaining an adequate supply of suitable motion pictures, that it has suffered severe losses and injury to its business, and unless the defendants are restrained, will suffer still greater and irreparable damage in its business and properties."

Numerous other theatre owners in Minnesota, the Dakotas and in western Wisconsin are being similarly affected in their business "by the unlawful acts of the defendants," it is charged, and accordingly "the petitioner" brought the proceedings "mainly in its own behalf, but also in behalf

EXHIBITORS GET PLAN TO WIN NEW PATRONS

Public Relations Program of MPTOA Prepared as Guide to Reach Unsympathetic Groups and Avert Censorship

A "public relations program" for use in community theatre operation and intended to serve as a guide for reaching non-picturegoers and winning the support of unsympathetic community interests, has been prepared for exhibitors by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, aided by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

At the last meeting of the executive committee of MPTOA, a few weeks ago, a committee was formed to work out a plan whereby theatre owners might explore untouched audience possibilities. The committee also was instructed to incorporate into the plan a program for averting arbitrary local censorship or the influencing of bookings by unfriendly civic organizations, and to include suggestions which might be followed in winning the support of these groups.

The committee recently completed the plan, printed copies of which will be made available to exhibitors everywhere, and an outline was first presented last week before the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association at its annual convention in Atlanta. Members are reported to have received it with enthusiasm.

Analyzing Censorship

The program outlined embraces an analysis of the local censorship problem, its possible box office reaction and the means of overcoming it. Children, "highbrows," families, clubwomen, youths, church people, school teachers and "book-worms" are listed among the community's consistent "non-customers," and the plan discusses reasons for their non-attendance. Numerous remedies for the situation are outlined, including type of advertising and publicity which should be used, and certain other suggestions said to have merchandising appeal.

"The first step for an exhibitor who is interested in this type of cooperation is to develop in a natural way a friendly personal contact with the leaders of these groups and institutions," the committee's program says. "This should not be done in the way of seeking a favor, nor an attempt to sell a bill of goods, but he should evidence a willingness to go out of his way to extend any reasonable cooperation to them in matters of community interest. The right relations must be carefully developed and established to create the proper confidence in each other for the basis of future cooperation. This takes time and patience."

Family Night Programs

Family night programs are an effective beginning, it is said. "If the exhibitor can honestly assure the critical element that on Friday nights his program is carefully booked to appeal to the entire family and to contain nothing offensive and can get them to rely confidently on this assurance, much of the battle is won," according to the MPTOA, which advises exhibitors that "censorship can only mutilate pictures and deprive adult patrons of the privilege of seeing fine dramatic pictures because of their alleged effect on a small part of the audience. But organized cooperation between the exhibitor and the leaders in the community who normally set the standards of living, taste and fashion, can establish such discrimination and selection in screen entertainment in a most effective way, removing all of the irritation and controversy that inspires these angry demonstrations against the theatre and deprives the exhibitor of the very box office attractions that enable him to stay in business and retain the patronage of his regular customers."

Canadian Special Session Moved Forward to October 20

The date for the opening of the special session of Parliament to deal with business arising out of the Imperial Economic Conference has been moved forward to October 20, according to an intimation in Canadian government circles in Ottawa. The tentative date was fixed for October 6, but Prime Minister R. B. Bennett has been busy in the Canadian west and is only now returning to the capital. Further, the new date will more closely coincide with the sitting of the Imperial Parliament in London at which conference matters will be passed upon.

It will be, therefore, another two weeks before exhibitors and business interests of Canada generally will know what tariff and other changes will be proposed in the Canadian House as a result of the parley.

Wanger Signs New Contract as Columbia Vice-President

Walter Wanger has signed a new contract as a vice-president of Columbia Pictures, following the expiration last month of his original contract, which ran for six months.

A production executive at the studio, Mr. Wanger is expected in the East shortly for a brief period, after which he will return to the Coast.

Sue Vitaphone for $500,000

A. Channing Edington and Carmen Ballen Edington, authors, have instituted suit in Los Angeles against Vitaphone and S. S. Van Dine, author of mystery stories, asking $500,000 damages, according to press dispatches. They charge that their book, "The Studio Murder Mystery," was produced as a film by Vitaphone with authorship of the original credited to Mr. Van Dine. The Edingtons also charge that the public concluded they were plagiarists.

of all other theatre owners in the Minneapolis Film Board territory, similarly situated, who may come in and aid in the prosecution of this suit." It is expected, therefore, that the Allied Theatre Owners of the Northwest, of which Mr. Steffes has long been the guiding factor, will participate.

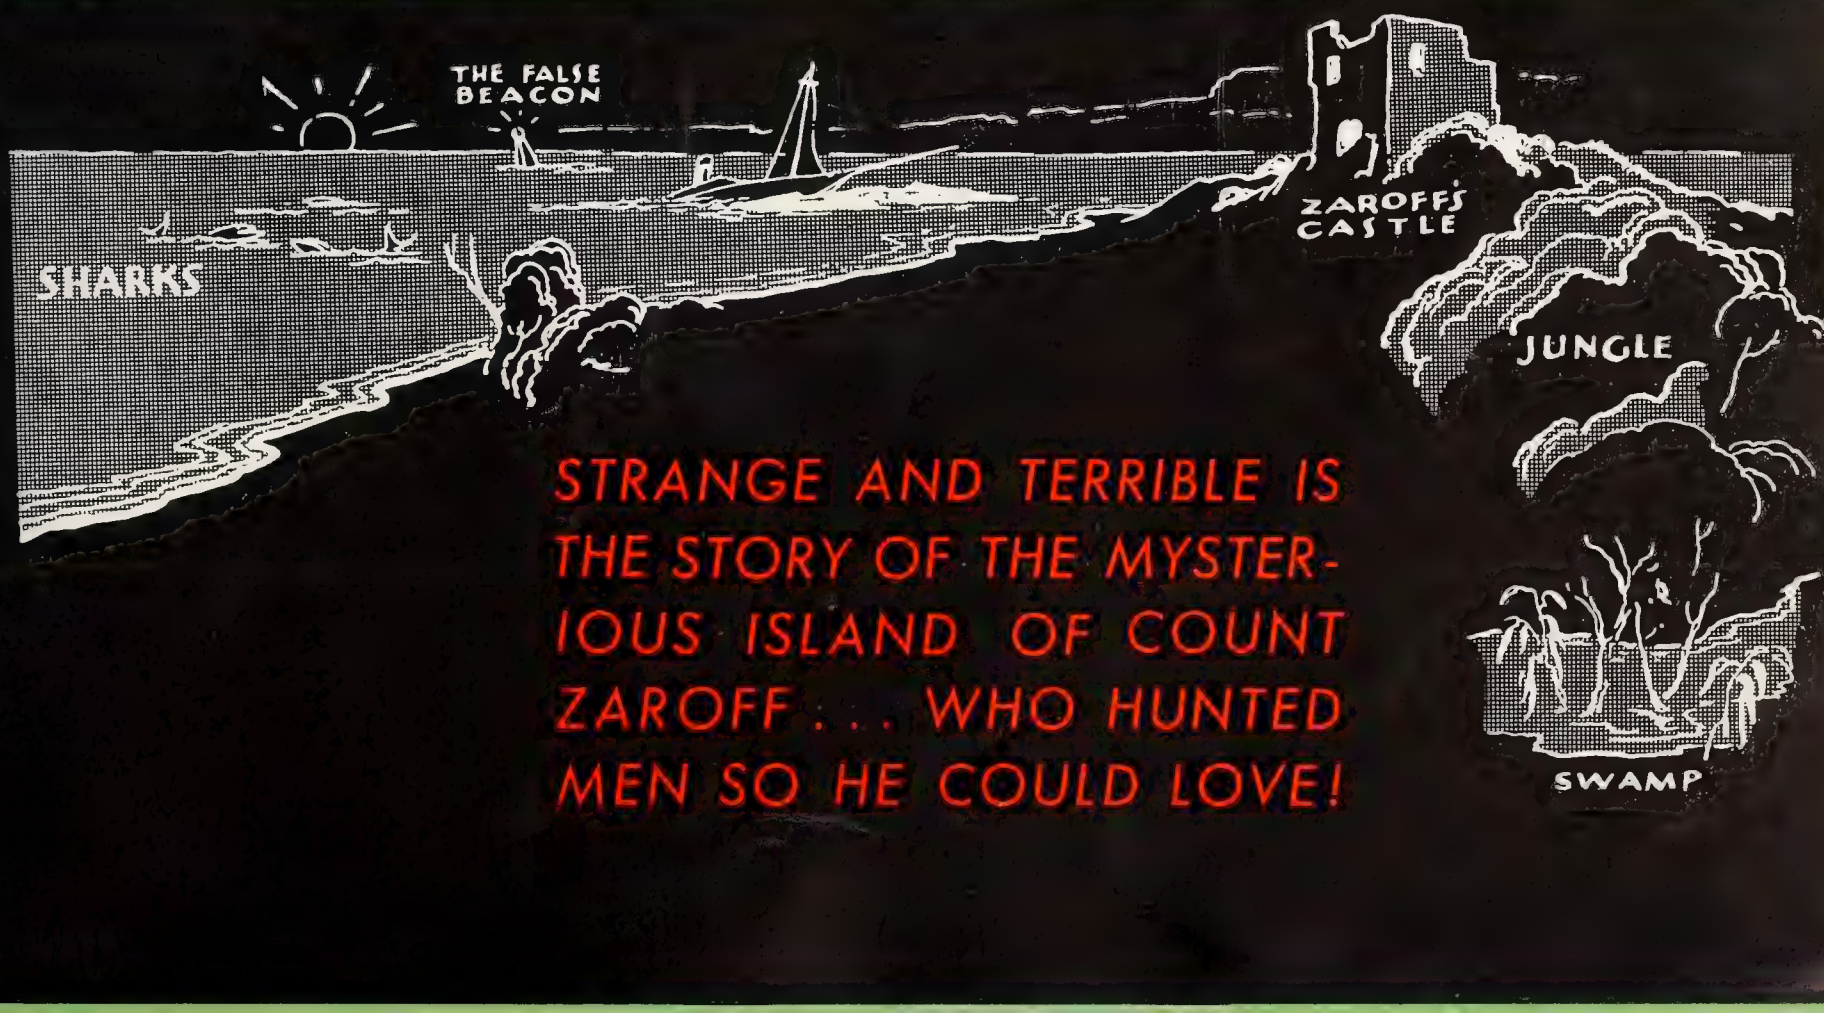
The individual defendants are specifically charged with the duty of enforcing the zoning and protection plan.

The defendant exchanges are said to have held a series of meetings in Minneapolis, beginning in June, 1929, and ending in August, 1929, to draft the zoning and protection plan, a copy of which was attached to Mr. Steffes' petition. "It is the claim and pretension of said defendants" that the plan "was entered into and adopted for a period which has since expired, and is not at present time in force or adhered to," according to the complaint. "If in truth and in fact such time limit had originally been agreed upon," it continues, "these defendants by their concerted actions and through their uniform course of dealings with plaintiff and other exhibitors, have continued and still continue to carry out the plan and all of the provisions, restrictions and agreements thereof.

"In entering into and enforcing said plan, each and every one of the distributor defendants agreed among themselves that neither they nor any of them would deal or engage in any business with owners and operators of motion picture theatres other than defendant Publix Northwest, in Minnesota, the Dakotas and western Wisconsin, except upon the basis of said zoning and protection plan."

Mr. Steffes pointed out to the court the fact that his and other theatres similarly situated lose considerable because of the time which they have to wait until availability of product following its showing in Publix Northwest Theatres, which operates houses throughout the Minneapolis territory.

MGM Considers Renting Studios in France and Italy



Whether MGM will undertake production in Italy and France will be determined at conferences this weekend on the Coast between Arthur Loew, head of foreign activities, and Irving Thalberg, production executive. If the plans should be adopted, studios would be rented in France and Italy with production starting by January 1 and 20 to 25 pictures in each language in prospect.

The foreign department at Culver City plant will shut down October 1, in protest against restrictive legislation overseas.

Lee Marcus Terminates Connection With Radio

Lee Marcus, eastern production representative for Radio Pictures, and liaison officer between the studio and the home office, has terminated his connection with the company, effective September 1, when his contract expired. Mr. Marcus' future plans are unknown.

COMMUNITY THEATRES PLANNED TO APPEAL TO DIVERSE GROUPS

Will Arrange Programs for Certain Days for Certain Tastes, Also Avoid Clash of Adult and Juvenile Fare

Concentration on specialized film entertainment to meet local demands, an appeal to diversified social or civic groups as a class instead of to the regular run of picturegoers as a mass, is the aim of the National Association of Community Theatres, Inc., organized in New York to operate motion picture theatres. The plan is to reach out over the country into towns outside the big cities.

Michael Freedman, variously engaged in motion pictures since 1915, and Marguerite Benson, prominent in women's business and social circles, are the sponsors and active operators of the corporation, which, it is said, has adequate financial backing. Offices have been opened at 545 Fifth avenue and preliminary discussions have been held with distributors regarding product and with Electrical Research Products concerning sound equipment.

While the average theatre hopes to draw for its patronage upon a cross-section of the community each day in the week, the National Association says it will appeal to the special tastes of certain groups on certain days and at certain hours. "This means serving everybody in the community," said an announcement. "Each town or community being of heterogeneous character, there are various tastes, occupations and racial backgrounds, as well as the varied preferences of adults, adolescents and children." To meet these conditions the circuit will substitute "merchandising" for "showmanship" in its operation, and hopes to cultivate the interest of those who for varied reasons are non-picturegoers.

Population Studied First

The selection of feature pictures and building of programs will be based upon a study of the population, and the advice of leaders in all local activities will be sought. Where a large local group is influenced by literature periodically received from the reviewing committee of its national association, as in the cases of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Parent and Teachers Association, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, the circuit plans to take into consideration the recommendations or disapprovals and work with the association accordingly.

The new organization also plans to make each theatre available for the use of schools, clubs, churches and their drama leagues, and promises to cooperate in local drives and campaigns, and also with technical or industrial groups.

"The emphasis upon community appeal," said Mr. Freedman, "does not mean that these theatres aim to show only 'highbrow' films. They will concentrate upon entertainment of uniformly high standards."

PARENTS TO GOVERN CHILDREN'S REACTIONS

The Memphis Evening Appeal says: "A sillier statement was never made than the 'most common of charges hurled at the heads of Hollywood's major-domos' that 'the movies are ruining our children and that motion pictures are responsible for whatever-is-wrong with the younger generation.'"

In any event, M. A. Lightman, operator of a circuit of Tennessee neighborhood houses, will in all future theatre and newspaper advertising place the burden of responsibility more squarely on the shoulders of parents. Mr. Lightman has launched a local campaign, and as president of the MPTOA, will urge exhibitors nationally to participate in a plan whereby the words "family," "adult," "adult and young adult," as the case may be, will appear in heavy black type in connection with the theatre announcement or advertisement.

Decision as to the word to be used would be based on reviews by committees from the nation's leading women's clubs and religious groups.

The company is establishing units in strategic spots. It will assume ownership or undertake operation, with owners remaining in charge if they so desire. It has established a membership service plan whereby the corporation offers service and assistance to theatres wishing to adopt its policies, and charging a monthly service fee. Asked whether National plans to reopen dark houses, Mr. Freedman replied "Yes; we are going to engage in all phases of motion picture theatre operation." He said the organization expects to be actively operating by October 1 with two or three houses. "We have no intention of forming a buying pool for independent theatres," he said.

Outlining how the corporation expects to effect its revolutionary policies in theatre operation, he explained:

> "The association's buying agreements will be made to eliminate the so-called evils of block-booking and permit a high degree of selectivity. It will not bother so much with protection.
> "Associated in the management will be not only experienced theatre men, but also persons of high standing and long experience in community life and work. Wherever possible the local manager will be selected from among the business men and women of the community.
> "There will be no complex headquarters organization with red tape and high overhead costs. All effort and investment will be concentrated upon the individual theatre properties."
> "We will contact leaders of various groups and promise entertainment and operation in keeping with their desires," Mr. Freedman said. "Recommendations for correcting displeasing policies will be urged."

Civic Leaders Enlisted in Move; Monthly Service Fee Plan Arranged for Houses Not in Circuit Adopting Its Policies

Mr. Freedman entered the motion picture business in 1915 in the laboratory and studio of the Fox Film Corporation, at Fort Lee, N. J. Subsequently Mr. Freedman was a member of a group interested in early sound apparatus. He operated independent theatres in New York City and theatres at Syracuse and Schenectady. In the interests of the National Association plan he made a six months' tour of the country, which, he said, convinced him that "the entire motion picture industry is doing a job of so-called 'showmanship' instead of one of merchandising."

Mrs. Marguerite Benson, associated with NACT in an executive capacity and in charge of public relations, has occupied numerous important posts in social and business fields. She has been director of the women's bureau of the National Association of Manufacturers and also of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association; business manager of the Home Making Centre, New York; president, Vocational Society for Shut-ins; secretary, Illinois Social Hygiene League; director, department of schools and churches of the War Savings Division, United States Treasury, and director of public relations for the Lenox School theatre, New York, and RKO's Pickwick at Greenwich, Conn.

One of the more important phases of the plan as outlined is a "challenge to those who have sharply criticized the motion picture industry."

Civic Leaders Cooperating

It was pointed out that the organization has the support of many civic or social leaders, among them the following, although this cooperation serves in no way as a commitment of their organizations:

Dr. Paul Achilles, managing director, Psychological Corporation, New York; Mrs. Ambrose Diehl, former motion picture chairman, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Los Angeles; Mrs. Jessica G. Cosgrave, principal, Finch and Lenox Schools, New York; Eva Von Hansl, associate editor, and Clara Littledale, editor, Parents' Magazine, New York; Prof. Mark A. May, Yale University, New Haven; Dr. Charles C. Peters, Pennsylvania State College; Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Washington; Prof. Christian A. Ruckmick, Iowa State University; Prof. Frederic M. Thrasher, New York University.

"Community Theatres will benefit by the opportunity of counsel with these individuals," said Mrs. Benson.

Mr. Freedman and his associates in NACT believe the country's theatre-goers are decreasing in numbers, due principally to "shopping" propensities of a more exacting audience; stoppage of immigration; insistence of exhibitors upon adding adult fare to programs on days when a bid is being made for children's patronage, and "distress merchandising," such as cut admissions, double and triple bills and prize nights.

SOUND, RADIO PATENTS BASIS OF MANY SUITS

14 Cases on September Calendar at Wilmington; Two New Suits Filed Against Erpi, Western Electric, A. T. & T.

Court action taken recently, on monopoly charges, against Electrical Research Products, Western Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph Company by Duovac Radio Corporation and by General Talking Pictures Corporation, has increased to 16 the list of suits on file in United States district court at Wilmington, Del., against leading motion picture and radio companies. The patents situation as regards the theatre sound field and radio are involved for the most part.

On Friday, the Duovac Radio Corporation, New York, filed an action against Erpi and its parent affiliations, Western Electric and A. T. and T., alleging violation of the Clayton anti-monopoly act and the Sherman anti-trust law. Nathan Goldman, president of Duovac, charges that Duovac suffered damages in excess of $2,500,000 through alleged illegal practices.

The company says that by socalled leases or licenses the defendant companies exercise control of 90 per cent of motion picture producers and more than 50 per cent of theatres using sound pictures and synchronized music. Duovac Company alleges that it "has been irreparably and immediately damaged."

Duovac sells vacuum tube amplifiers, photo-electric cells and other accessories used in manufacture of motion picture production and reproduction devices.

General Talking Also Sues

On the following day, General Talking Pictures, headed by M. A. Schlesinger and in control of the various DeForest theatre sound patents, filed a similar action against the three Telephone units, listing allegations similar to those made by Duovac.

One of the most important anti-trust trials will be launched October 10 when U. S. District Judge John P. Nields begins hearing testimony in the case of U. S. vs. Radio Corporation of America, RCA Photophone, Inc., RCA Radiotron Company, Inc., RCA Victor Company, Inc., General Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Inc., General Motors Radio Corporation and General Motors Corporation.

A special corps of lawyers from the United States district attorney's office will represent the Government. Charley F. Curley of Wilmington will represent RCA, General Electric, Westinghouse Electric, RCA Photophone, RCA Radiotron and RCA Victor. Ward and Gray of Wilmington will represent American T. & T. and Western Electric and J. P. Laffey, also of Wilmington, will represent General Motors Radio and General Motors.

Leading motion picture and radio corporations are involved in 13 additional suits, listed on the current calendar of the district court at Wilmington, which is the center of practically all important corporate actions in the East because it is in that town where most of the large corporations are chartered, later obtaining designation papers to do business in other states from the secretaries of the various states.

All but one of the 13 suits pending involve radio or sound reproduction patents.

The suit which Harry Koplar, St. Louis exhibitor, has pending against Warner Brothers is on the current calendar. Mr. Koplar is represented by Richards, Layton & Finger, while Hugh M. Morris is chief of counsel for Warners and Warner officials named as defendants, including Harry M. Warner, Albert Warner, Waddill Catchings, Henry A. Rudkin, Harold S. Bareford, Stanley P. Friedman, Abel Cary Thomas, Moe Mark, Jack L. Warner, Morris Wolf and Sam E. Morris.

William Fox Suits Pending

William Fox, through his two co-related sound patents companies, American Tri-Ergon Corporation and Tri-Ergon A. G., has pending separate patent violation actions against RCA Photophone, Erpi and RKO Radio Pictures, all represented by William G. Mehaffey. Hugh M. Morris represents Tri-Ergon. Another suit involving Tri-Ergon lists as plaintiffs American Tri-Ergon, Tri-Ergon Holding, Josef Engle, Joseph Massole and Hans Vogt, represented by Marvel, Morford, Ward & Logan and Hugh M. Morris. This action is against General Talking Pictures Corporation, De Forest Phonofilm and Lee DeForest. E. E. Berl heads the defendants' counsel.

Another group of patent suits, filed by Dubilier Condenser Corporation, Hugh M. Morris, counsel, names in individual actions the Perryman Electric Company, Inc., RCA, National Union Radio Corporation and Pilot Radio and Tube Corporation. H. Eugene Savery represents Pilot Radio and William G. Mehaffey is attorney for the three other defendants.

Nakken Patents Corporation, represented by Mr. Morris, has an action pending against Universal Sound Systems, Inc., William T. Lyman, counsel. Theatre sound system patents are involved in this case.

RCA Communications, Inc., and National Broadcasting, both RCA subsidiaries, are named as defendants in two suits filed by John M. Miller, who is represented by Mr. Morris.

Joseph Lopiano and Henry Frank, Jr., receivers of American Reproducer Corporation, are represented by Howard Duane in a suit filed against Pilot Radio and Tube, also represented by Hugh Morris.

In several cases, where radio interests are involved in patent actions, the outcome might have a bearing on the patent status relationship of many radio patents to sound motion picture business.

Lewis Signs With Paramount

Al Lewis, former story head at Fox, has assumed his new duties as an associate producer for Paramount.

No Exclusives in Columbia Policy Says Jack Cohn

Columbia Pictures has ruled against an exclusive run sales policy. "Motion pictures are mass entertainment; they should not be offered to the public through only one outlet," according to Jack Cohn, executive vice president, who said this week that exclusives inevitably would do more harm than good and pointed to the fact that, in his opinion, neighborhood play houses have made the business what it is today.

"The movies are a habit with a great many people," Mr. Cohn continued. "Once they are weaned away from the motion picture to other interests such as cards, books, radio, it will be impossible to bring them back. The legitimate theatre has found that out. An exclusive run policy in times such as these is certain to limit the audience and to a large extent antagonize thousands of potential movie patrons who were accustomed to seeing pictures when they came to their neighborhood theatres and were within their price range."

Mr. Cohn emphasized the need of new ideas. "The best pictures are usually those which treat a timely, newsy subject—one that is being given nation-wide attention—in a showmanlike manner. No matter how good a picture is, it must contain change and novelty," he said.

Abe Montague, for the past eight months acting as assistant to Jack Cohn, has been appointed manager of distribution with headquarters in New York. Charles Rosenzweig continues in full charge of sales.

Mr. Montague has been associated with Columbia since its inception. Previously he operated a circuit of independent theatres.

Pettijohn Rides With Roosevelt

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Film Boards of Trade and legislative advisor to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, is a member of the comparatively small party which is accompanying Governor Franklin Delano Roosevelt of New York, Democratic candidate for president, on his railroad invasion of the west, in quest of confidence and votes. Joseph P. Kennedy, onetime film executive, is also among the chosen few aboard The Pioneer, the candidate's special train.

On the other side of the fence, Will H. Hays, president of that same MPPDA with which Mr. Pettijohn is closely associated, stopped off in Chicago long enough one day last week to offer a suggestion to President Hoover, via attendant newspaper men. Mr. Hays, former postmaster general, and chairman of the Republican national committee during the Harding campaign of 1920, said: "I'd have Mr. Hoover make a cross-country trip just as Governor Roosevelt is doing. That is what I would do if I were managing the campaign. There is always benefit from an intimate touch between the candidate and the voter."

Censors of Vancouver are humorously inconsistent. In a full page institutional ad for Paramount in "The Daily Province," the title "Guilty as Hell" had "hell" edited out. There was nothing but a blank. But in two other ads in the same paper, each less than two inches, "Merrily We Go to Hell" and "Hell Divers" were left alone. Both were inserted by Canadian theatre owners, while Paramount in Canada is a foreign corporation—which may explain the capriciousness of the censors.

SHE'S just an innocent little lamb from Texas, protested Texas Guinan, former picture player, Broadway night club hostess, vaudevillian and what not, who appeared in an act at RKO's Mainstreet in Kansas City the other day.

The press in town asked for an interview, or maybe it was the theatre's press agent, and the boys on Kansas City's newspapers brought back one of the rarest assortments of "nifties" to pass the city desks in quite some time.

"I never took a drink in my life. I never sold a drop of liquor in my life. And I don't know one kind of liquor from another," said the little lady from the Great White Way.

"I never was convicted of a crime in my life," she continued. "Yes, I have been tried, but the juries almost suffered broken legs in the hurry getting back to the court room to tell the judge, 'You ain't got nothin' on this little gal.'"

"I've been married three times. Twice in the United States and once on the level," she exclaimed as she hurried from the hotel to the Mainstreet's wings.

It seems that Miss Guinan drew large crowds to the theatre's box office and on one occasion a police wagon was called to cart away several persons who caused a scuffle in the waiting line. "It sets a record for me," she assured friends. "An absolute record. It's the first time a patrol wagon ever was backed up to a theatre where I was playing and the police didn't want me."

We read in a newspaper the other day that a New York theatrical man and a short story writer "fought" over Greta Garbo's histrionic ability one night recently on the beach at Provincetown. In the almost-duel, satisfaction was given when the writer's rapier nicked the thumb of his antagonist. The sight of blood probably sickened the writer. In any event, Sinclair Lewis and Theodore Dreiser would have used typewriters at 20 spaces, instead.

Property men are trying to devise a harmless cigar for Jobyna Howland's use in her portrayal of Poker Annie, the Denver character who died not so long ago. Miss Howland is to appear in "Silver Dollar," in which Poker Annie appears. She is said to have been a rough, tough, brusque poker playing "fem" who wore brass knuckles and smoked long, black cheroots. "Silver Dollar" is about H. A. W. Tabor, Colorado's many-times-a-millionaire miner.

Having sustained the imprint of 90,000,000 feet, it was necessary to send the largest-rug-in-the-world at the New York Roxy to the cleaners. It took 36 stage hands two hours to transfer the chenille to and from two 40-foot trailer trucks. They had to remove six bronze doors to make way.

Among the enconiums showered on Charles Einfeld for his striking advertisements announcing "Life Begins," is a considerable article in Tide, the advertising magazine, which appears to feel, for a column, that Kenneth Collins, of Macy's, who made some remarks about motion picture copy before the AMPA, has been answered, in type.

Wingate Avowed Champion of Code; Is Silent on Plans

Dr. James Wingate, former head of the motion picture division of the New York State Department of Education, is winding up the affairs of that office to take over the duties of Colonel Jason S. Joy as head of the studio relations committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Colonel Joy is joining Fox Film Corporation. Erwin Esmond, an attorney of state educational department, has been appointed to the place left vacant by Dr. Wingate.

Warned of Dialogue

Of his new duties as supervisor and censor with the MPPDA, Dr. Wingate would make only this comment: "I do not know what I will do when I get to the Coast. I am not there yet."

In December of last year Dr. Wingate speaking of the Production Code, said:

"Producers could save themselves a great deal of time and money by acting as their own censors. Their Production Code is an excellent guide and we are thoroughly in sympathy with its purposes. If it was adhered to by producers, our job would be a simple one."

Of the situation at that time he added:

"There has been a marked tendency in recent productions to use the wisecrack and the phrase of double meaning to convey filth. This has brought about a situation as serious in its offensiveness as anything achieved during the silent picture era.

"Talking pictures are cleaner pictorially than were the silents, which had to depict rather than tell their stories. Now, however, offensive dialogue is being used to take the place of risque situations depicted in the old pictures, and its increase is overshadowing the improvements made by eliminating from talking pictures the offensive pictorial matter which was contained in some silent pictures.

Threatened Action

"Despite this increase in offensive innuendo and inference, to be noted particularly in pictures of the sophisticated sex drama type, we have refrained as far as possible from ordering eliminations, believing that during such times as these the additional expense of making eliminations and revises is not a matter to be regarded lightly. However, unless improvement is shown, the board will be obliged to order elimination of all objectionable dialogue, regardless of the amount or cost to the distributors."

Dr. Wingate, who was born on a farm in Princetown, N. Y., began his career as a teacher immediately after graduation from high school in 1890. Three years later he entered Union College, being graduated in 1897 with the degree of bachelor of science. Continuing as a teacher in elementary schools, he soon became commissioner of schools for Schenectady county, then superintendent of schools, and, in 1917 assistant in elementary education in New York State. In 1927 Dr. Wingate was appointed supervisor of the newly created motion picture division of the state department of education.

Paramount-Publix Figures Quarter Loss $5,900,000

Paramount Publix Corporation estimates its net operating loss for the quarter ended July 2, 1932, at $5,900,000. This figure is taken after a profit of $535,000 on purchase of bonds for sinking fund requirements. In addition to the operating loss, special write-offs have been taken during the quarter amounting to approximately $1,790,000, making a total charge against earned surplus for the period of approximately $7,690,000.

The estimate, according to the company, is made after reduction in fixed asset depreciation from the corresponding figure in the first quarter, tentatively set at $900,000. This change is noted as the result of the pending write-down of fixed assets and a corresponding charge against corporate surplus which was recently created by the stockholders in changing the common stock of the company from no par value to a par value of $10.

Attorneys for Paramount-Publix, Balaban and Katz, Great States Theatres, Inc., and Publix Great States Theatres last week characterized as "inconsistent and paradoxical" the suit for accounting and receivership brought by Max Kirchheimer of Chicago, in chancery court at Wilmington, Del. In the demurrer filed, the defendants contend certain "indispensable parties" were not named as defendants.

Studio Foursomes To Vie for Honors In Quigley Tourney

The Sixth Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by the Quigley Publications, will be held at Rancho Golf Club, Hollywood, Saturday and Sunday, October 15 and 16. With interest already at a high pitch, the event takes on a new significance, since this year's play will give the Coast motion picture community an opportunity to pay tribute to Eddie Mannix, M-G-M executive, Rancho's new president.

Several innovations will be introduced in this year's event, chief of which will be the formation of studio foursomes who will play for team supremacy. Studios will select their four best golfers, entering them in a separate classification, and while the players will shoot for a special prize, their scores will also count in the individual events. A special division has been arranged for cameramen. Heretofore the cameramen have been included in the technical division, but the great number of that group who are golf addicts has made it necessary to put them in a division of their own.

The executive committee handling this year's tournament is headed by Jack Warner as chairman, with George Marshall, filmdom's premiere golfer and director of the famous Bobby Jones shorts, as treasurer. Assisting them are Paul Snell, Fritz Tidden, Larry Urbach, Orville Stewart, Jed Buell and Long Young.

Many valuable prizes have been arranged for the best golfers in the individual events in all divisions, but the spirit of fun will enter into the tournament with numerous gag prizes ready for the player who turns in the highest gross score; the one who takes the most putts on the 18th green; for the funniest costume; the player who appears with the greatest number of clubs; for the worst cut ball; for the one who takes the most strokes on the 13th hole, in addition to other surprise features.

The general committee handling arrangements and entries in the various studios is made up of Richard Arlen, Paul Snell, Lew Brook, Perry Laiber, Eddie Laemmle, Russell Hopton, Jack Warner, Orville Stewart, Frank Capra, Milt Brown, Jed Buell, Pete Smith, Fritz Tidden, Eddie Mannix, Joe Schnitzer, Larry Urbach, Bob McGowan, Oliver Hardy, Dick Cahoon, Sam Bischoff, Sol Wurtzel, Ted Butcher, Stewart Heisler, Harry Brand, Al Jolson, Hubert Voight, Lon Young, Ben Verschlisier, Trem Carr, Lindsley Parsons, George Yates, Eddie Blackburn and George Blaisdell.

BROADCASTERS HOPE TO REDUCE SALES TALKS

Advertisers May Mention Prices But Must Shorten Merchandising Wordage; Action Follows Listeners' Complaints

Radio listeners are about to get a new deal. Nationwide reproof for the objectionable or over-long sales talk on commercially sponsored programs at last has reacted within the confines of broadcasters' offices. At least one nationwide network, Columbia Broadcasting System, has initiated new sales rules affecting the manner of delivering sales messages over its chain. Others are expected to take similar action.

William S. Paley, president of Columbia, has informed advertisers and agencies that the restriction which heretofore has prevented radio advertisers from mentioning prices for their products will be eliminated immediately. National Broadcasting System has taken similar action. To this end, Columbia has drawn a new policy which permits not more than two-price mentions on a 15-minute program, provided the total length of all sales talk is confined to one and a half minutes. Three price mentions on a 30-minute program will be allowed if the advertiser confines his commercial message to three minutes, and not more than five price mentions on a 60-minute program is permissible on the basis of a six-minute sales message.

NBC's new price policy permits a single mention on a 15-minute program and twice in a half-hour broadcast.

The radio industry, thereby, takes cognizance of a situation which involves criticism coming from levels as widely divergent as United States Senate committees, newspapers and the rank and file of radio listeners.

Columbia says it also has proposed to advertisers that they, by mutual agreement, avert the conflict of successive commercial continuities and thereby eliminate a sales talk at the end of one program and another at the beginning of the following one.

There has been a definite new trend in the use and delivery of the radio sales talk, according to Mr. Paley, who said that "this trend is visible on many programs, in the more adroit wording of the advertiser's message, in increased emphasis frequently achieved by decreased length, and in its ingenious blending or humorous contrast with the program itself and the personalities of entertainers on the program. Those advertisers who have taken the lead in this direction have been quick to note an added effectiveness."

Lillian Entwistle Dead

Lillian Millicent (Peg) Entwistle, New York actress and graduate of the Theatre Guild, leaped to her death from the top of a fifty-foot electric sign in Hollywood on Sunday, according to news dispatches from the Coast. Miss Entwistle recently played a part in "Thirteen Women," an RKO production.

BEST ATTENDANCE ON HOTTEST WEEK IS ANOMALY OF BRITISH THEATRES

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

With the mercury jumping about between shade temperatures of 90 and 100 degrees, England has been through a period of unaccustomed heat, the wave lasting off and on for upwards of a fortnight. It has not, in any case, been a good summer for showmen with heat figures topping all previous records on numerous occasions.

In the circumstances the obvious trend for this paragraph should be to report empty houses and woful stories of exhibitors in distress, but however true it may be of the suburbs and the provinces (and in many cases, how true) such a story will not hold for the big houses in the West End of London. Quite the reverse, in fact, is the tale, and the surprise of the moment is the number of weather-beaters now playing the top-grade halls. Revelation that home-produced films are as plentiful in this category as Hollywood product gives a beat of pride to the British heart, and serves perhaps as a reminder that something is happening to English film makers.

Pictures to protrude long lengths of tongue at Mr. Sun include "Congorilla" (United Artists), "The Mouthpiece" (Warner Bros.), "Jack's the Boy" (Gaumont-Gainsborough), "Thark" (British and Dominions), "The Love Contract" (British and Dominions), "Man from Yesterday" (Paramount), and "The Tenderfoot" (FN) in the same program, and a triple bill, incorporating "Lucky Girl" (BIP), "Dual Control" (BIP) and "Back to Nature" (German), at the Rialto.

"Congorilla," in spite of temperatures of about 90 degrees, packed the Marble Arch Pavilion, and two long queues were to be observed outside the house on one of the most sweltering afternoons. The picture has been assisted by imaginative showmanship, the front being dressed in cut-outs simulating jungle scenery, while a live lion suspended in his cage over the entrance has proved a good business puller.

"The Mouthpiece," doubled up with "Man Wanted," was at the Regal, just over the way. In spite of the heat, the house had well beaten its average with this bill, and both pictures were held over. These two houses are off the beaten track of the West End circuit, so that their success is the more remarkable.

At the New Gallery, with "Thark," a tale similar to that of the Marble Arch house is to tell, and here again long queues sweltered in the midday heat before winning admission. The Walls-Lynn team is probably the best money-spinning bet we have over here, and with "Thark" acknowledged their best yet, the result here might have been expected. "The Love Contract" (Owen Nares and Winifred Shotter) had not touched phenomenal business at the Capitol, but had greatly improved on receipts of the previous program and was held over. Here again, ingenious exploitation helped the box office.

After eight weeks at the Tivoli, "Jack's the Boy" (Jack Hulbert) was still going strong, and though the pressure had naturally eased slightly, business was still above normal. The triple bill at the Rialto brought surprisingly good returns, and it is difficult to allocate its success correctly to the individual items comprising it. "Lucky Boy" was the feature, starring Gene Gerrard and Molly Lamont, but "Dual Control" featured Jim Mollison (yes, the Mollison) and Amy Johnson and thus was truly topical, while "Back to Nature" was advertised on the front of the house with startling stills of nude women.

"Man from Yesterday," which was supported by Joe E. Brown's "Tenderfoot," at the Paramount Plaza had done about average business, despite the heat, and "One Hour with You" at the other Paramount theatre, the Capitol, managed to hold out for another week, after an extended run. Among product to fall below expectation was Walter Huston's "Night Court" (renamed "Justice for Sale"), which failed to bring average receipts to the Empire, M-G-M's shop.

Meanwhile the craze for nonstop vaudeville maintains its hold, and five houses are operating this form ot entertainment. The sixth had shut down protem, but was already advertising an early return with a similar type of program. Two of the principal exponents of this art—London Pavilion and the Leicester Square theatre—were formerly picture halls, and in both cases are netting far more than in their motion picture days.

Proposes Two Versions

A quaint story is in circulation here respecting an incident that took place in New Zealand recently, when the governor-general walked out of a British show, refusing to give his patronage to the picture, presumably on the strength of its moral standard. As the noble governor signified his intention of writing to the British Board of Film Censors about it, the board has entered the field on its own account by denying all responsibility for British films that reach the foreign or colonial market.

What the board suggests is that the studios produce one version for home use and another for the colonies!

Apart from the fact that this constitutes a direct libel on the taste of colonial filmgoers, it seems a feeble letout for the B.B.F.C. Far be it from me to join the horde of mud-slingers whose chief delight in life is to cast vituperation at our censor system, but I feel constrained to remark that if a certain picture I saw the other day, and which was shown complete with censor's certificate, is a sample of their efforts to keep British cinemas clean, they have no cause for self-satisfaction or self-congratulation. Hard-boiled me, in fact, felt constrained to walk out, and it was only my duty as a reviewer that kept me in the house.

Non-stop Vaudeville at Five Houses Also Maintaining Good Attendance; "Uplift Fund" Fight Still Going Strong

Frankly, the New Zealand episode does not surprise me in the slightest, and I know there are many other folk who will regard it in the same light. For a large percentage of the product of certain home studios is of a definitely dubious quality, and it will do those studios no harm to learn of such salutary action being taken against them by an official representative. Several recent British films come to mind, in which the "spice" has not even the merit of being clever or wittily suggested but is just a motley of vulgar innuendo and cheap double entendre.

He would be a friend indeed to the offending concerns who could convince them that such treatment of public entertainment matter wins them no laurels and does not enhance their reputation with the general public. But what a task!

"Uplift Fund" Battle

The battle of the "Uplift Fund" is now waging good and strong, and verbal volleys pour on the contestants from all directions. So fierce are the exchanges, indeed, that an onlooker cannot keep pace with developments, and must wait for the lifting of the barrage before being in a position to continue the war dispatches.

Least concerned of all the combatants, as far as one can see through the smoke of battle, is the Commission on Cultural and Educational Films, which was the direct cause of this protracted free-for-all. And they are going calmly forward with the drafting of a constitution of the Film Institute which they proposed should be set up with the financial backing of the Cinematograph Fund. This plan, it is expected, will be ready for submission to the Privy Council in October, so that the Institution may commence operations thereafter.

Their attitude of determination disposes of the suggestion I have heard voiced that the commissioners are a non-practical and theoretical body, which never would get the trade or the Institute anywhere. If there has to be a readjustment of ideas, it will not be the Educational Commission but the trade that will need to readjust.

Hat Check Girl

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

This picture should prove more than satisfactory for all kinds of audiences. It has drama, romance, comedy, novelty, suspense and several better than average box-office names.

The dialogue is particularly clever, with catchy bits of conversation easily adaptable to selling copy. Describing it as a comedy-drama probably will convey the best idea of the picture's theme, yet there is plenty of romance. Bits of "menace," in the publisher of a scandal-mongering magazine and a bootlegger frameup, move the picture along at a lively pace.

The story concerns a wealthy young ne'er-do-well who falls in love with a beautiful hat-check girl in a night club. As he tries to laugh and kid his way to her heart, his path is beset with many obstacles—all of which add to the fun of his romance. Difference in social standing, paternal objections, make no difference. Even the unwillingness of the girl to go on with the courtship do not deter him. Finally at their engagement party, while Bob Collins is "it" in a murder game, the scandal racketeer is actually murdered. Bob is charged with the crime, because his father, in order to break up the love affair, provided a motive for the game and crime. But the police discover a letter that pins the crime on the real killer.

While the story is a little risque in spots, there is so much clean and wholesome entertainment that your audiences should be inclined to overlook the speedy sequences and enjoy the general smartness. It is a satisfactory feature for all but the youngest children.

Supplementing the rather intriguing title are four names that should have plenty of power. They are Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon, Ginger Rogers and Monroe Owsley. Using the combination of title and star names, together with snappy catchlines, should produce selling copy. Additionally, there are opportunities for several good exploitation bits along novel lines. First is the cashing in on the popularity of one of Sally Eiler's previous pictures, "Bad Girl," by starting a whispering campaign a week or two in advance of your play dates that the "Bad Girl" has now become the "Hat Check Girl." You can get out gag heralds in the form of hat checks that can be handed to all your patrons for several days previous to the opening. Feature a big check mark on these reminding your patrons of the playdates. Also there is the possibility for tieups with clubs, hotels, restaurants, auto parks, and so on, to provide check stubs that will feature "Hat Check Girl" advertising copy—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and directed by Fox. Directed by Sidney Lanfield. Screen play by Barry Conners, Philip Klein and Arthur Kober. From the novel by Rian James. Photographed by Glen MacWilliams. Sound recorder, W. D. Flick. Settings by Gordon Wiles. Costumes by Rita Kaufman. Assistant director, Lesley Selander. Release date, September 25, 1932. Running time, 64 minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Phantom President

(Paramount)

Comedy

Here's a load of good old hokum; just a lot of entertainment, without any rhyme or reason, other than to produce continuous laughter. It's like an old-fashioned vaudeville show. In fact, it takes Peter Varney, an old-time medicine show man, and elects him president of the United States.

It is timely, topical and the kind of a picture that during the next couple of months, while the presidential campaign is gripping the interest of the nation, should enable exhibitors to reap a harvest.

Paramount reached deep into the bag of tricks of a kind of motion picture production that is dead but never will be forgotten, the good old silents, and has thrown into this feature the things that made them laugh in other days. It has the farcical comedy of an old-time burlesque show, some of the thrills of a circus, and a lot of that "surprise" that seemed to pass out of existence with the deaths of the old-fashioned carnival and medicine show.

It is alive with those things that smart showmanship can sell. If you can get over the idea that this picture is as big as the national campaign, as timely as the election and as funny as a politician's promises, you have the whole thing in a nutshell.

This kind of fun should be readily appreciated on Broadway as well as on Main Street. As it's a burlesque, burlesque your advertising, all the while guaranteeing your patrons downright good entertainment.

Besides comedy and timeliness, you have an unusual name to sell in the person of George M. Cohan. Because he has confined his activities to the stage and the bigger cities, he is almost a legendary figure with the country at large. But for your own information, Jimmy Durante practically steals the picture. Never before has he been as ludicrous. Yet, though Cohan and Durante predominate, they are not the whole show.

Cohan plays a dual role—his own as a glib-tongued medicine showman, whom the machine has picked to substitute for the nonentity it has chosen to run for president, and the actual candidate.

The picture can be sold to any kind of audiences from the tiniest children up to the oldest adults. There's plenty of fun for both men and women and there isn't a risque line or sequence in it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and directed by Paramount. From the novel by George F. Worts. Directed by Norman Taurog. Screen play by Walter DeLeon and Harlan Thompson. Music and lyrics by Rogers and Hart. Photographed by David Abel. Release date, September 30, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

The All-American

(Universal)

Football Drama

"The All-American" is a sweet piece of box office merchandise, for the football season and immediately thereafter. It has just about everything that all types of 'fans' want and is full of advertising and exploitation possibilities.

It's more than a football picture, and though the natural tendency will be to shout about the 35 or 40 gridiron greats who appear in it, no one wants to be cocksure that a mere building around these luminaries will bring the merited returns. True, the football spirit predominates, but there is also a story full of drama, romance and human interest.

It's about an All-American star, who becomes swell-headed and quits school to cash in on his "rep." But when the headlines fade, so does he. Then he hits the skids, double-crosses his friends, forgets his sweetheart; until, just a bum, he winds up on the business end of a wheelbarrow. All the time, his younger brother is following in his football footsteps. Gary King, profiting by his experience, sees what is in store for Bob, but Bob resents his advice. Then the great football game—a real game—with the All-American team of 1931 facing a great aggregation that includes such names as Red Cagle, Ernie Nevers, Frank Carideo, Albee Booth, Russ Saunders and about a dozen others who made gridiron history. Bob as an All-American runs wild through the All-Stars. Nothing can stop him, until Gary gets into the game in the second half and with Russ Saunders ghosting for Arlen, he puts on a football demonstration that's a whirlwind. For about ten minutes your patrons will get football that is real football, no newsreel stuff, but the real McCoy, with real stars furnishing the action.

Circus this picture, with special shows; midnight matinees; advance previews; doing everything in a big and unusual way. Use all the drama and news page publicity you can get, basing your news stories on the value of the "All-American" names and your drama stories on the straight picture names. There are plenty of these, among them Dick Arlen, Andy Devine (who almost steals the show with his great comedy), James Gleason, the coach, John Darrow, Gloria Stewart, June Clyde and Merna Kennedy. Get into the sport pages with pictures, layouts and news stories built around the glamour of those names on the two elevens.

No one should overlook the possibilities for unlimited contacts and tieups. The title is a natural for all sorts of cooperation with business men that should be productive of full page, double truck and even special section advertising displays. Colleges and other schools should be enthusiastic in its support for the powerful story it tells. The lesson that every coach and teacher tries to tell his pupils is there, and it should be easy to arrange special matinees for students.

Likewise it's a great opportunity to tag onto local football hysteria with personal appearances of other day football stars, also this year's coaches, captains and squads. All of which leads into the "circus idea"—special decorations on the marquee and in the foyer and lobby—bands, parades and all the hullaballoo.

Don't get the idea that it's a straight man and boy picture. There is drama, romance, comedy and spectacle to hold the interest of the women. And don't get the idea that because you have what looks like a "natural" you can lie down on the job.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Klondike

(Monogram)

Romantic Drama

The combination of a good story, a good cast and expert direction should mean a more than satisfactory picture. It melds drama with romance in such a way that interest is maintained at a high pitch. There is an element of novelty in the story, which has been portrayed and directed so that the dramatic punches are put across in a natural manner.

The story concerns a young doctor who had the misfortune to have a patient die after a difficult operation had been performed. He is charged with murder. A jury acquits him, but the medical associations cause the loss of his license. He embarks on a transpacific flight, but his plane is wrecked in Alaska. In the little camp is a man suffering from the same paralytic affliction as the first person operated on. The boy's father and sweetheart, Klondike, who followed Dr. Cromwell's trial through radio reports, insist that he try to cure the cripple. Cromwell does and is successful. The patient, however, figures that the doctor will take his sweetheart, and plans to kill him, but is prevented by Klondike and Mark Armstrong. Cromwell returns to the States with Klondike as his bride.

There are plenty of names in the cast, and they did their work with sincerity.

Besides straight advertising, in which you can recommend this picture to your patrons, there is plenty of room for some good business building. While it is not propaganda for the medical profession, there is no reason why you shouldn't make plenty of contacts with the doctors of your community. If possible, run a special preview for them; at least invite them to attend the opening performance as your guests.

To the rank and file get over the idea that here is a picture they will enjoy because it presents a fine cast, tells a novel and gripping story in which drama, romance, suspense and novelty predominate, with just enough contrasting comedy to move the picture along at pleasing speed. It has the stuff that will appeal both to adults and all but the youngest children, yet care should be taken to surround your feature attraction with a bill of short subjects that will get your audiences into the proper mood.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Payment Deferred

(MGM)

Drama

The walls of a house talk and they tell a quite gruesome story of avarice, murder, unfaithfulness, fear, suicide and the relentless preying of conscience. Here is a picture that is heavy all the way through, marked with but few contrasting elements.

It presents Charles Laughton in a character role that may win the approbation of that part of your patrons which enjoys unusually effective acting in that line. In this picture, as in his first, "Devil and the Deep," he gradually goes mad, the climax revealing him as a laughing maniac. Whether that angle is going to have a ready appeal to the rank and file is a question that only the showing will determine.

The story concerns an English bank clerk (Laughton) who is on the threshold of the poorhouse. A relative from Australia shows up and when Laughton cannot induce him to participate in a foreign exchange speculation, he poisons him. Using the money that the boy had, Laughton becomes rich. But always the sin of his crime is on his mind.

Sending his wife and daughter on a pleasure trip, he falls for the charms of a French vampire. Upon his family's return home his daughter sees the other woman in the house but keeps the knowledge to herself until she uses it to force her father to loosen up on money matters. The wife hears the story and becomes ill. The vampire, intent on blackmail, comes to Laughton's home; his wife witnesses a scene between them and then commits suicide. When the doctor comes in for a visit he finds the woman dead and his questioning forces Laughton to realize the enormity of his crimes. This provides his great climactic scene.

Because Laughton is practically the whole show, it would be the natural thing to sell the picture through his name. If he got over with your audiences in his first picture, you can promise them some more of the same brand of work, this time more stark and realistically grim than before. Yet there are other names that should prove of assistance. Verree Teasdale, who was featured in "Skyscraper Souls," plays the part of the vampire, and she, Maureen O'Sullivan and Dorothy Peterson share the work with Laughton. Neil Hamilton's part is rather small. But none of these names should be overlooked in an effort to build up interest.

Where there is so much heavy melodrama, all revolving about the character of one man, and almost a complete absence of most of the things that patrons look for in a picture—romance, comedy, and so on, audience interest may react as it did at the preview, where there was an inclination to titter during the most powerful sequences.

The picture is primarily adult entertainment, there being practically nothing in it that will hold the attention of the adolescents or children. Selling it will be a matter of good advertising, particularly stressing the quality of the cast. Catchlines that convey the story idea should be handled with care that will avoid the grimness of the picture. There are scarcely any opportunities for any special exploitation, although something might be worked out along the lines that money and wealth does not insure happiness.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Movie Crazy

(Paramount)

Comedy

No exhibitor in these United States will have to be told anything concerning the star of this picture. Neither are suggestions as to the exploitation of his name necessary. Use all the heads of Harold Lloyd available. The huge papiermache head of the star, which Publix has used with enormous effect at the New York Rivoli in connection with the latest picture of Maurice Chevalier, should be a valuable bit of marquee display.

Plaster the front of the theatre with stills from the picture, using some of the more amusing comedy bits. Take every opportunity, in an early teaser campaign and during the run of the film, to promise comedy with a capital "C." This is goggle-eyed Harold's first picture in some two years. Impress this point on the audience, indicating that the star has taken that length of time to turn out a successor to his last film. Use the names of his earlier successes to stir the memories of the potential patrons, and promise them a new story with an old comedy favorite of the world.

The exhibitor has in this comedy a showselling angle which lends itself perfectly to exploitation. Here is Harold Lloyd, great comedy star, as a movie crazy young man from a small Midwestern town, who is offered the possibility of a Hollywood screen test through an accident, and whose attempts to break into the star class in the film community are one complete succession of accidents, all of them humorous, some bordering on the slapstick, but all, as the exhibitor may tell his audience, guaranteed laugh provokers, or the money back.

The picture-going public is always anxious to know something about the inside of studio life, the making of a picture, and here they have it, often comically put, with Harold Lloyd continuously putting his foot in it, wrecking scenes, ruining pictures, all with a bland innocence which is mirthful.

The supporting cast is capable, with Constance Cummings, attractive and giving an able performance, proving an excellently sympathetic other half to shy Harold's first big, and timid romance. Louise Closser Hale, always an able comedienne, rates good billing under Lloyd. She offers several moments of amusing comedy in one sequence.

Promise the audience they will laugh and laugh some more when they go behind the scenes in Hollywood with Harold Lloyd. Make the playdate on this picture an event in your theatre. Earlier showings elsewhere will automatically supply ready-made advance publicity. The patrons should be looking for the picture. They should be half sold before the exhibitor begins his own selling. Starting from that point, the showman should have no difficulty

Hearts of Humanity

(Majestic)

Drama

This is tearful material from start to finish, with a sprinkling of comedy to lighten the load, but definitely and unmistakably a "weeping" film. There is nothing of plot complication to speak of, little speed of action or pace, yet it has an able cast, who do their work well, and a definite appeal to the instincts of mother love and the like.

Children have an important part in the development of the story, the juvenile portion of the cast being headed by Jackie Searl, Dick Wallace and Betty Jane Graham. The youngsters are effective.

The cast has marquee possibilities, with the name of Jean Hersholt on top. Hersholt gives one of his usual sterling character performances, as the Jewish widower on New York's East Side, or any similar place, whose heart is in his son, Wallace, but whose son is not all that he might be. J. Farrell Macdonald is the Irish cop of the neighborhood, good friend of Hersholt, whose wife dies suddenly. Subordinate names are Charles Delaney, Claudia Dell, who supply the romantic interest; Lucille La Verne.

Hersholt adopts Macdonald's son, Searl, after Macdonald is killed by a burglar. Thence to the conclusion follows something in the nature of a motion picture sermon, indicating how the good boy, Searl, many times saves the skin of the bad boy, Wallace, until the rejuvenation comes about beside the sickbed of Searl.

In selling the picture, bear in mind that it is of a sobby nature but at the same time has considerable popular appeal. The picture is best adaptable to the smaller situation, and neighborhood public, where will probably be found the most favorable reaction. The title is far too sentimental to bear too great concentration. Stick to the theme: father love attempting to replace absent mother love. Promise Hersholt offering a satisfying performance, and able support from the others.

It may be well to attempt to gain the cooperation of women's clubs, parent-teacher organizations and the like. They should not be reluctant. The fact of the juveniles in the cast does not necessarily make this juvenile entertainment, yet as an object lesson for them, their parents will doubtless want them to attend. Capitalize on this angle in every way.—AARONSON, New York.

INTRODUCING FOREIGN FILM

An ingenious and effective method of introducing a motion picture with foreign dialogue is being used at the the Little Carnegie theatre in New York in the showing of "Zwei Herzen und Ein Schlag" ("Two Hearts That Beat As One"), Ufa production being distributed by Leo Brecher's Protex organization. To give the picture an understandable start for the person not familiar with the German dialogue, a "trailer" is used as a prologue to introduce players and to tell just enough of the story to intrigue the patron without divulging the entire theme.

The Last Man

(Columbia)

Drama

A snorting melodrama of the ugly water front of Suez and battle on the high seas, this effort is packed with high-speed action and Charles Bickford. As such it lends itself particularly to that type of situation which can count on a goodly number of juveniles among the patronage, as well as those adults who like their blood and thunder, plus a story introduced in a highly novel manner, and an atmosphere which may bring into play more than a little enthusiasm in the show-selling campaign.

The title is good and can be made to tell a box-office story, of course, within the limits of its type and draw possibilities, if it is tied up with the idea of a rousing fight aboard a steamer on the high seas, wherein all are killed but two men and a girl, a fight to "the last man." It's heavy melodrama, but it is done with telling effect. There is nothing exceedingly brilliant, yet it is exciting, fast-moving and maintains its pace throughout without apparent effort.

Here's the novel introduction which should be utilized to advantage. A steamer on the high seas almost rams another of impressive size, which looms suddenly dead ahead in the fog, and is apparently a derelict, without crew or helmsman. The crew are found dead. No indication is given of what happened, except the evidence of a terrific fight. Still alive are Bickford, wounded; Constance Cummings, in a faint, and white-haired Alec B. Francis, her father, insane. They are taken to the cabin, where Bickford begins to tell his story. The scene shifts, and the story, as the audience may imagine Bickford is recounting it, takes possession of the screen. Use that idea for the catchlines. Put mystery into them, make them as intriguing as your imagination will permit. Tell the audience they will see a tale of action, of scuttling ships for insurance revenue, of an insurance company detective assigned to Suez to ferrett out the perpetrators of what looks like highly criminal action, of a Suez dive and its crooked owner, who tries to match wits with Bickford, the detective, and loses.

There is romance with Miss Cummings and Bickford handling that rather subordinate feature effectively. Herein Bickford handles his fair share of fights, as only two-fisted Bickford can do it. Promise the patrons action, fighting and a punchy melodrama. The concluding sequence pictures Bickford completing his story in the cabin of the funeral ship to round out the device employed for the introduction. Best shown during the week, this has appeal, of a definitely circumscribed type, for any one.—AARONSON, New York.

Zwei Herzen und Ein Schlag

Two Hearts That Beat as One

(Ufa-Protex)

Operetta

This picture is a high-standard exponent of the modern German principle of production, that of lessening and altering the realism to provide the comedy touch which lends itself to musical illustration, as described by Mr. Hans Tintner, Berlin correspondent of the HERALD, in the issue of September 3. This treatment begins with the first scene, showing a number of maids and girl bellhops at a fashionable resort hotel performing a lively and tuneful song and dance. That spirit is maintained throughout, any serious element being effectively blockaded.

The songs are uniformly likable and there's the nucleus of appeal to your community, provided experience has shown they like music with their screen meals. You may well promise them a delightful 80 minutes of singing and dancing in a cheering story with no heavy problem to mull over.

To those acquainted with productions of German origin there are two names to present, the engaging and vivacious Lilian Harvey and Wolf Albach-Retty. Miss Harvey truly parallels the younger generation of American screen players, in actions and in accomplishments.

The story is of a bride who has left her husband because of her stage aspirations. In fact, her ambitious aunt even prevails upon her to try to goad him into slapping her, as grounds for divorce. Her husband won't be goaded, however, and a ruse of his uncle at "Ria Bella's" premiere provides the situation for the reconciliation.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced by Ufa. Distributed by Protex Trading Corp. Directed by Wilhelm Thiels. Manuscript by Franz Schulz. Adapted from the play by Birabeau and Dolley. Photographed by Carl Hoffman. Music by Jean Gilbert. Supervised by Guenther Stapenhorst. Release date, September 8, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Phantom Express

(Majestic)

Melodrama

A railroad yarn with an element of mystery, this is excellent juvenile fare of the melodramatic, action-packed variety, which may have a certain appeal for the masculine adults who haven't forgotten when they were boys and went to the "movies" of a Saturday afternoon with a nickel and an unmistakable urge for screen excitement.

Double feature or midweek playing perhaps will be the best spot for the picture. It is possible to stir up a goodly amount of neighborhood excitement with the title, since this phontom express, cleverly developed, causes several wrecks and numerous injuries. Ballyhoo in the lobby of the theatre with all the train material possible, signal lights, signs and the like, and make the biggest play to the patrons through the children, whose curiosity as to the phantom train, combined with their desire to see a melodramatic railroad picture should have the required reaction upon the family elders.

The film should be found reasonably entertaining. The cast is in a measure standard for the type of film. J. Farrell Macdonald plays the crack engineer in his usual acceptable style, aided by William Collier, Jr., who as the son of the road's president, Hobart Bosworth, solves the mystery of the phantom express. Sally Blane is attractive as Macdonald's pretty daughter, who, with Collier, supplies the other half of the romance.

A railroad story, with a novel mystery twist, is perhaps the best selling line for the picture. Use the question mark for the mystery, and punchy action lines for the story. The production should serve as moderately effective entertainment for adults and a slightly hair-raising thriller for the youngsters.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by Irving C. Franklin and Donald M. Stoner. Distributed by Majestic. Written and directed by Emory Johnson. Edited by S. Roy Luby. Photographed by Ross Fisher. Adaptation and dialogue by Emory Johnson and Laird Doyle. Release date, September 15, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Out of Singapore

(Goldsmith Pictures)

Drama

This perhaps will be most effectively sold as a stark drama of the open sea, out of Singapore, sailing the Far Eastern waters. The greater portion of the action takes place aboard a four-master, whereupon Noah Beery, whose achievements in grandiose ugliness can rate second to none, does his best to be a most complete villain of the piece.

He succeeds reasonably well, and there is no reason why the younger generation, particularly the masculine variety, should not be alternately thrilled and dismayed by his particular brand of ugliness. Briefly, Beery, as first mate to a captain, Montague Love, in very ill health, concocts a plan which has for its main features designs on the captain's daughter, Dorothy Burgess, and the scuttling of the ship for the insurance revenue, a type of deviltry in which the first mate is understood to have been variously engaged for several years, to the detriment of innumerable ships and their crews. The scheme is plotted with a Chinese owner of a Singapore dive and much money.

Beery makes the mistake of hiring a second mate, George Walsh, after drowning the original officer. Another mistake is the severing of relations with a half-caste dancer in the dive, played by Miriam Seegar. She follows on board when the ship puts to sea. Out to get Beery, she watches the hatching of the plot, warns Walsh and Miss Burgess and turns the tables on Beery. When he sets off the dynamite fuse in the ship's hold Miss Seegar locks him in, permits Walsh and Miss Burgess to escape, and proceeds to dance for the crew in the forecastle, as the ship is blown to bits. The captain-father meanwhile has died by reason specifically of the pointed nursing of Beery in an unguarded moment.

There is more than a little heavy melodrama in the piece, though the pace of the action varies. As a double bill offering, it may prove reasonably entertaining, especially in the smaller situation. There is comparatively little opportunity for exploitation of an unusual nature, best results probably resulting from a straight treatment, handling the film as seagoing melodrama, having a certain appeal for the juvenile patron. Concentrate on Beery, the villainous first mate, and Walsh, the strong and handsome second mate who saves and wins the girl.—AARONSON, New York.

Isle of Paradise

(Invincible)

Travel Subject

The island of Bali, often called the most beautiful of the group located in the Dutch East Indies, here forms the subject matter of a feature length film, done for the most part silently with accompanying dialogue. Definitely in the classification of the travelogue, the picture, ably photographed and competently explained, must none the less be considered from that standpoint.

Pictured with an abundance of always interesting detail, the lives of the inhabitants of peaceful, ever tranquil Bali are clearly portrayed, as well as the numerous ceremonials which fill their existence. Scenic effects are handled with the utmost skill.

The picture may well be used as a special attraction, with the exhibitor clearly indicating to his patrons exactly what he is showing. The picture has just completed a fifth week at a small, low-priced Broadway picture house, indicating a certain amount of drawing power inherent in the film. Recently the island of Bali has enjoyed much in the nature of exploitation, chiefly through the medium of the motion picture, and specifically through one or two short subjects. Offer this as a feature-length picture accurately portraying the lives and customs of a strange and little known native Oriental people, the Balinese. Perhaps the most unusual feature of the film is the detailed photographic description of the most elaborate, most unusual ceremonies which accompany the cremation of the dead, one of the most pleasurable of the Balinese rituals—to themselves.

The exhibitor has the opportunity for heavy atmospheric display advertising and ballyhoo in his lobby. He may go in as strongly as he desires for the palm leaf and South Sea effects in his immediate theatre show-selling. There is no cast. The natives, not acting, are handsome, wholly normal.

School groups may be very easily interested in this film. Special matinees could be arranged with the cooperation of the educational authorities. Appeal to the adults with the suggestion that here is something off the beaten track among feature pictures. The picture, of course, will serve exceptionally well on a double-feature program.—AARONSON, New York.

Presented by Adolph Pollak. Distributed by Invincible Pictures. Direction and photography by Charles T. Trego. Film editor, Paul Maschke. Narration by David Ross. Music by James Bradford. Release date, August 15, 1932. Running time, 61 minutes.

War Drama

Here is a problem play, with no plot whatever unless one takes in the cabinet maneuverings at the various capitals preliminary to the World War. The production, seen at the Europa in New York, raises the suggestion that Kaiser Wilhelm made every effort to settle the Austro-Serbian dispute without war, and that the assassination of Jean Juares, Socialistic leader of the French people, removed the only man who could have prevented the conflict.

The production is practically entirely dialogue, introducing the central characters at the royal palaces of Austria, Hungary, Russia and Serbia, with the help, as stated in a title, of authentic documents from the several governments. Whatever action is to be found rests solely in the flashes of the assassination of the Austrian Crown Prince at Sarajevo and of the French socialist and a momentary glimpse of the warring troops. The result is heavy screen fare, with no attempt to introduce lighter touches.

The dialogue is in German, with the exception of the English in an introductory scene introduced to raise the question: "Who caused the war?"

For the German community the theatre management obviously should emphasize the exposition of the argument that upon the cabinets, and not upon the royalty, lay the responsibility of the tragedy of all time.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced by Atlas Film Verleih (Berlin) and distributed by Capital Films. Directed by Richard Oswald. Scenario by Heinz Goldberg and Fritz Wendhausen. Foreword by Dr. Eugene Fischer. Settings by Franz Schroedter. Photography by Mutz Greenbaum. Release date, Sept. 3, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

Hic-Cups, the Champ

(Columbia)

Fair

Krazy Kat, cartoon figure, presents something of an animated novelty as the hiccoughing champion of animal land. It is not a particularly delicate figure, but contrives to be somewhat amusing. Kat dreams of the great championship hiccoughing bout while under the influence of the doctor's ministrations.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Believe It or Not—No. 9

(Vitaphone)

Up to Standard

Robert L. Ripley takes his believe-it-or-not eye sundry places from New York to Africa in this bit of his oddities series of shorts. Subjects range from the horseman guide of cross-town freight trains in New York to the salt pyramids. Diversification gives the production adequate life.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Curiosities

(Columbia)

Fair

Fairly interesting is this collection of oddities, picked up by the camera the world over, and produced by Walter Futter. The unusual burial custom of an African tribe, the complete and intricate miniature railway constructed by a California man as a hobby, form the highlights.—Running time 10 minutes.

This is a charming piece of light romantic comedy that the flappers and the woman trade generally will do handsprings over. Well-directed, lavishly mounted and sparkling with the brightest dialogue that has assailed these ears for many a moon, it is certainly the top shelf of program product and should pay off in any kind of a house. This is the kind of stuff any exhibitor should be glad to invite in for a stay.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 109 theatres in 20 key cities over the country reached a total of $1,422,646 for the calendar week ended September 17, 1932. This aggregate gross represents a decrease of $166,721 from the total of the previous calendar week ended September 10, when 108 theatres in 20 cities grossed $1,589,367. During the more recent seven-day period two new low individual house record figures were established, and no new high individual records. This compares with three new "lows" and no new "highs" during the preceding week.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 144.—(A) Tell us what the negative wire of an electric power source has an affinity for. Has it any affinity for anything else? (B) Suppose we have two high voltage electric generators of equal capacity and voltage. We start them in operation and connect their poles together, positives and negatives to like poles, or the other way around. What will happen? (C) Assuming an electric generator and wire system to be thoroughly insulated throughout. Voltage of system, after passing through transformers, 10,000. Negative becomes accidentally but thoroughly grounded. What will happen?

Answer to Question No. 136

Bluebook School Question No. 136 was: "(A) Considering a plano-convex condenser, name the various sources of possible light loss. (B) Considering the reflector type lamp using a large-diameter condenser, name the various sources of light loss contained therein. (C) Considering the reflector type of lamp having no condenser, name the various sources of possible light loss. In all these include all possible sources of light losses between the light source and the film itself. (D) Would there be a very considerable difference as between the amount of light reaching the aperture when an intelligently selected, carefully adjusted, clean light-source-to-film optical system is used, and when one that is selected without expert knowledge, carelessly adjusted and kept not too clean is employed?"

I am able to pass only eight out of the several hundred answers and some of them only by a considerable use of the thing we term "charity." The following "got by," though even some of them would do well to read the published answers very carefully:

Rau and Evans, G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Lester Borst, J. Wentworth, A. Wells, H. D. Tyler and M. Domer, and C. Tamper are the eight. The answer of Rau and Evans to Section A is much the best of any. Here it is:

"(A) The various sources of light loss (using a plano-convex condenser) from light source to film are: (1) Light source too far away from face of collector lens (see Figure 36H, Page 162, Vol. 1, Bluebook). (2) Reflection of light from each of the four lens surfaces involved, which is aggravated if the lens surfaces be not well polished. (3) Absorption of light by the glass contained in the lenses themselves, the amount of which would be dependent upon the quality of the glass and will be increased if the lenses have unnecessary thickness. (4) Loss of light due to color in the lenses, which may or may not be considerable according to the kind of color. It is maximum if the tint be blue or green. [I have let this pass, though it presents room for argument. I am not myself altogether certain as to what is correct. Color alters the tone of the light. Some authorities claim that yellow, for example, does not lower the light intensity, by measurement, though as to that I am not convinced. Certainly it seems to me a yellow tint can only be present for the reason that an undue percentage of all other colors are withheld by the lenses, and if that be true—well, it certainly seems to me the screen illumination must be decreased. Glad to hear from the optical gentlemen on that. —F. H. R.] (5) Reflection of light caused by dirty lens surfaces, pitting of surface of collector lens or to poorly polished lens surfaces. (6) Unnecessary enlargements of spot at aperture. (7) Collector and converging lenses spaced too far apart. (8) Light beam obstructed by slide carrier, if same be used and left in place during projection of motion pictures. (9) Too-small free diameter of converging lens, cases of which have been encountered. (10) Condenser lenses not square with each other—impossible in modern projectors, but common in days past and gone. (11) Crater not on same plane with face of collector lens surface. [That last is poorly put. I would have said: In case of old straight arc, crater not burned at 55 degree angle with face of collector lens. In case of high intensity or High-Lo, poorly formed crater, probably due to wrong adjustment of negative carbon.—F. H. R.] (12) Converging lens plane not on same plane as film. [Poorly expressed, but think Rau and Evans have the correct idea. I would have said: Converging lens so placed that the axis of its beam is not central with the center of light source, center of aperture and center of projection lens. The planes of the converging lens and film not being the same would, of course, amount to the same thing, but is not, it seems to me, quite so understandable to men not well acquainted with optical terms.—F. H. R.] (13) Light falling on interior of lamphouse."

We will hear from G. E. Doe on Section B.

"The various losses are accounted for by (a) mirror not kept clean and well polished; (b) mirror an incorrect distance from light source, with result that light beam overlaps condenser, or does not fill it (in other words, the beam between mirror and condenser is either diverging or converging, whereas it should be a parallel beam); (c) poor mirror backing or backing in poor condition, which may be remedied by substituting another mirror; (d) spot on cooling plate too large, or else a spot so small that an abnormal amount of discolored light is carried through the aperture and on to the screen; (e) poorly formed craters; (f) wrong carbon diameter or diameters; (g) imperfect carbon feeding; (h) improper arc gap; (i) poor or damp carbons, including defective carbon cores; (j) mirror polish injured by improper cleaning; (k) rotating shutter blade or blades too wide."

We will listen to T. Van Vaulkenburg on Section C. He says:

"The losses over which the projectionist has control which is, I believe, what it is intended we shall set forth, are: First, wrong distance light source to mirror, which would automatically involve wrong distance mirror to aperture. Second, mirror not kept perfectly clean and well polished. Third, mirror surface scratched or dulled by improper cleaning. Fourth, inefficient reflecting mirror backing or backing injured by heat. Fifth, mirror center not on optical axis of system, a condition presumably not found with modern equipment, but in fact is found. Sixth, improper diameter carbons, damp carbons, poor carbons, poorly formed craters, crooked carbons, wrong arc length or poor carbon contacts which throw carbon points out of center with each other. Seventh, spot too large or too small. Eighth, rotating shutter blades too wide. Ninth, too much or too little current will effect results which will be equivalent to light waste, in that power is used without adequate results in illumination."

(D) J. Dentworth says:

"There certainly is great chance for loss and inefficiency in a projector optical train the elements of which have been either unintelligently selected or poorly adjusted, or both, and not kept perfectly clean and well polished. Such optical systems might well, in an all-day theatre using high amperage, waste so much light, which means electric power consumed without results, that a very serious addition to operating expense would result."

JENKINS' COLYUM

Springfield, Mo.

DEAR HERALD:

This town is located in the foothills of the Ozark mountains. If you don't think they are "foothills" you drive 'em once. There's a lake 115 miles long, a fishermen's paradise that would make Elmer Gailey of Wayne, Neb., wonder why he goes to Bigstone lake in Minnesota to catch a few sunfish and bullheads.

Tomorrow we expect to be close to Claremore, Oklahoma, Will Rogers' home town, but Pike Peters has sold his garage and the watermelon season has passed, so there is no use going over there.

Bob Rhea, who manages the Miller theatre in Jefferson City for the Dubinsky Brothers, formerly lived at Rogers, Nebraska. Now the name of this town won't mean much to most of the followers of this magazine, but if they had ever shot geese and ducks on the Platte river they would know right where Rogers is, and if Bob Rhea could shoot geese at Rogers as well as he can manage a theatre at Jefferson City, it's no wonder that the geese are about extinct.

Right down in the Ozark hills is a town called Rolla, and it's a right smart town. What keeps it up the Lord only knows, but something keeps it up, for L. L. Lewis has about as pretty a theatre there as you will find in most towns of 50,000 and Mr. Lewis said his business had been fairly good so far this season and better than it was last. No, we didn't misunderstand him, that's just what he said.

Last night we stayed in Lebanon. To these people here Lebanon means a whole lot, for it was the former home of Harold Bell Wright, and it was here that he wrote "The Shepherd of the Hills" while he was pastor of one of Lebanon's churches.

We visited the Lyric theatre in Lebanon which is operated by C. H. Fayant and we had a most delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Fayant during the showing of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

W. R. Wilhoit of the Ritz at Marshfield, Glen Caldwell of the Princess at Aurora and O. W. Williams of the Gilloiz of Monett, are three of Missouri's popular managers. Not only that, but they rate 100 per cent with us, and they are three of the main reasons why people should go to the Ozarks.

All three of these boys can read printing and that's what makes them strong for MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Believe it or not, we haven't found an exhibitor in Missouri that couldn't read, and we haven't found one that wasn't a swell fellow.

To drive around from place to place
And meet exhibitors face to face
Is just a lot of fun.
But we dislike to hear them tell
Their business is all shottohel
And they're completely done.

We tell them not to lose their grip
But stay by the wheel and guide the ship
Although it won't be sport,
But if they'll work with all their might
And read the Herald every night
They'll bring 'er into port.

And then there's another thing. The most discouraging thing we know of is to go into a pay rest room and find that we haven't any change, (meaning money). There ought to be a law agin 'em.

But speaking of Springfield, Barnum and Bailey's circus is here today and you couldn't find an exhibitor with a search warrant and two blondes and a brunette, so we are going right on through.

Every Theatre Should Have the Following

As a Part of its Equipment

Bluebooks on Projection, Volumes 1, 2 and 3 by F. H. Richardson

Building Theatre Patronage by John Barry and E. W. Sargent

Some of the angles dealt with in the Bluebooks on Projection are: Arc Light Source; Carbons; Condensers; Electrical Action; Projection Angle; Generators; Fuses; Insulation Lenses; Light Action; Optics; Picture Distortion; Resistance as It Applies to the Projection Circuit; Spotlights; Switches; Wiring; The Microphone; Recording Sound; Sound Reproduction; Light Valve Recording; Disc Record Recording; Cleaning and Splicing Sound Film; Photo-Electric Cell; Care of Amplifiers, Horns and Loud Speakers; Motor Control Box, etc.

Building Theatre Patronage is a treatise embracing theatre management in all details; offers suggestions on how to advertise and ballyhoo a program offering. It is more helpful than an Assistant Manager. Have it at your command.

Publix Takes Idaho House

Publix has taken over the Fox-Egyptian theatre at Boise, Idaho. The house now comes under the supervision of Harry David, Publix western division manager.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Local exhibitors, preparing for bigger business with the new season's product, are not overlooking any bets and as a result are giving special attention to the equipment, decoration and furnishings of their houses. From Barney Pearlman of National Theatre Supply Company comes a line on a few of the recent, activities in this connection. William Pracht of the Arcada theatre, St. Charles, has put in new generator equipment, projectors, lamps and screen. Jack Kirsch also has installed new projection enquipment and screen at the 20th Century. A complete remodeling and redecorating job plus much new equipment has prepared the New Evanston for reopening by the Krahl Company, and the name has been changed to the Valencia. Fred Cleveland has dolled up his Circle theatre. E. E. Alger of the State at Mendota, Ill., dug deep into his pockets to put that house in tiptop order with everything from projectors to ventilating equipment and seats. Others who applied rejuvenating remedies to their houses are Joseph Skora of the Sunnyside, John Remijas of the Acadia, Louis Rudolph of the Emmett and Russell Lamb of the Oregon, Oregon, Ill.

Joe Abramson, who has a host of friends in all branches of the business by virtue of his services with United Artists, Balaban and Katz and as secretary of the Film Board, will leave for the West Coast shortly in connection with several propositions that may bring him into the production field.

Harold Hendy of the RKO research department is in the city collecting data on Chicago's earlier days. The material is to be used to assure accuracy of settings and details in the filming of "Sweepings," a story dealing with pioneer Chicago merchants.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

IMPROVING YOUR DIET!

IF YOUR APPETITE is jaded and you're feeling at all blue about business, the depression and things in general we suggest some honey-dew melon, bran flakes, coffee AND Elmer C. Rhoden, for breakfast.

At any rate, we came away from our breakfast at the ungodly hour of eight-thirty A. M. with a stomach full of satisfaction and a feeling that we had had the pleasure of a most interesting hour with one of the country's representative showmen. A leader of men and a success, in our estimation, because he possesses that rare knowledge of men that makes for organization spirit, E. C. Rhoden stands in the front ranks of today's best theatre executives and a model for all others who would accomplish real things.

WE HAD LONG HARBORED a keen desire to meet this man chiefly because he was one of the few we were hearing nice things about from his own house managers. Believe it or not, we can tell you plenty about most of the circuit bosses by just reading between the lines of our daily mail. In the case of Mr. Rhoden, we were almost inclined to discover wings sprouting from his shoulders and some sort of a halo above his head. Imagine our delight to walk in on him and to find that he was just as human a man as one could hope to meet.

LET'S TRY TO DIG a little beneath the surface of this divisional head. Why is he, first of all, a success in the eyes of his managers? I'll tell you why. Their welfare and future is one of his chief concerns. To reward ability and loyalty with promotion and a chance for a future has long been a fetish with him. He can get more satisfaction out of seeing a man progress up the ladder than most other executives get out of seeing a profit on the weekly statement. And that's saying a heck of a lot for anybody in this business, where many have completely forgotten that success in manpower must of a certainty spell success for the theatres too.

DISCUSSIONS ABOUT MANPOWER, a square deal for the manager and the importance of morale are beginning to sound trite, yet, how can one overlook such important factors in successful theatre operation? How far can any group of houses go when the individuals who are running the theatres are lacking in incentive, enthusiasm and loyalty? Does it not stand to reason that when an executive admits the real value of manpower it is because he is man enough to admit that he alone, sitting in a swivel chair, cannot make his houses profitable or efficiently operated?

"IF THIS BUSINESS had a few dozen more men like H. E. Jameyson it would be a better business for everybody," said Rhoden. To which we mentally uttered a solemn "Amen." Isn't that recognizing ability and loyalty? We'll say it is. And when he further stated that he was in favor of rewarding a manager with a transfer when such a transfer meant a better house and more money, then we chalked up his market value still higher.

To those who are fortunate enough to be working within that domain under the guidance of Mr. Rhoden we must say that it is their good fortune and if the rest of the showmen in this country were equally as sure of recognition and advancement, with that comfortable future at the end of the rainbow, as the boys of this particular division, then all would indeed be well.

IN MEETING AND MAKING the acquaintance of Elmer C. Rhoden we have acquired a much brighter outlook on the future of showbusiness and the chances for the men in the ranks of his division to succeed to the higher positions rightfully due those who work hard and succeed. Only through honest promotions from the ranks can our business hope to continue its march of progress under the direction of competent and highly trained executives.

AN OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENT is worthy of unusual mention and in this connection we cannot refrain from commenting upon the marvelous piece of showmanship engineered and successfully put across by Zack Freedman at the Skouras Audubon Theatre here in New York. It is described in more detail on the next page, yet hardly does justice to the really powerful box office effect it is having and will have for the theatre.

Incidentally, Zack showed rare judgment and some fast thinking while handling a Bermuda trip giveaway on the same night we visited him. And what a swell M. C. this modern "Adonis" makes upon the stage. Bet it makes Irene's heart palpitate every time she sees him up there.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

STENOGS. USED FOR EXPLOITING PICTURE IN WORK'S DIVISION

The "stenographer angle" of "Age of Consent" was successfully used a short time ago by Cliff Work's RKO division out at Los Angeles.

In exchange for a trailer tie-up, a chain of restaurants in the city agreed to supply breakfasts (orange juice, coffee and toast) for stenographers so that they might attend a "Breakfast Preview" at 7:30 a. m. It was arranged so that the idea apparently originated with Dorothy Wilson, the star, who was a stenographer in the business offices of the RKO Radio studios prior to making good with her screen test.

The stenographer idea was also used in Salt Lake City by tying up a business college to circularize "stenogs" with penny post cards on the back of which, in shorthand, was this message: "From one stenographer to another—I used to do a job like yours, hoped to be a movie star and my wish came true. I hope you will like me and write me a note telling me so. I promise I'll never be high-hat, sister, and I wish my good luck could be yours, too. My picture is called 'Age of Consent' and is at the RKO Orpheum starting Friday. Please see it and tell me you're for me. Thanks, honey. —Dorothy Wilson."

FREEDMAN'S LOCAL MOVIE IS ENDORSED BY GOV. ROOSEVELT

Credit Zack Freedman of the Skouras Audubon Theatre in New York with one of the best business builders of the year in which he definitely tied the chief executive of the State, Democratic Presidential Nominee Roosevelt, into a local motion picture that bids fair to becoming a smashing box office idea.

About two years ago Gov. Roosevelt addressed a gathering of people in the Washington Heights section of New York (where the Audubon Theatre is located) and stressed the important historical background of the community. At that time he hoped that some progressive citizen would be instrumental in the making of a motion picture record along such lines.

Now, at a time when Mr. Roosevelt's name is a household word throughout the nation, Zack has successfully promoted just such a picture which is being produced in Washington Heights with a complete local cast.

In the selection of the cast, screen tests, etc., were made on the stage of the theatre and considerable interest was created in both the theatre and the picture to be produced. Altogether, Zack figures, some some twenty thousand people living within a short radius of the Audubon Theatre will participate and he has worked out his plans so that the schools, fire and police departments, Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs and Chamber of Commerce are all tied in to the picture.

As a matter of record we want to emphasize at this time that the entire cost of the picture and all expenses in connection with it will be paid for by the Chamber. Not one cent is being paid by the theatre, yet they will derive the tremendous business that is bound to flow into the theatre when the picture is exhibited.

Members of the Chamber of Commerce will benefit by reason of several shots in the picture being taken at their respective stores, but no direct advertising will actually be injected at any time.

To further impress the local people and get them enthused, Freedman journeyed to Hyde Park, the home of Roosevelt, and had a Movietone show taken in which the Governor endorsed the idea and wished the theatre success in their endeavor to carry out his two-year-old wish for just such a picture. This newsreel shot was shown at the Audubon and attracted no little attention, especially where the Governor shook hands with Zack and sent his felicitations to the people of Washington Heights.

Coming at a time when the eyes of the country are focused on the presidential nominee, it can be considered one of the best scoops ever worked out and one which has brought Freedman no end of congratulations for his efforts.

The enlargement of a picture showing the Governor shaking hands with the Audubon manager is shown here with this story about a swell piece of showmanship.

The completed picture will be featured at the theatre for four days starting September 19th and immediately after the close of the engagement we will convey the results, from the box office point of view, on how big the natives will go, in a business way, for this fine promotion.

This idea of Freedman's causes us to wonder whether other theatres cannot promote something along the same lines for their theatre and community. Surely there is some slant that can be blown up to create a demand for some sort of a local picture, sponsored and paid for by the local Chamber of Commerce.

We suggest that you give this idea some serious consideration and possibly work out something along the same lines. By keeping the footage of the picture down to about two reels you may be able to get the idea and cost of the stunt over successfully.

GRIFFIN HONORED ON 13TH ANNIVERSARY BY LARGE BIRTHDAY CAKE

The picture you see here represents the huge cake baked in honor of the Thirteenth Anniversary of C. C. Griffin's ownership of the New Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, Calif., and we are indebted to Manager Lloyd Townsend for sending it in to this department.

The big piece of pastry weighed 100 pounds and was donated by the baking division of a chain store company. Over 1,300 people were served small portions of the cake. In conjunction, local merchants contributed $500 worth of give-aways for the event. As an added attraction the Mayors of Oakland and Piedmont were guest speakers. Doors opened at 6:30 p. m. and at 7.15 the S. R. O. sign had to be dusted off. The entire celebration only set the theatre back $25.

While we are on the subject of the showselling activities of Managing Director Griffin and Manager Townsend, let us call attention to a monthly calendar they get out. These appear very popular among Pacific coast theatre men and many others in various parts of this country. This one, however, is unique in that starting time of the feature is included. It's a neat little idea and one that should make a hit with all patrons.

PAUL SHORT LAUDED BY A COLUMNIST IN A DALLAS NEWSPAPER

Thanks to Johnnie Stanfill, publicity director of the Paramount Theatre, St. Paul, we are able to publish some very nice lines the "Dallas Daily Times" recently printed concerning Paul Short, manager of the Old Mill Theatre. Here they are:

> "If Paul Short, Old Mill manager, was the kind of fellow whose hats get smaller when nice things are said about him, some of the chapeau stores might have been doing more business Wednesday. But he isn't, and they probably didn't. The thought is fathered by what Fred M. Jack, division manager for Warner Bros., said about the fine young Carolinian Tuesday night at the Warner preview.
> "'This show,' Mr. Jack told an audience that packed the Melba, 'is made possible in this fine theatre, particularly through the effort of Paul Short, manager of the Old Mill, and what I mean, the finest manager this or any other town ever had.'
> "And Fred meant it, because Short is."

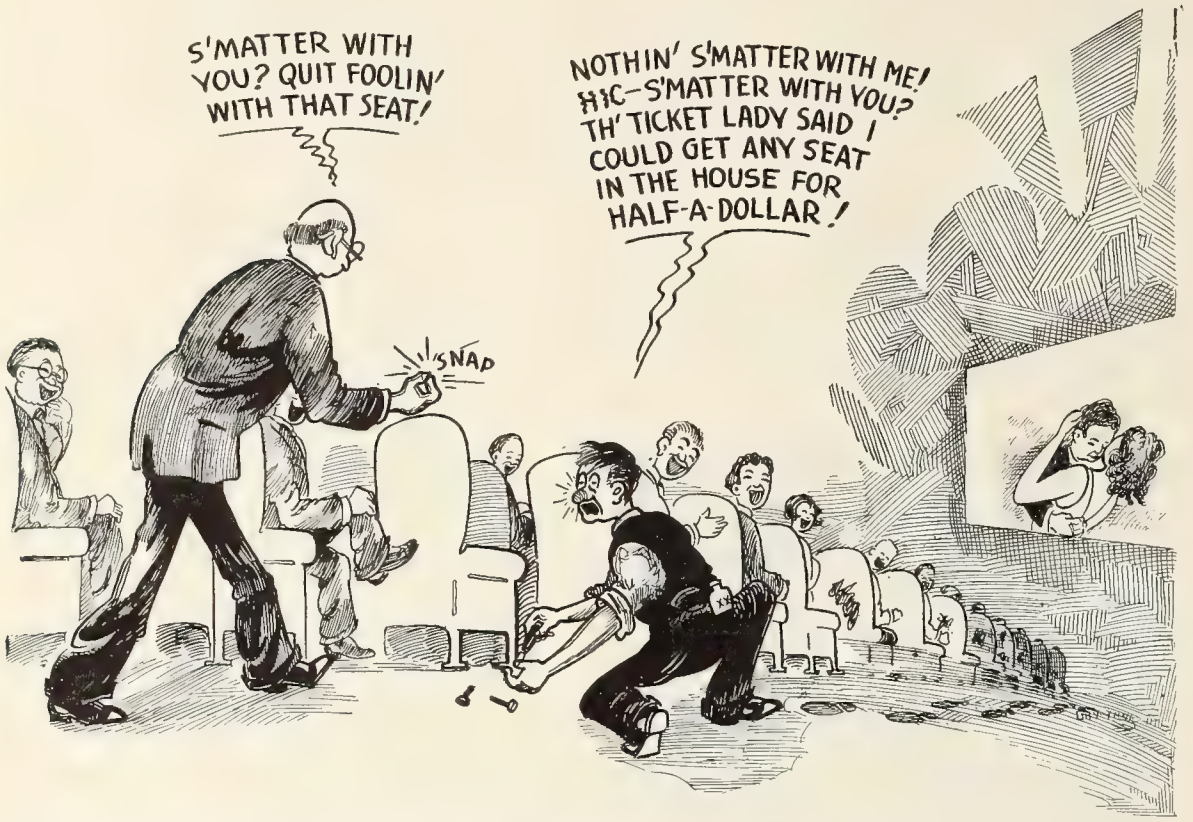
Certainly a nice testimonial from both Fred M. Jack and the newspaperman. We've heard a lot of other praise for Paul Short's ability as a showman and hope he'll find time to tell his fellow Round Tablers just what they're slapping him on the back for now. Come through, Paul. We can't leave it all to Johnnie—'way up in St. Paul—to tell us what you're up to.



Carroll On the Job!

Just to let you know that the recent eclipse furnished incentive other than stimulus to scientists and curious minded folk, we're calling attention to a tie-in made with the sun and the moon by L. W. Carroll, manager of the Flynn Theatre, Burlington, Vt. On the day of the eclipse he broke in both afternoon and evening papers with ads bearing the catchline: "Entertainment Value That Can't Be Eclipsed."

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Just a small example of what prohibition has done for the theatre.

AUGUST WAS RATHER TORRID OUT IN YUMA, REPORTS "CAROLINA"

Not long ago we mentioned that in his spare moments, if any, Carolina Brunson, manager of the Yuma Theatre, Yuma, Ariz., habitually haunts any spot where there may be a cooling draft from an electric fan and prays for rain.

A U. S. Weather Dept. report on August weather conditions in and around Yuma discloses that the mean temperature for that period was 105 degrees in the shade. On Aug. 20th the mercury touched 111, and for four days thereafter it hung at 110. A fifty one-hundredth trace of moisture is reported for the entire month. On the other hand, the reverse side of the report indicates that a 63-year average for August is 0.57 inch; that humidity was dry and normal; that the cotton crop is in a very satisfactory condition, and that the alfalfa seed harvest was completed in good weather. However, the Colorado River fell off about 300,000 ac. ft., whatever those are, and that's not so good.

Cheer up, Carolina, and let's hope that by this time you and the frogs have prevailed upon the weather man to ease things up a bit. Keep on praying. We will take the matter up with Hoover. Of course, he's responsible.

Warners Increase Tab

Popularity of the "Movie News," a 16 page weekly fan paper issued by Warner Bros. in the Metropolitan district and edited by Meyer Beck of the publicity department, is seen in a recent increase of the print order from 75,000 to 100,000 copies. It is a self-supporting paper and devoted to news and feature stories of Warner-First National stars. It also contains a Broadway column, beauty hints, Harlem night life notes, a fashion column, "dining out," and reviews of pictures current in Warner houses.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here is the brand of art work being used by Manager E. L. Hickey of the State Theatre in Manchester, N. H. As a matter of fact we thought it was one of the best examples of theatre art contributed to this series and worthy of mention accordingly.

The artist, in this case, has injected a certain life-like appeal into his subject and the inclusion of the few flourishes of lines in the background has lent a most unusual effect. We feel that other artists will agree with this reaction.

Let's have some more, Hickey.

NO MATS AT HAND, THAMES ACHIEVED AN ATTRACTIVE AD

A newspaper advertisement to lay out and some slip-up caused delay in arrival of mats. . . . what to do? Will you let it ride and arrange for some unattractive type set-up or, as in the case of Jimmy Thames, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., use the intelligence nature bestowed on the average human and rig up a substitute that will fit the occasion?

The small illustration here is an excellent and shining example of what can be done under circumstances stated above. No mats were available on "Downstairs" and Jimmy turned out a composite by using a photo of Virginia Bruce from a still on "Sky Bride" and one of Gilbert in "West of Broadway." It was a last minute attempt to get an ad in the paper which would attract. We think he did mighty well.

A couple other of Thames' ads at hand show that he is well versed in the art of shaping up attractive ads via the mat and scissor method. An attention-getting catch-line here—a head mat placed at the proper angle there—some rules not too heavy in the right places, and appealing copy, all combine to deliver a message that will be read.

But to get back to the composite ad he made up to bridge an emergency. Perhaps some other Round Tabler will be up against the same problem some day and will find Thames' suggestion a welcome one to help him out of his difficulties. Thanks to him for passing it along, and we'll be on watch for more of his "first aids" and other show-selling information.

CUT-OUTS OF STAR MOUNTED FOR BALLY BY C. W. CORRIGAN

The mounting of two Cagney cutouts in fighting pose on a truck made an excellent bally for C. W. Corrigan, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Chicago, for his showing of "Winner Take All." The truck was driven through principal streets of the town and the display proved quite a novelty.

In addition to the above, Corrigan arranged a tie-up with "White City," a large amusement centre in Chicago, for the printing and distribution of several thousand cards, one side of which carried illustrations and copy on picture while the other advertised the week's prize fight program at the amusement park.

Both of Corrigan's stunts helped the exceptional business enjoyed by the Cagney picture during its engagement.

PLANNING YOUR ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION FOR B.O. RESULTS!

Much Can Be Accomplished Through Cooperative Tie-ups and a Campaign That Will Point to Definite Results!

THIS anniversary campaign wasn't to be planned for a couple of weeks. But due to the many requests which have come in, "Chick" asked me to prepare a suggested outline for this issue. Anything to please!

So, in desperation I am hastily pounding out a few tried suggestions before press time, trusting that, with due changes, you may find them of some value in preparing an anniversary campaign.

Ample Time

The length of your advance campaign will be determined by the type of program activity you plan. Three or four weeks is not too long where valuable gifts are promoted for give-aways. Ten days should be the minimum.

First Point of Contact

I am going to omit a lot of useless words right here in taking for granted that each and every one of you who contemplates an anniversary campaign recognizes the logical starting point . . . your theatre. This covers considerable ground—trailers, lobby, front, marquee and programs, if you use them. As we go along, mention will be made of specific ideas in regard to these points of contact.

Newspapers

Local newspapers will play an important part in your sales activities. The most significant of these will be your regular ads. Your anniversary campaign can be assisted to a climax through the use of regular announcement copy in your daily ads. For example: "Watch for the Strand's GALA BIRTHDAY PARTY—to be celebrated the week of October 9th." That for a starter. Subsequent copy will carry more news about the big event until Anniversary Week is reached, Then, your bold catchline might read, "OUR THIRD BIRTHDAY!" . . . "THE STRAND'S FIRST ANNIVERSARY!" or GALA ANNIVERSARY WEEK!" Reference is made here to Anniversary Week, assuming that most operations will extend their activities over that period of time with a thought to the B.O.

Try planting an interesting story about the theatre with the local paper. There should be considerable data on hand for this sort of thing whether the theatre is one year old or ten. The approximate number of theatregoers who have passed the ticket-taker since the house first opened . . . the approximate number of miles of film run through the projector . . . steps taken to improve the house from time to time, considering sound, comfort, appearance, etc. These and many other subjects can be made into interesting news items. Your house may be on an old landmark, which offers really interesting historical material for another story. It is understood any such publicity will tie-in appropriately with the coming anniversary celebration.

In this, the third of Floyd Fitzsimmons' special manuals, he has set forth a most complete and clean-cut plan for working out a successful Theatre Anniversary.

We must, however, add a word of caution. Many of the suggestions, if not handled properly, are apt to fall under the lottery laws and thereby cause trouble. We assume that in any activity for your theatre you are careful to avoid any violations or in any way antagonize the authorities.

In every respect you will find this a most helpful and handy manual and one designed to smooth your way to working out the suggestions contained herein. Floyd is well qualified to contribute such a manual by reason of his long connection with Paramount-Publix where, until just recently, he was engaged in doing this sort of work.

To Create Interest

For increased attendance over a period of three or four weeks, there must be some inducement for patrons other than your regular show. Mention has been made of gifts, but up to now nothing has been said of where and how to get them. The success, from a box-office standpoint, of any anniversary campaign hinges upon the promotion of worthwhile gifts. True, there are other methods of getting extra money into the box-office—i. e. fashion shows, local talent shows, etc. However, this program is outlined purely from a mercenary point of view and is entirely aside from those activities which can be called upon for increased attendance during other months of the year.

Apart from the feature pictures you are going to show during anniversary week, the backbone of your sales talk will be three outstanding birthday gifts, promoted for the occasion on the basis of free publicity and advertising. Yes, it's the old gag. You are going to have to put on your best salesmanship suit and sally forth to talk Mr. Merchant out of some merchandise. If his resistance is stubborn you will have to work harder, that's all. But with what you have to offer, and business conditions in general more promising, it is probable he will lend a keen ear to what you have to say.

What determines suitable gifts will depend upon the size of your locality and theatre. You realize that the more valuable the gifts the more inducement to attend your theatre. Therefore, let's suggest to ourselves some really inviting box-office stimulators: an automobile; $200 in gold; a Frigidaire; a woman's expensive fur coat; a drawing account on some department store for $200; an up-to-the-minute radio; a man's or woman's complete outfit consisting of suit, hat, shoes, shirt and tie—or for the woman, dress, shoes, hats, gloves and stockings. It is impractical to name any set list of articles here. Anyone of those just mentioned might serve as a major gift in one operation and minor in another, with the possible exception of the automobile. The idea remains the same no matter what the items may be.

When you broach Mr. Merchant upon the subject, don't fail to stress the no-cost advertising you offer him. Trailers, lobby space for the merchandise to be given away, with due credits, newspaper publicity, mailing lists, etc. Three or four weeks of this is going to reach more potential customers than could be done through the use of regular newspaper space. Unfortunately no hard and fast rules can be set down or followed in an effort to secure these gifts. Frankly, your personality and the confidence a fellow business man has in you and your theatre are two extremely important factors.

Follow Floyd Fitzsimmons' Suggestions in This Manual; Will Save You Plenty of Unnecessary Effort and Worry!

Many managers have been successful in securing major items through the co-operation of a group of merchants, rather than from individual dealers. The thought here is that the cost of the giveaway is borne by several merchants who share equally in the advertising profits and good-will. This is, however, an entirely different angle than the campaign outlined here.

Presentation

For the sake of example, we'll assume you have promoted from local dealers, a Ford coach, a Frigidaire, and a woman's fur coat. I know some of you fellows are saying right now, "Yeah, it's easy to do on paper." But seriously, it is being accomplished regularly in many towns throughou the country. As previously stated, much depends upon the size of your town, the theatre and its location. Naturally, no local dealer or merchant is going to give a valuable piece of merchandise to some small neighborhood house, in exchange for the same advertising mediums he could get from a bigger downtown theatre catering to twice or three times the number of patrons. If you can show him where your weekly turn-over is varied and that your patrons are potential customers of his, all well and good. The promotion is as good as set right here.

The three major gifts should be given away on the last night. If desired, additional awards of Guest Tickets to the theatre, good for one month, can be included.

The cost of programs can be divided between the participating merchants and the theatre. Apportionment of space can be decided upon between them. Page one, after the style of a cover, might carry a Star's picture, or a cut of the theatre, a coming attraction announcement and essential copy regarding the gifts.

For page two, an attractive layout of your current program, in addition to a special box with graphic copy, for example:

> "During the week of .....
> we will be celebrating our 4th Anniversary as a (town) Institution. To make this gala occasion of particular interest to our patrons we have secured three valuable presents—(list presents)—to be given away. Winners will be selected on ..... > at (time) and will be posted in the lobby for comparison by those who do not happen to the present.

Distribution of programs should be discreetly handled by an usher.

Should you use the suggested mailing list card, here is appropriate copy for such card or slip to be handed to all patrons:

Valuable! Do Not Destroy!

This slip of paper (or card) represents $2,000 in gifts. Write your name and address plainly in the space provided below. Deposit it in the box in the lobby of this theatre.

Please send me announcements of coming attractions at the STRAND.
Name .....
Street No. .....
City and State .....

More details regarding selection of winners, credits, etc., can be given in your trailer, thereby eliminating repetition of copy on the address card.

Birthday Cake

Contact one of your local bakeries on promoting a huge birthday cake in honor of the theatre's anniversary. The cake can be put on display in the lobby of the theatre or the window of the bakery if conspicuously located. To inject a bit of interest into the display, announce that to the five persons guessing nearest the correct weight of the cake, theatre tickets, good during Anniversary Week, will be given. EVERYBODY ELIGIBLE.

You may be successful in getting a picture of the big birthday cake into the newspaper, especially if you give the cake to some children's institution at the end of Anniversary Week.

If your bakery supplies pies, bread, etc., in great quantities locally, you might sell them on the idea of purchasing a block of tickets to be given to their customers. Announcement is made through an insert wrapped in all loaves of bread, pastry, etc. Attention is directed to the fact that the tickets are good for the Strand's BIG ANNIVERSARY PROGRAM the week of October 9th. At least this and as much more copy as you can secure.

Bank Account for Kiddies

A familiar stunt to many annniversary campaigns is the one where a theatre offers to start a Savings Bank Account for any (or the first) child born on the theatre's birthday. An announcement ad, paid for by the bank, is placed in local papers a week a more in advance of the set date. This allows ample time for comment and advance publicity. The stunt is always good for several newspaper stories. The co-operation of the bank is solicited on the basis of copy along these lines:

The STRAND THEATRE selects FIRST NATIONAL BANK as a depository for the bank account of BLANKTOWN BABIES. For every child born in Blanktown on (date) the STRAND THEATRE will open a $0.00 bank account with this institution.

This is suggested copy, which should be set in ad form, using not less than 3 cols. x 9 ins. A cut of a baby's head can be used in the center of the ad for emphasis. Subsequent copy concerning details might be as follows:

Every (or the first) baby born in Blanktown between the hours of 12 midnight (date) and 12 midnight (date) will, upon a signed statement by the attending doctor, be presented with a Savings Bank Account of $0.00 by the (theatre). No acknowledgements of birth will be recognized unless reported to the manager of the theatre not later than (date).

A complete layout of this ad will be furnished to anyone supplying the dates, names, etc. Just send them in to "Chick" Lewis and a layout sketch will be sent to you as quickly as possible.

Others Celebrating Anniversary

Through a newspaper story invite married couples who are celebrating their anniversary on the same day as the theatre or any time during Anniversary Week. You can add more interest to this by making a special effort to invite the oldest married couple celebrating their Anniversary between the set dates for your celebration.

Possibly a merchant in the neighborhood is celebrating his anniversary during the same week. Suggest his tie-ing in with the theatre in making the event more noticeable.

This brings out the thought of a page or more of congratulatory ads solicited by the newspaper from business houses and merchants.

Stage or Lobby Dance

If your stage or lobby is big enough, announce that a party and dance will be held on the last night of the week. Or, hold the dance on any convenient night. You may be fortunate enough to promote an orchestra for the occasion as well as ice cream and cake. If not an orchestra, a radio. The younger element will thoroughly enjoy this.

To augment the dance festivities, contact your local florist to decorate the lobby in exchange for credit. If this doesn't appeal to you, perhaps a Kiddies Flower matinee in the morning will. A special show being run off for kiddies under the age of 14, each youngster bringing a bouquet of flowers being admitted free. The flower matinee, of course, is part of the theatre's Anniversary Celebration in this instance, no intimation being given that it is held primarly for the flowers.

Special Mailing Announcements

Much desired comment can be gained by getting out a special mailing piece, calling attention to your complete anniversary program. Use the mailing lists of those merchants with whom you are co-operating as well as your own. Make certain your announcements reach all womens' clubs, girls' sororities, etc. Generally they can be depended upon for word-of-mouth publicity and a keen interest in the gifts to be presented.

Bill Posting

Billing will not interest many managers unless it is one of their regular mediums. Where it is, appropriate anniversary copy, calling attention to the big program during Anniversary Week, will prove effective in selling the importance of the event.

Marquee and Front

This is not mentioned last because it is least important but because it is the one place which needs the greatest attention first and last. Theatregoers are not going to be impressed, no matter how much outside activity is prevalent, unless your house front signifies a similar atmosphere.

What to do about it? The suggestion is made here that a complete renovation be made if necessary. A little soap and water would do much to brighten up many a theatre front . . . and no one can complain about the expense of that.

If you have the facilities, either at your own or a local art shop, construct a huge birthday cake to be set on top of the marquee during Anniversary Week. Compo board candles, the required number, can be made in proportion to the size of the cake and lighted by ordinary electric bulbs.

Where this is impossible, perhaps the construction of huge candles alone will do the trick. Place them along the front of your marquee with cut-out words "Fourth Anniversary Celebration," or "Our Fourth Anniversary." Burgees, pennants, flags and banners will add more color. Plan to use a maximum of light at night throughout Anniversary Week. The cheerfulness which your theatre front expresses in its brightness will surprise you in returns at the box-office. The soffits of hundreds of marquees are painted in some dull color, thereby robbing all possibility of maximum light from the number of bulbs being used. Needless to say, white is the most reflecting color.

Remember, your theatre front is your display window and the display of any merchandise is of the highest importance. Ask yourself the truth of that statement the next time you look into any downtown store window.

Finis

You may find some of the suggested activities herein not sufficiently clear, or incomplete for your particular operation. That being the case, you may feel free to drop a note to this department, explaining as far as possible, just what you would like to have. If at all possible, we shall try to accommodate you with a reply that is more pertinent.

For his next manual, Floyd Fitzsimmons has selected one that is particularly timely:

"ON THE CAMPUS"

— in which he will discuss and describe how you can best capitalize on the many important and valuable slants involving your local schools, colleges, etc.

Many requests have been received for this type of manual and Floyd has willingly complied with our suggestion. Remember, a limited number of reprints will be available for circuit groups and others who need them.

BRAKE HAS A "MOM AND POP" CLUB THAT IS GOING OVER GREAT

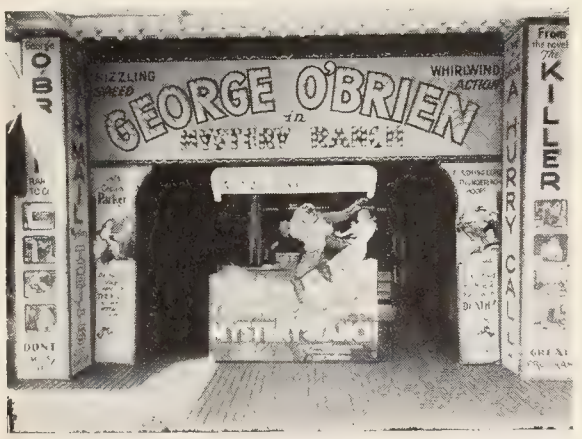
A tremendous amount of free newspaper publicity was and is being obtained by P. O. Brake, manager of the Strand Theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., as the result of a three-cornered tie-up between theatre, paper, and an ice cream dealer. Since it was started early this summer and was still in effect at the time the information reached us in July, it is not too much to assume that the stunt is still going as strong as ever.

Brake's idea is called a "Mom and Pop" Club and the scheme behind the move is to have youngsters clip printed notices out of the newspaper and present them at the theatre box office along with a 10-cent admission for a Saturday morning matinee. Ten of the notices properly stamped at the box office entitle the youngster to bring his "Mom and Pop" to the theatre free of charge. Each Saturday morning an ice cream truck is on hand at the theatre to distribute free ice cream cones to the kiddies.

On the surface it may appear, as Brake states, that a great many adult tickets are given away free of charge. However, this has not proved to be the case for reason that there is a decided difference in the number of kids saving the 10 tickets and those who attend each matinee. Incidentally, the tickets do not have to be clipped from consecutive issues, but must bear different identifying marks.

Recently the large newspaper ads, such as the one reproduced here, have carried a line of copy reading, "It Is Not Too Late—Join the Club Now!" Just as long as the newspaper does not balk at this the line obligates the paper to carry on for 10 more weeks. However, the paper appears to be very well satisfied with results and the ice cream firm likewise in lieu of the publicity it is receiving from the big display truck parked in front of the theatre and the resultant word-of-mouth advertising from the youngsters.

Still another tie-up he used over a 10-week period was a deal he made with a dairy concern for the distribution of 5,000 milk bottle collars. These were made up in the form of a small lamp shade and fitted snugly over the neck of the bottle. A number of them were made good for admissions and this deal was particularly effective in the matter of bringing people to the theatre to see if they were in line for a free show.



A HARVEST MONTH DISPLAY!

Another example of beautiful and timely display work as turned out by Jack Greiner of the Warner Theatres in Atlantic City, N. J., and particularly appropriate for next month. If you have thought of anything along these lines we are hopeful that this photo will act as a stimulus. Especially the October farm products shown in the display.

The dairy stood the entire cost of three hundred dollars for the collars, printing, etc.

The other illustration shows one of the wall board fronts that Brake has been using to excellent results. These can be used over and over again by repainting and keep the cost down to $15 for each change of copy. The top part for the lights has to be renewed, but even with that the cost will not exceed the stated amount. The light feature has often been spoken of as a great gag for an under-marquee sign. Holes are cut in the board for the sockets and wired accordingly, making a striking display over the entrance to lobby.

We also note that Brake has been using the old Peep-Box and this is as good a time as any to remind other Club members that there are a lot of people who will get a good-sized kick out of one of these affairs. All you need is a box large enough to carry copy that can be easily read and a hole large enough to peep through at either side in upper portion. By placing a sheet of nickeled zinc behind the holes, bending it slightly, the effect is to see your own features considerably distorted but still recognizable. The usual reaction is to pass the word on to some one else to look in the box. Brake states the gag was good for a four-day stand. In case some one wants to repeat on this one and wants a guide to copy the following was used: "If You Are Subject to Shock—Don't Look—Behind the Mask—Is This the Murdering Monster?—Is This the Fiery Fiend Who by Death Lived?—Skilled Torture—Clever Cruelty—Bloody Hands." Arrows pointed to the peep-hole.

A year's use of the classified page stunt in a local newspaper has convinced Brake of the worth of this means of advertising. He handles it just the same as has often been described in this department, scattering the names of five newspaper subscribers among the ads and stating in a display ad in the center or top of the page that each subscriber will be rewarded with a pair of guest tickets by calling Classified Desk.

Considering the size of the ad granted the theatre by the newspaper, it appears that Brake is getting a whole lot of space for a pair of tickets. The fact that the paper has sponsored the move for an entire year also speaks for that end of the deal. Let us stress the fact that Brake is getting a fine display by using mats and effective copy and his ad is not by any means comparable to some of the dead ones we've had occasion to look at on classified pages. Looks as though it's just a matter of smart trading.

We've enjoyed looking over Brake's work just as much as he tells us he has enjoyed reading over the many worthwhile suggestions that this department has carried from time to time. While we haven't had the privilege of publishing examples of his work except at long intervals, we hope that he will let us hear more often from him in the future, particularly since he has a big tie-up under way with a large baking concern and we know all his friends and fellow Club members will want to know the details. So 'till next time we'll sign off on Battle Creek.

CHAPLIN RE-ISSUES GETTING ATTENTION FROM LOU METZGER

Lou Metzger, former general sales manager for Columbia Pictures Corp., and now operating the New Spreckles Theatre, San Diego, Calif., recently demonstrated his ability as an accomplished showman by putting over a novel stunt during the pre-release run of "Easy Street," first of RKO's Chaplin re-issues with sound.

For one thing he saw that all city refuse and waste cans were decorated with one-sheets on the film. As a means of attracting attention from the youngsters, he arranged to give away a pony to the best juvenile impersonator of Chaplin. The entire aggregation of imitators of the comedian formed into ranks about twelve blocks away from the theatre and marched through the streets.

LLOYD HAUSE USED MANY STUNTS WHEN SELLING CARNIVAL

Publix Carnival Week was the occasion for considerable activity on the part of Lloyd Hause, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Bloomsburg, Pa., when this event was celebrated in William Schmidt's division.

To open the Week Hause secured a full page co-op ad from a local shoe concern, in return for a lobby display one week prior to opening. Other effort included a tie-up with a bus company for a free ride home from theatre on payment of one way fare; distribution of 5,000 cards among patrons one week in advance; all busses traveling within 25 mile radius of Bloomsburg bannered with Carnival signs; a tie-up with local manufacturing concern for insertion of special card in pay envelopes, listing attractions and identifying bearer as an employee and admitting him to theatre at regular matinee price, and another tie-up with a dairy company for distribution of milk bottle hangers.

A different stage attraction was used each night of the week, Monday presenting a pro sister team; Tuesday, a tumbling act; Wednesday, an orchestra; Thursday, a band act, and Friday, a group of colored entertainers. All acts were secured without cost to the theatre.

ANDERSON EXPLOITED FILM SUCCESSFULLY WITH A CARD STUNT

A card gag was successfully used to exploit a picture by C. B. Anderson, manager of the Strand Theatre, McComb, Miss.

He took the title of "Cock of the Air" and had 3,000 cards printed up. One side carried a letter of a word spelling the title and the other some appropriate copy on the picture and notice that a full set of the 12 cards would entitle the holder to a guest ticket. Only 29 of the "K" cards, the key letter, came in; however, interest was at fever heat, particularly with the kiddies. Grown-ups, too, tried to complete the set and the picture received a lot of word-of-mouth advertising.

We're mighty glad to hear from Anderson again and hope he'll keep his Club posted more often in the future. He went to McComb a couple of years ago and made a live theatre out of a dead one, according to what we hear, and he's the sort of man who can contribute some interesting information to this department. Some time, when he has an opportunity, maybe he'll set down in words his recipe for tackling a proposition of that kind. In the meantime, we wish him continued success.

STANFORD PRESENTED TROPHY AS MOVE TO CURTAIL OPPOSITION

One of our recently elected members, Allison Stanford, manager of the Fox-Hanford Theatre, Hanford, Calif., gained a lot of valuable publicity and good will a short time ago when he arranged with the local Mayor for presentation of a trophy to the winning team of the Merchants' Night Baseball League. The event rated a deep, two column photo and caption on the sports page, showing the Mayor, Stanford and the trophy.

Stanford, like many other Round Tablers, has found that much more good can be accomplished through cooperation than going to the mat when moves are made that cut into theatre patronage. Since the night baseball club was sponsored by the merchants, he, too, was interested.

ROSENTHAL STAGED GOOD CAMPAIGN ON AN ANIMAL PICTURE

Prior to leaving the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., to take over the reins of the Rialto at Little Falls, N. Y., Morris Rosenthal's farewell campaign effort was dedicated to the cause of "Congorilla."

As you can see from the accompanying photo, which shows the theatre front and a close-up of the display, he transformed the inside lobby into a jungle of trees and foliage. For a background he secured a number of stuffed animals and arranged them so that they appeared to be peeping out of the jungle. Cutout heads of lions and tigers and one of two apes dancing, lent further atmosphere to the general scheme. A 24-sheet, foliage, etc., also made a jungle scene out of the front.

Additional effort included use of a sound truck on the streets for two days; placing of circus heralds in every car on every street for a two day period; spotting of special cards in downtown stores; placing of 20 cutout heads of apes around marquee; extra newspaper space; a tie-up with downtown restaurants to carry program on menus, and the insertion of frames in leading hotels and store windows.

As the result of the campaign described above, Rosenthal opened up to a midnight preview and broke the house record for an opening day. He's now getting acquainted around Little Falls, from where he will also have supervision of Skouras theatres in Herkimer and Ilion, N. Y.

SEVERAL EFFECTIVE STUNTS PROMOTED BY GIRTON ON CARNIVAL

A number of effective promotional stunts were engineered in connection with the Publix Carnival Week drive made down in the division of William Schmidt by Warren C. Girton, manager of the Keystone Theatre, Williamsport, Pa.

For one thing he contacted a local printer for the costless printing of 100 one-sheets, 200 window cards and 5,000 heralds. Ad of the Keystone was also carried at the Capitol Theatre.

The week's activities included a guest organist and a one-man band on Monday night; broadcast by a local radio station of programs direct from theatre stage on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, with regular radio studio props; final awards of ten loving cups made for Baby Contest on Thursday night, and entertainment on stage by a local dancing class.

At the Saturday morning matinee the local Buck Jones Rangers Club was organized with the help of a man who had spent a number of years on a ranch. He gave a brief talk and displayed his ranch equipment to the youngsters. Candy was also promoted for distribution at this matinee.

IT'S TIME TO FIX UP!

For something like two years, thousands of theatres have been putting off many much needed repairs and replacements in equipment due to the much talked-about depression.

Result; most of these theatres are about ready to fall to pieces.

You cannot run a theatre without proper equipment; and that equipment must be in tip-top shape to carry the load day after day and in many cases continuously for ten to fourteen hours on a stretch. It is an awful strain on well-conditioned equipment to function under such circumstances, but, allow that equipment to become worn out and neglect to make much needed repairs and replacements and you are operating every moment with a sword hanging over your head.

Breakdowns are costly. Not alone in dollars and cents charges for repairs, but in lost prestige and goodwill from patrons who have every reason and right to expect a perfect show for their admission fee.

No patron can think well of a theatre with loose and broken seats. Ripped carpets to trip over. Torn leather on the chairs. A preponderance of burnt-out bulbs. A screen that has long since faded and is making the picture look dead and flat. Projection that is far below par due to old-fashioned or worn out lamp houses and arcs.

These represent but a few of the items. A check-up of your own house will in all probabilities reveal several dozen more. How much longer do you propose to continue the wave of silly-economy? How much longer are you going to flirt with trouble? How much of a strain do you think your dilapidated equipment can stand before it goes completely busted?

We have not got a single thing to sell you aside from what we believe to be timely and common-sense advice. If you think that you are getting away with something by letting your house and equipment go to the dogs you are soon going to find out what a sap you've been.

We've passed the point where we sold ourselves on the idea that it was essential to carry economy to this dangerous stage. Don't you honestly believe it is now time to fix up your house and everything in it? "CHICK"

Furman Goes With Warners

J. C. Furman, former Publix man, has succeeded Lou Goldberg as director of advertising and publicity for all Warner theatres in the Metropolitan district of New York City. Goldberg has been promoted.

Henger's Advance Splurge

George Henger, Warner zone manager in the Oklahoma district, worked up some healthy enthusiam with his three-week advance campaign on "Doctor X" in Oklahoma City.

Concentrating on the "moon killer" and cannibalism angles of the picture, he used daily teasers with different copy each week. In addition to a huge 12 foot display in the outer lobby of the theatre, he put up dozens of 24's in prominent spots.

FOOTBALL SEASON IS HERE!

Will You Cash In on Some of the Business Opportunities Presented by This Increasingly Popular American Sport?

THE first game of the '32 football season is just around the corner, Schools have reopened and squads of seasoned players and recruits are already getting in form under the critical eyes of coaches. Soon the referee's shrill whistle, marking the clash between rival elevens, will be heard.

If there are any people in show business who do not realize the strength of football as one of the biggest attractions of the year, let them cast an eye on a few statistics in a box on this page. However, the game ought not to be classed as opposition except on certain matinees at the end of the week; rather, the vast potentialities football offers the theatre manager as a means of cementing local good will among college, school and theatre and as a trade booster in general, appears to demand serious consideration.

Fred Meyer

In addition to the many opportunities for tie-ups with merchants, athletic boards, students, transportation companies, etc., for the many games that will be played in all sections of the country until the end of this year, there arises the question on direct selling effort to be made on the several football theme pictures scheduled for fall release. Six major producing concerns have or will have feature length pictures and shorts ready to spot on a convenient date during the season. Two out of three other companies may yet decide to make football films.

Paramount, in addition to "Horsefeathers," which illustrates the Four Marx Brothers' version of how football should be played, has already released "70,000 Witnesses"; Fox is ready with "Rackety Rax"; RKO has a full feature length comedy entitled "Hold 'Em Jail"; Columbia has "That's My Boy" as its football offering; Universal, which cleaned up last season with "Spirit of Notre Dame," this year comes out with "The All Americans," and Educational, in addition to having ready a feature length film covering in full the sensational game played between Southern California and Notre Dame late last year, will revive last season's series of "Football for the Fans" shorts made under the supervision of Coach Howard Jones for Tiffany. These shorts are just as good this year as last. So you "pays your money and you takes your choice." It is entirely reasonable to assume that all these films will have well prepared press books and a wide assortment of accessories to aid with advertising and exploitation.

Fred Meyer's Campaign

We know of no better way to illustrate possibilities attached to a selling campaign for a football theme picture than to set down a few facts concerning the work done last year on "Spirit of Notre Dame" by Fred S. Meyer, formerly managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. To be perfectly honest, we've been holding out a little on Fred's fellow Club members. Information on his campaign arrived late in the season—sort of late to shoot at that time, and we tucked it away in the September '32 tickler as a means to remind all Round Tablers that they can cash in the same as he did.

Let's first see what he did to the theatre to make it in keeping with the occasion. The Notre Dame colors are blue and gold and this scheme was carried out for the front. One large, special panel carried a large head of Lew Ayres mounted on a blue background; two other seven foot panels carried posters of Ayres in football uniform, full size, and a picture of Ayres and Sally Blane. These were lettered with catchlines from the regular press sheet. All 4 x 60's were made of blue velour, with stills and descriptive matter taken from the press book.

Some of the attractive, money-getting window displays secured by Meyer.

Above the box office, which was built of compo-board and made to represent the insignia of Notre Dame, a large head of the late Knute Rockne was mounted. Directly in front of the box office and in the theatre entrance was a goal post, trimmed in blue and gold and carrying out the general idea. Atop the box office was a large arch that carried the title of the picture in lights. In the centre of this was a large cut-out of a football player in action. All this effect was carried out in gold tinsel, properly lit with two large floodlights. One of the accompanying photos will convey a fair idea of how the entrance appeared.

In the inner lobby were six 40 x 60's of coming attractions, with special copy. At one end a large arch was built for a cut out of a football player in tackling position. This was also illuminated by spot lights. Exit doors and rest rooms also carried special cards advertising the coming attraction. A trailer was run one week in advance.

Local Merchants Participated!

May local merchants and units of nationally known chain store concerns participated in a variety of tieups Meyer engineered. Gimbel Bros. department store carried a front window with a nine foot cutout of a football player in action, reproduced from a regulation still. A wax figure was dressed in a replica of the outfit worn by Ayres in the picture. Stills and descriptive matter were also used in this window.

A barber shop directly across from Marquette University, a local institution, was tied-up for a window cutout taken from a one sheet listed in the regular press sheet. Stills, pennants and catchlines were also used in this window. The four main Stumpf stores throughout the city also carried cutouts of football players in windows. The larger illustration on this page will show examples of the very attractive displays used in different stores.

It was arranged with another company to have all trucks carry five foot by eighteen

STAGGERING FACTS!

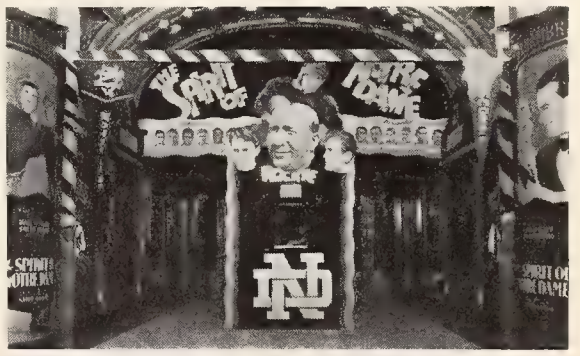
Commenting last season in his column in the "New York Sun" on the scope and sweep of football in all sections of the country Grantland Rice noted sports writer, asked his readers to consider some facts and figures on the game for a single Saturday afternoon.

Looking over his schedule sheets he found that some 217 contests, involving 434 teams, were to take place; and that didn't include the almost countless minor games. Here you have a list of teams that represent an aggregation of 10,000 players in action, not counting the players in high school, prep school and smaller university squads.

It was estimated that crowds at each one of the games would run from 10,000 to 75,000, making a total of some 5,000,000 fans looking at football between the hours of 2 and 4 p. m. in a single day. Figuring the cost of ticket, railroad fare, hotel accommodations, etc., Mr. Rice estimated that $25,000,000 would be spent in just one day for the games. He stated he could name five games that would draw over a million dollars in gate receipts.

These are stagging facts; and history will repeat or even exceed itself when this year's season comes to a close.

WILL YOU CAPITALIZE ON THE GAME?



The college parade of students arriving at the theatre with their own band.

This Article Embraces Most of Last Year's Successful Angles in Connection With Football; How Many Can You Use?

"Football Night," an occasion that turned out to be a corking stunt. Accompanied by a band, promoted either from some local organization or the school itself, he arranged to have the coaches and players march to the theatre and down the aisles to the stage, where they were presented to the audience. Brief addresses were made by the head coach and captain of the eleven. Of course, all were guests of the theatre. With this idea as something to use for a base, many novel and interesting twists can be added by an ingenious showman. Awards can be named for give-away at the close of the season to the local team that carries off signal honors. A similar celebration, such as the foregoing, could also be staged as a testimonial to the local winner of a hard fought game.

Other Good Ad Slants!

Score cards and season schedules of games have also been used to excellent results and can be made cost-free by tying up some merchant or merchants for ads to offset printing and distribution. Cheap pasteboard megaphones, with an ad for theatre and merchants, have also proven popular for distribution at games. Many theatre managers also make a practice of having a couple of ushers parade around the fields during intermission between periods to display a banner advising the audience that shots of the game will be screened at their theatre that same night or at such and such a date. Transportation concerns, including the bus companies, taxi fleets, railroads, etc., also offer many exploitation possibilities.

Last but not least by any means is the newspaper angle. From past experience and observation of reports from other theatre men, the sports editor is more than willing to cooperate in any matter relative to the theatre when local teams or players are concerned. So we believe that any activity, based on any stunt along this line, will receive support. Look back over Club pages and you'll find a number of contests that the newspaper boys will back up. And don't forget that department stores, sport shops, etc., all offer attractive mediums for exploitation of both theatre and seasonal attractions.

The stands are filled with a roaring crowd of enthusiastic fans; the gridiron is cleared except for the opposing elevens; as the referee takes his position to blow the starting blast the boys are all lined up ready to go! Are you?

inch banners, attractively lettered in blue and gold and advertising the picture. The three-photo illustration will show one of the several windows carried by the Walgreen drug stores. Five downtown stores used entire windows for large cutouts of football players and Rockne. Twenty uptown stores used small cutouts and descriptive material. A haberdashery concern featured the Lew Ayres shirt, along with pennants, stills and catchlines; five bookstores contributed generous space to push the book, and the national tie-up of the Knute Rockne magazine was carried out in the city through cooperation of a local news agency.

Notre Dame Tied-in, Too!

Notre Dame being a Catholic university, this angle was strongly stressed in the campaign. 3,000 letters were sent to the local K. of C.; 5,000 circulars were mailed to the International Federation of Catholic Alumni in the city; 80 special letters were written by Meyer and sent to parochial schools in Milwaukee and nearby towns, and direct contact was established with and special letters and invitations sent the Notre Dame alumni in Milwaukee.

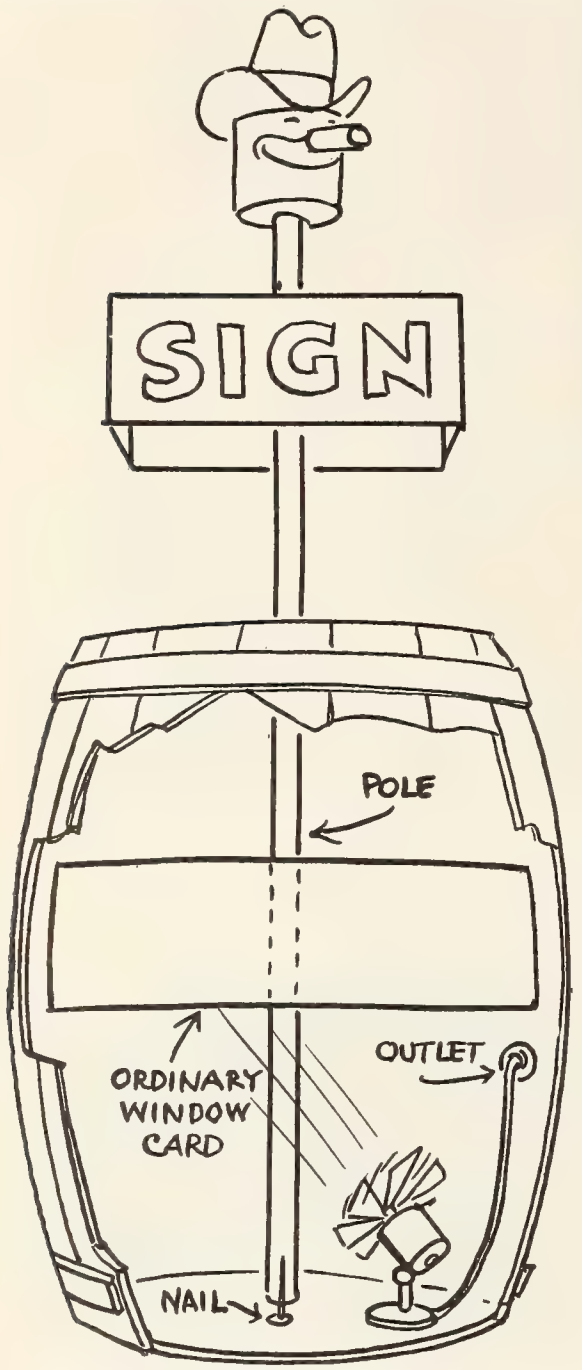
Street car and window cards also figured prominently in the campaign, 150 of the former being placed on various cars throughout the city, as well as 350 of the latter in good locations about town. Twenty-four frames bearing a still of Sally Blane were placed in prominent spots. Fifty-seven small window tie-ups were arranged for local high-schools, colleges and normal schools.

Additional effort included distribution of 20,000 game schedules at every high-school game (no cost on account of ads); distribution of 5,000 heralds through 20 filling stations (no cost tie-up for guest tickets); a ten-day contest in a leading local newspaper on a questionnaire concerning Notre Dame players, and promotion of cooperative ads among merchants.

The newspaper end of the campaign was extensive, yielding a wealth of special stories, photos of the "Four Horsemen" and other players, and other stories and articles on the amusement pages and in the sports section. Another break came along when the editor of one paper was inspired to write a lengthy editorial on the outstanding entertainment qualities of two current pictures. "Notre Dame" was one of them.

We'll leave it to the reader to adjudge Fred Meyer's campaign and agree that he accomplished a lot of fine work. His name has been missing from the Club pages the past few months for reason that the Alhambra has been closed for the summer season. With the resumption of the fall season, we will again look forward to setting down accounts of the activities of this up-and-doing showman, although we hear that he will make his headquarters at another prominent theatre.

Leaving his campaign for the time, let us set down a few thoughts that arise in connection with football season campaigns. Most of these were contained in reports sent in last fall from a number of Round Table members. Maybe a few notes will serve some of our more recent members in good stead this year.



For instance, there's the matter of tying up with local schools for the coach to give guest tickets to those who best qualify in both athletics and studies during the term, or the granting of a more desirable pass to the first, second and third in standing for the term. Then, there's a preview of a football theme picture for the coach and 'varsity squad; give-aways of footballs for teams made up in public and high schools, or perhaps the give-away of other accessories for both youngsters and older players. There are any number of articles that are accessory to the game, such as sport clothing, coonskins, blankets or steamer rugs, pennants, regular accessories of the game, etc.

Many of our members gained a lot of good will and publicity last season and years before by getting the movie camera into action for local games. This gag never yet failed to pull in players, their girl friends and families. There is also the opportunity of tying up with the local radio station for a play by play account of local games to boost matinee trade while this so-called opposition is in progress.

We also recall another report by one of our Club members on how he put over

YOU CAN USE THIS MARX BROS. STUNT ON THEIR NEW FILM

Now that the Four Marx Brothers have pranced and wisecracked their way through several thousand more feet of film in an effort labeled "Horsefeathers," it might be a good idea to revive an advertising stunt submitted the Club last winter by Homer C. Jones, owner-manager of the Jones Amusement Company, Alva, Okla., and published in the Feb. 13 issue of this magazine. It's a moving display for lobby, a good sized window or various other nearby places where an electric connection is handy.

THAT LOTTERY LAW!

The Federal lottery law again recently became a controversial matter as regards the theatre when a Middle West exhibitor was arrested on the charge of conducting a lottery at his theatre. Club members contemplating similar promotional stunts are advised to ascertain from local postal or other authorities the full extent of the law governing such practices.

In the case mentioned above an award of an automobile, handled in the same fashion popular in practically every section of the country these days, brought about the court action. Rival showmen, it is alleged, were instigators of the charges. In defense, the exhibitor claims he did not violate any lottery law, as he merely offered to present the auto to someone attending the theatre within a specified time and, although the award was made through a drawing, the deal was purely for advertising purposes and no extra charge on admission to the theatre was made.

Not long ago a prominent exhibitor in the Southwest found himself in a mint of trouble over lottery laws, and only recently a number of leading fraternal organizations in the East became involved with Federal forces for conducting giveaways at lodge rooms. With so much action in this direction, it is to be hoped that the final airing of all these cases will fix the difference, if any, between so-called out and out gambling and the donation of some article of merchandise for which no charge is made for "chance." The lodge case is being followed up by your daily papers. Watch developments.

We believe the line cut illustration on this page speaks for itself and the other photo will clearly show the four-sided sign in its several positions. However, for your further information, an ordinary coca-cola barrel was used, painted dark brown, with yellow lettering made by a cut-awl. The top of the barrel was drilled for insertion of a round pole, like a broomstick, and a nail was placed in bottom center of barrel for pole to revolve on. Air current from an electric fan in bottom of barrel was directed against the two window cards tacked to pole just underneath top to make the sign revolve at about the rate of 30 to 40 R. P. M. The top of the pole carried a caricature cutout and each side of the portion labeled sign bore a cutout head of each of the four brothers.

At any rate, that's the way the contraption was used by Jones and credit for its invention goes to Hollis Herod, ad man and artist for the company. Advent of another Marx Brothers film prompted the revival. However, the gag can be used on any picture.

UNUSUAL TREATMENT GIVEN THRILL FILM BY MANAGER BUEHRIG

That weird picture of Haitian witchcraft, "Zombie," was given some artistic treatment by A. H. Buehrig, manager of Loew's Theatre in Canton, Ohio, in his selling campaign.

For two weeks in advance he used teaser trailers on the screen and paved the way for a unique lobby display of a head of Lugosi with flashing green eyes. The entire theatre front was decorated especially for the occasion, featured by large white cutout letters of the title.

Two stunts, one a street bally and the other arranged for front of theatre, were also used to good effect. The bally consisted of a "White Zombie" and the other stunt was the parking of a big auto ambulance at the curb in front of entrance to the house, for "those unable to stand the horror and thrills of the picture." The accompanying photo shows a shot of the big ambulance.

Other exploitation and advertising included the use of novelty "pin" throwaways; distribution of heralds house to house and insertion in packages at a market; the playing of a sound record through amplifier on marquee, and six special window displays.

As in other thrill pictures, this one offers an opportunity to use some unusual ideas and it appears that Buehrig took advantage of the situation. Without looking up the press book to see if the tie-up is mentioned there, the thought comes to our mind that a book called "Magic Island," dealing with the wide variety of witchcraft practiced by the natives of Haiti and a big seller at the time, was published a few years ago. It ought to make a corking bookstore tie-up for this picture.

Meyer Busy In Milwaukee

Fred S. Meyer, former managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, closed this past summer, is in charge of a cooperative move between merchants and theatres in his city for a Fall Revue of the style and trend of seasonable merchandise during the week of Sept. 12. Radio, window displays and window features will be used to plug the move.

Meyer, in addition to serving as president of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, is also a member of the committee in charge of arrangements for "Wisconsin Products Week," which gets under way Sept. 25 under sponsorship of the local chamber of commerce. Unused show windows and other available space will be used to display numerous city-made product.

Just some evidence that Fred can't be kept out of showbusiness regardless of where he is or what he's doing. We are watching for word of where Fred will hang his hat.

SHOWMAN LAFAYETTE IS DOING GOOD WORK FOR RKO IN NEW JERSEY

Just a few lines to let fellow Club members know that Round Tabler Murray Lafayette is very much alive and kicking despite the fact that his name hasn't been up in lights in this department for a long time. He's shouting the glories of RKO these days and, in such role, stands at the helm of the RKO Theatre over in Rahway, N. J. As Ben Bernie might add, he's Rah-rahing-way over in New Jersey for the good old company.

See the snappy service crew in the accompanying photo? They're Murray's, and had their pitchers took while "Bring 'Em Back" was regaling the locals with life in the far away jungles. Note the sashes heralding the coming attraction draped across the chests of the four ushers; the side panels at entrance, and the portion of the huge banner that hung from front and ends of marquee. The front of the marquee was also decorated with circular cutouts of animals and a profusion of foliage. The jungle idea was also carried out around the box office—all to the tune of excellent cash returns.

Newspaper tear sheets at hand carry plenty of evidence that Lafayette is grabbing his usual amount of free space. A front page features a tie-up between theatre, paper and radio broadcasting company for quest of local talent for a week's appearance at the local house and possible contract for circuit booking. Another page features a large sketch of a movie star for the children to color and thereby receive guest tickets for best work. One full column on another page is devoted to description of RKO pictures that are coming to town, etc., etc.

Now that we've managed to get a line on Murray's work once more, perhaps we'll be able to keep up a bit better with him in the future. He always does interesting work wherever he may be and we and all his fellow showmen want him to keep this department posted on his activities. So, "Lafayette, we are here." We expect every man to do his duty.

OUTDOOR ADVERTISING !

In response to a special communication sent to fifty Club members it seems to be the concensus of opinion among the majority of those contacted that outdoor advertising will be an important feature of their merchandising activities for the coming season.

There does seem to be a division of opinion, however, regarding the best medium to be employed, namely, three or twenty-four sheets. However this point may be decided they are mostly all inclined to sending out one of their own men to snipe or erect boards at convenient locations.

Theatres outside of the key cities are in a position to spot boards themselves, while those in the larger spots find it best to give out their three-sheet posting via reputable companies specializing in this type of advertising.

One thing is certain: outdoor advertising is coming back strong in most towns and cities where thoughtless economy waves temporarily discontinued the practice. Which, to our way of thinking, is a good thing for showbusiness. We suggest that each member look into the fine possibilities of poster advertising as a part of their show-selling plans for this season. They may find it just as valuable as others did many years ago and still do.

NEVIN DID HIS FULL SHARE TO PUT OVER CARNIVAL CAMPAIGN

During the recent campaign on Sam Katz Week, styled "Publix Carnival Week," down in William Schmidt's Pennsylvania division, George A. Nevin, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Danville, Pa., did his share to make the affair a success.

In return for a lobby display in the theatre a week prior to opening of the Carnival, he promoted a full page display ad through a tie-up with a large, local department store. Out of 140 inches the store took only 14, the remainder being devoted to theatre attractions and the event in general. The local newspaper also cooperated to the extent of giving a 10 per cent reduction on all work for the week.

On Wednesday night of the Week the Danville Band of 45 pieces in uniform paraded to the theatre and gave a twenty minute concert on the stage as an added attraction. A vending company furnished the house with 300 samples of candy for a give-away to the kiddies at the Saturday matinee.

DE HAVEN TREATED BRONX PATRONS TO CHANGE OF SCENERY

Up among the sizzling hot streets of the Bronx section of New York City this past summer an oasis was created through the efforts of Milo De Haven, enterprising manager of the Burke Theatre and exploitation man for the J. G. Bolte circuit of theatres.

After being cooped in offices all day long and with nothing much to look at except pavement, brick walls and other things that serve to drive the city dweller to the country for a look at what New York once was, patrons of the Burke received a real kick from a flower exhibit arranged in the lobby by De Haven and a neighborhood florist.

Small pine trees were placed on either side and dahlias and other flowers blossomed in all colors and hues. On one side of the entrance a rock garden was built, protected by a green wooden fence. Lighting effects made more attractive the ivy plants and other foliage that dressed the display.

De Haven believes that a change always appeals to the public eye and the flower exhibit is one of his pet ideas for the summer season. He changes the display every four weeks or less and it doesn't cost him a nickle except some credit cards for the florist.

WILLIAMS CREATED WEIRD EFFECT WITH 24-SHEET DISPLAY

A weird effect was secured for a lobby display by Tony Williams, manager of the DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., through using a 24-sheet on "Doctor X."

The sheet was mounted on heavy stock paper, eyes cut out and green transparent paper pasted over the openings. Lamps were placed behind the eyes and baby green spots were focussed on the entire display. A flasher button in the lamp sockets behind the eyes caused a weird, leering effect.

MORE OWNER-MANAGERS JOIN CLUB!

FRED E. MOREE was formerly a Publix man and assistant manager of the Queen Theatre down in Houston, Texas, but he's now on his own as boss of the Idle Hour Theatre in Oakdale, La. He served three years with Publix and when that organization began closing houses and cutting down, Fred decided to take it on the chin all by himself. Today he's running full blast, making more money than he did before despite tough times, and so we think we got a good break when his former circuit put through their retrenchment plan. He has followed this department for a long time and now wants to repay his fellow showmen by sending in a few of his own ideas. We'll be looking for his next letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED J. HANKE is in charge of the Lyric Theatre, another independently operated house out in the city of Milwaukee, Wis. We're also glad to welcome this new member into the fastest stepping organization of showmen in the world and will make this acknowledgment the occasion for introducing Fred to the other fellows in our Club. Now that he's one of the gang, we'll look forward to regularly hearing what he is doing to put shows over at the Lyric.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN A. FORRESTER is one of the partners in the Kemp-Hughes-Forrester Theatre Company, and he makes his headquarters at the Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark. With the listing of his name among the new applicants for membership in the Round Table Club, we bring to a close for this week this growing contingent of owner-managers. It's a pleasure to welcome Forrester to the Club and to introduce him to his fellow showmen. We sincerely hope he'll share his show-selling ideas with his host of Clubfellows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. MASSIE'S application for membership in the Round Table Club continues to swell the list of owner-managers who have recently joined this showman's organization. He's located down South in Waynesville, N. C., where he independently operates the Waynewood Theatre. We're also mighty glad to have Massie with us and this is the time to introduce him to his fellow members. We take it that he has found Club suggestions interesting in the past and now proposes to contribute his share of the good work. We'll be looking forward to his next communication.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. W. SIDES is still another owner-manager to join the ranks of this great organization and we're taking this opportunity to let his fellow Round Tablers know that this new member operates the Ritz Theatre out in Talihina, Okla. What we've had to say to all his owner-manager neighbors also goes for him—that we're mighty glad to list his name among the several thousand others and hope he'l become an active contributor of ideas that will help out his brother showmen. How about this, Sides?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. B. STEWARD is located out in Deshler, Ohio, and we're also glad to announce that he, too, has sent in his application for membership in our Club. No chains or circuits are around Stewart's neck either and so his name also goes down as the owner-manager of the Star Theatre in his town. He's another convert to the scheme of swapping ideas with his fellow showmen and we'll be awaiting his first contribution to this department.

N. H. SALYER manages the Benham Theatre down South in Benham, Ky., and it begins to look as though Kentucky has gone Round Table by a wide margin. At any rate, we've certainly seen a lot of applications lately, with the Kentucky trademark. Let us introduce you to your fellow Club members, Salyer, and here's hoping you're already inoculated with the good old Round Table spirit of "All for one and one for all." Send in your ideas on show-selling.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. C. RESSLER hails from upper New York state, where he operates the Lyric Theatre in Bolivar. His application for membership in this organization states that his house is an independent one, and since there's no mention of what his position is, we'll take it for granted that he's another owner-manager. A cordial welcome is also extended Ressler and we hope that he will also strive his level best best to keep up hhe good work made possible by his fellow Club members.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL E. MICHAUD is located up in Fort Kent, Maine, the state that had so much front page mention the past few days. Whether Paul went for the G. O. P. or the Donkey we don't know or care, but what is more important right now is that he's gone Round Table. We have his application for membership at hand and are glad of the opportunity to record that he, too, will become a regular contributor to this department. He operates an independent house and we assume he is the owner-manager.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FOSTER LANE is another Kentuckian, suh, to subscribe to the by-laws, obligations and benefits of this great organization of showmen and we're here to tell you all that he's the manager of the Dixie Theatre in Williamsburg. We're also glad to have the chance to introduce this new Round Tabler to his fellow Clubmen and want him to know that we and all the other fellows are happy to add his name to the ever-increasing list.

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

HENRY BETTENDORF hails from out in Foley, Minn., where he operates the Opera House. We take it that he is either the owner, lessee or boss of his house, for his card does not indicate any managerial post. We also have Henry's application for membership in this Club at hand and want him to know, too, that his name is a welcome addition to the ever-lengthening roster. Every week the mail indicates that more and more owner-managers are taking active interest in Club activities and it's a healthy sign that managers are willing to lend an ear to other experienced men in this field. It also means that they are willing to help out others with their ideas. We'll be awaiting further word from Bettendorf.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. ENGBERTSON makes his home out in Decorah, Iowa, where he operates the Grand Theatre. There's no mention of any managerial post on his application for membership in this organization, so we'll assume that he's another owner-manager to become a Round Tabler. Regardless of that, however, we want him to know that this acknowledgment of his application is a sincere invitation on our part for him to become a regular contributor to this department. Shoot along some of your ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. E. BYARS hails from out in Valley, Nebraska, where he operates the Valley Theatre. Neither does he signify whether he's a manager or owner-manager, so we'll again assume that he is the boss of the whole works. At any rate, his application for membership in the Round Table Club is right before our eyes and we're taking this opportunity to introduce him to the rest of this great army of showmen. We will expect him to send Club headquarters word of what's going on in showbusiness.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHNNY J. JONES is the boss of the Alcyon Theatre, a 1,050 seat independent house out in Highland Park, Ill. It's also a pleasure to list his name among the recently elected members of this ever-growing organization of showmen and we earnestly hope he'll do his share to keep up the good work. He has found this department a help to him in carrying on his business and now proposed to lend a hand to the rest of the fellows. Send us a slant on what you did to boost trade the past season, Johnny, and we'll pass the word along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. T. HEAD also sends us his application for membership and this new Round Tabler makes his home out in De Queen, Ark. Since his card does not state a managerial connection we assume that he, also, is the big boss of the Grand Theatre, in his town. At any rate, he's now classed as another owner-manager to become a member of this great group of showmen and we want him to know that we're very glad to include his name among the rest. We will hope that he, too, will make an effort to help carry on the work started by his fellow showmen.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. J. MINNIX is still another owner-manager and still another Kentuckian to become a member of this constantly-growing army of showmen and a cordial welcome is also due him from Club headquarters and his fellow Round Tablers. Step up and meet the rest of the gang, Minnix, and tell them that you, also, intend to carry on the good work. What has been going on down in London at your Southland Theatre? Shoot in a few lines and let your Club know what methods you've been using to boost trade.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Don Santo and Exie
Omaha Orpheum

As an impersonator and comedian, Don Santo hits the mark. He mimics a Chicago news reporter, also an ape, folks in Hollywood. He dances what he calls "The Politicians' Strut" with the request to "see how crooked it is." Exie plays a beautifully scrolled banjo. She also sings "Smile, Darn You, Smile."

George Lyons
New York Triboro

Lyons is a harpist whose ability to entertain met with distinctly favorable response. This chap, who affects an Italian dialect, all but makes his harp talk. He plays everything from high class works to red hot blue and enhances his presentation by giving a very fine vocal rendition of "Village Choir." Lyons closes with a hot arrangement of "St. Louis Blues" and "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea." Lyons has a style of showmanship and musical ability that makes him a favorite.—E. D.

Floyd Gibbons
Denver Orpheum

Floyd Gibbons, headline hunter, packed the Orpheum time after time, and proved mighty popular with the crowds. Gibbons recounted some of his experiences in covering wars of various kinds—the Chino-Jap war, the bonus war in Washington, the farmers' war in Iowa, and the mine war in Pennsylvania.

Herman Hyde
New York Palace

Hyde, assisted by Miss Mona, who also proves a clever comedienne, offers a musical travesty, a round of sheer hokum which the audience found highly amusing. His collapsible and trick musical instruments are sure-fire, while the finale, in which his 'cello lays an egg on the stage, is an ace laugh-getter.—H. P.

Luis Zingone
Baltimore Century

A series of mystifying tricks are performed with running comedy comments. The tricks include cutting a rope and finding it in one piece; knotting colored handkerchiefs and separating them on two tables and picking them up untied; card juggling and cigaret trick.

June Carr with Dane Harden
Baltimore Century

Miss Carr claims big applause and Mr. Harden helps her with his excellent work at the piano and in her dances, comedy and songs. She sings "You Got Love," and they tap-dance atop the piano. Harden sings "I'm Keepin' Company," June presents a comic dance, then Harden solos with "Shanty in Old Shanty Town," and they wind up in a comedy dance.

Screen Singer with Orchestra

Stanley Smith has joined the orchestra of Jimmy Greer as a featured singer, following his appearance in Paramount's "Hot Saturday."

Several Houses Restore Shows

RKO this week is returning vaudeville to a number of circuit houses over the country which had dropped the stage policy during the summer period. A few situations on the circuit are eliminating the acts.

Proctor's, Troy, N. Y., resumes vaudeville this week on a split week policy with changes Wednesday and Saturday. The RKO house in Schenectady also is resuming as the result of a petition signed by 1,900 residents of the city. Several of the circuit's houses in Greater New York have reinstated vaudeville but the 58th Street and 86th Street are carrying on more successfully with straight pictures, the company reports.

Publix and RKO have dropped stage shows in Denver, and one Boston RKO house is turning from vaudeville to revues, as the result of a competitive situation there. The Saenger, Publix house in New Orleans will resume vaudeville within two weeks. Loew, RKO and Publix are negotiating with musicians and operators in the southern city and an agreement is confidently expected within a few days. Winners of RKO's opportunity revue contests, carried on over the country recently, arrive in New York next week to begin rehearsals for a new show, written by Arthur Swanstrom, and to be produced by Bobby Connolly and George Libbey.

Kemp Announces Vaudeville for New Season in Warner Theatres

Harold Kemp, director of Warner Bros. Artists Bureau, announced Tuesday that three Warner New England theatres would again show vaudeville. The Warner, Lawrence, Mass., will have its first vaudeville show of the season on September 22; the Strand, Waterbury, Conn., reopens its vaudeville season the next day, with the State, Hartford, initiating vaudeville September 29.

Seeks Information on Act

George C. Meeser, manager of the eastern zone of Lewen Pizor Theatrical Enterprises, writes from the Broad Street Theatre at Nazareth, Pa., seeking further information regarding Rajah Sigmund. Mr. Meeser says that he booked the act for three days each in Pen Argyl and Nazareth, Pa., on a percentage basis. He adds that the act played the three days in Pen Argyl, but 16 days before the Nazareth engagement phoned a cancellation.

SINGERS

Grace Hayes (4)
New York Palace

This personable radio star, accompanied by two pianists, opens with a vocal chorus of "Lovable," followed by a clever comedy recitation, and then offers an imitation of Pola Negri singing "Paradise," a feature of this bit being Miss Hayes' striking resemblance to the screen star. Then there is a clever bit of dialogue between Miss Hayes and a "faced" microphone who calls himself "Mr. NBC" and proceeds to mimic several famous radio personalities most effectively. For the finale Miss Hayes introduces her son, Lind, as the voice of the "dummy mike," and he receives a goodly amount of applause. A most entertaining act.—H. P.

Bing Crosby
San Francisco Fox

Without the amplifier Bing Crosby's voice would not carry far in the 5,000-seat Fox, but quite appropriately his singing is into the microphone and every one gets an opportunity to applaud. His list of songs, he admits, runs largely to "oldies, but goodies" and includes such numbers as "Dinah," "Paradise," "Song in My Heart," "Was That the Human Thing to Do?", "Mine, All Mine" and "I Surrender, Dear." He gets applause, and lots of it, and there would be more if he only had the time to sing on. He has a clever accompanist and the two put on a first-rate imitation of a couple of college cheer leaders as they trot back and forth to the wings. This crooner attracts crowds and pleases them, too.

Peter Higgins
New York Paramount

Higgins, in a pleasing tenor voice, opens with "Once Upon a Time," and after a bit of clowning with several other principals of the show, sings Phil Baker's latest original song, "Strange Interlude," accompanied by Baker himself with the accordion. His efforts were well received.—H. P.

Vivian Janis
Buffalo Buffalo

"The Beauty of Song" proved no misnomer for this comely blonde, whose voice, however, failed to show anything extraordinary. A further handicap at the opening shows was that she was drowned out by the orchestra. Applause was mild.

George Dewey Washington
Detroit Michigan

This colored Tibbets, wearing tatters and the brave spirit of a plantation songster, presents "Lazy Day," "Tha's Why Darkies Were Born" and "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long."

Little Jack Little
Baltimore Hippodrome

With a microphone perched atop the piano, he sings "I'm Never Blue," "My Mom," "King's Horses," "Medley of Famous Theme Songs," "Oceans of Love," "Shanty in Old Shanty Town."

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL Russian Revels

New York Palace

Here is an entertaining instrumental act that offers class, novelty, dancing and melodious music. Directed by the famous Colonel Fedor Maybaur, the turn opens to an artistic Russian setting in which the Colonel and his native string orchestra, dressed in elaborate costume, offer selections of snappy and rhythmic Russian songs. Interpolated throughout the act are graceful and spectacular acrobatic dances by Florence Neilz, who performs in bare feet, a violin duet by two native costumed ladies, a rapid Russian dance by one of the musicians, and a weird dance by "a gold statue" that comes to life. This turn is out of the ordinary and is a worthwhile addition to any bill. —E. D.

Jess Stafford and Band
San Francisco Warfield

Jess Stafford, former San Franciscan, and his band have succeeded Rube Wolf at the Warfield and offer musical novelties of a high order. A clever arrangement of the hit number, "Three On a Match," meets with special approval.

Borrah Minevitch and His Rascals
Baltimore Century

Minevitch offers his repertoire of comedy and musical selections played with exquisite harmony and rhythm on harmonicas. He keeps the audience in high glee during the entire act and offers musical numbers so well that the audience gave them an ovation and called them back even after the last show had finished and the picture was ready to start.

Frank and Milt Britton's Band (10)
San Francisco Fox

What the Four Marx Brothers are to the screen, this aggregation is to music. The band starts off in the usual style, but soon the slapstick work commences. One player is stabbed in the back with a trombone slide, another falls off the platform, violins are smashed and chewed into bits, musicians stand on their heads, but continue to play, and chairs are thrown around.

EXHIBITOR AID FOR PERFORMERS

To the Editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

I have been reading the MOTION PICTURE HERALD from cover to cover for the past few years and readily admit that the valuable information found in its columns has helped me a great deal in the past. Between the covers of the HERALD the exhibitor can find information that he needs to help him.

During the past few weeks I have been thinking of a department that I think would prove to be of great help to the exhibitor and the actor.

At the present time almost every exhibitor uses an act now and then as an extra added attraction to boost the box office receipts. Every exhibitor should use as many of these acts as he possibly can and try to help the vaudeville performers in the same willing manner that they have helped the theatres in the past. Right now there are some wonderful acts that are out on the road not even knowing when or where their next meal is coming from. They need our help.

My suggestion is simply this: when an exhibitor comes in contact with an act that has been hitting it tough, he should do all he possibly can to help it along. If it is impossible for him to give it a date at the time, he should at least give it a few minutes of his time and see what it has. If he finds that it has real talent and box office drawing power, that it not only needs but really deserves our help, he should write you, giving all the information that he can concerning same, whether he books it or not. Then if you think the act is deserving of help, you may mention it briefly on your page and suggest that the exhibitors lend a hand.

When I make this suggestion it is positively not my intention to create a free advertising page, but merely to help the exhibitor and the act that needs help. Exhibitors under no circumstances should mention any act unless they are positive that the act is deserving and needing this help.—THEODORE SCHLOSSER, Essanoe Amusement Company, Inc., Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky.

SECOND WEEK
METROPOLITAN THEATRE, BROOKLYN
MGT. JOE FLAUM — MEYER NORTH OFFICE

DANCERS

Violet West
New York Palace

Supported by the Ambassadors' quintet and the Caites Brothers trio, all accomplished tap dancers, Miss West offers a routine of tap, acrobatic and adagio dancing which proves effective. This act was well received.—H. P.

Stanley Twins
Detroit Fisher

As a pair of dancers working in perfect unison, the Stanley Twins are above the average. As heralds introducing the principals of the stage show, they are not so good.

Marian Wilkins
San Francisco Golden Gate

This girl could get by on her beauty and personality, but possesses rare grace as well. Her dance steps are not especially new, but they please. She is assisted by Jack Myers.

---

4 Emeralds
New York Paramount

This flash all-girl act is a clever concoction of tumbling and comedy acrobatics. In the finale they offer a novel double roll, rolling on to and off a table. A good opener.—H. P.

Karre, Noyes and LeBaron
Buffalo Buffalo

This sensational adagio act drew big applause. Lack of a climax seemed to hamper its effectiveness, but the trio took an extra bow.

COMEDY

Arthur and Morton Havel
New York Palace

Opening with an effective scrim depicting the sea, these two comedians use an ocean liner scene as the background of their hokum comedy, which clicked with this audience. Their argument with the captain of the vessel is good for a laugh, while their love-making to two attractive fellow-passengers continues the laughs. Helen Lockhart and Denise Dooley are the girls and Bud Williamson is the captain.—H. P.

Mitchell and Durant
New York Paramount

Playing a return engagement in four weeks at this theatre, Mitchell and Durant, with a slight alteration of their act, stop the show cold. Their "Mutt and Jeff" fight has a surprise finale while their falls are sure-fire. Durant's imitation of Harry Richman is a classic.—H. P.

Seed and Austin (3)
Baltimore Hippodrome

Chatter and general hokum is interspersed with some dancing by the men. An imitation of Greek restaurant keeper won laughs as an encore.

Fanny Brice
New York Paramount

Miss Brice's imitation of Betty Boop's singing of "Was That the Human Thing to Do" proves an ace, while her interpretation of the "Dying Swan" dance is a howl. She finales with a scene from her last show, "Sweet and Low," assisted by Phil Baker. The audience called her back several times.—H. P.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

FLOYD WRIGHT (Berkeley (Cal.) United Artists) officiated at the magnificent organ in masterly style at the opening of this new house. He was formerly at the Fox California and received a warm reception. He offered a distinct novelty when he presented three fellow organists in concert after his formal dedication of the instrument. Charles Wilson, of the Fox Oakland, offered selections from "Aida," Eddie Sellen, of the San Francisco Paramount, played Fritz Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois," and Richard Arnaunt, of the Fox theatre, San Francisco, presented his own arrangement of "St. Louis Blues." Wright wound it up with a humorous rendition of the "Whistler and His Dog."

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing RKO) continues to please the patrons of this house with his clever and well thought out novelties. Whenever these patrons hear the "Voice of the RKO," they know that Bernie is opening his solo and it invariably calls for lusty applause. Bernie gave the audience "Just Couldn't Say Goodbye," "Hearts at Ease," "It Was So Beautiful," "Spanish Town" and "Valencia" for them to sing. He also offered a pleasing concert of Spanish numbers which drew well. For the finish came the news of the day in rhyme to the tune, "Snuggled on Your Shoulder."

HENRY B. MURTAGH (Buffalo Hippodrome), co-manager of the house and its most popular institution, introduced another of his original organ novelties, to the tune of "Happy Days Are Here Again." Murtagh's clever verses intrigue the audiences and he keeps them singing. "It Was So Beautiful," "I Just Can't Believe It's True" and "A Shanty in Old Shantytown" made up the remainder of the everybody-sing interlude.

RUSSELL BICE (Detroit RKO Downtown) appeals to his listeners' civic pride to induce vocal support of his organ solo, "My Friend From Chicago." His friend from Chicago, according to Bice's introductory slides, boasted of a number of Chicago's virtues, including the lusty and melodious voices of the populace. This preliminary plug, to the tune of "When Day Is Done," is followed by "Three's A Crowd," "A Shanty In Old Shanty Town," "Lullaby Of The Leaves" and "In My Hideaway." Although all numbers were well received, by far the best response was given "Lullaby Of The Leaves."

DICK LEIBERT (Brooklyn Paramount) offered a pleasing novelty this week and had no difficulty in having the audience sing. Opening with a chorus of "Night Shall Be Filled with Music," Leibert then presented a laughable parody chorus to "Hummin" and followed it up with an intimate talk that got laughs and applause. The audience then sang "Lovable" and "Thrill to Hear It from You." Comedy was injected in a parody, written with the titles of billboards seen along any road. Dick closed with a stirring rendition of "I Love a Parade."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

SAY, MR. EXHIBITOR:

Are you making use of a revenue-getter in your house that has been sadly neglected by many exhibitors because they erroneously feel the expenditure is too great? . . . In a letter to STAGE ATTRACTIONS department, Mr. A. E. Shanley, manager of the Embassy theatre, Dobbs Ferry, New York, discusses "Theatre Equipment Profit and Loss" in such worth while fashion that we are reprinting it. We know that many exhibitors throughout the country have faced the same situation, so Mr. Shanley's letter may be of help in your own particular case. . . .

Mr. Shanley says:

"Let us take into consideration an outstanding item in theatre equipment which at the present time is a total loss, as far as 'box-office' is concerned, in many neighborhood houses as well as the majority of de luxe theatres throughout the country. . . . How many theatre organs are being used to add to the program of today? The answer is, very few. . . . When it comes to the why, . . . we find various reasons. . . . Having experienced the above, I am happy to state that during the past three months, notwithstanding hot weather conditions, poor film product and other discomfitures during the summer months, I have found it profitable to hire an organist and feature him as much as possible.

"This is not an idle statement. If it were, you can rest assured the Embassy theatre organist would not remain on the payroll for further experiment. I do not say that any organist is worthy of featuring as an attraction; however, at the present time, competent organists are available at a reasonable figure and if given half a chance and some cooperation from the front of the house, will bring more than their salary to the box-office, in addition to the distinction and tone given the theatre. . . . I, for instance, have placed my organist in charge of the kiddie matinees on Saturdays, at which time youngsters with talent are given an opportunity to entertain. The organist also concocts clever novelties for his evening solos, and all in all he has been a success at our house. . . .

"I would like to suggest that you urge upon exhibitors the feasibility of hiring a good organist, feature him big (if he is really worth while), give him a fair trial, and eliminate other expenses (double-features or additional duplicating shorts), and those exhibitors will find that they will be making a profit on their organ presentations, instead of having a dead loss on their hands."

A most interesting letter, and truly important. You are invited to advise other exhibitors through this department what you are doing about your organ.

OVERTURES

CHARLES MANNING (Buffalo Buffalo), the regular house maestro, devoted his overture to a tribute to the late John Philip Sousa, introducing a medley of numbers by the March King. A huge colored portrait of Sousa on the screen faded into the music. The typically cold audience gave perfunctory applause.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) presented his "Moon Melodies" overture in which he emphasized Kate Smith's favorite, probably because that radio celebrity was scheduled to the vaudeville bill the following week. After the introduction came "Harvest Moon," "Moonlight and Roses," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," with special piano interpolation and then a trombone solo, finishing with fast tempo of that number with bass viol and drums in competition.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra offer an overture to "The Girl Friend." Popular tunes relating to the adored one, whether she be colleen, cheri or best girl, are brought together and played with skill. Popular music enables members of the orchestra to use a variety of mutes and gilded derbies and affords diversion. Our guess is that the classics will soon return to the Fox.

Symphony Returning to Air

The New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will return to the air over WABC and the Columbia Broadcasting System on October 9 for the first of a series of 42 concerts throughout the 1932-33 season, ending April 23.

Two Organists at Roxy

C. A. J. Parmentier and George Epstein, formerly of the Roxy theatre, are both back at the positions they held previous to the period the house was closed. The young men take turns in playing for the overtures and at the lobby organ, where they have created a following.

Named to Head Organists

WITH WHICH IS COMBINED "THE SHOWMAN"

The BOOTSTRAPS OF THIS NEW SEASON

They are the same as those of any other season—those bootstraps. Now, as we begin a new theatrical year, this is worth pointing out, obvious though it may seem, rhetorically. It will be as difficult during the season of 1932-33 for one to pull oneself up by one's bootstraps as it was in any other season, theatrical or otherwise. Making optimistic statements will do no more good than reading them. Watching so-called business barometers is no substitute for action. Nobody believes that show business will not revive with all the vigor it once possessed. But when? It is time for impatience to step in and for show business to strike out, restoring to full function the processes that, in motion picture terms at least, have given it the vast value it possesses for the world and for itself.

Comfortable Seating INVITES Return Patronage

Irwin Model No. 6870

To encourage a prompt return of steady patronage to your theatre, you must invite it at the point of personal contact. The physical well-being of your patrons is too vitally important to be passed over lightly. Chairs are the one part of your theatre's equipment with which the public makes actual personal contact. So, to invite continuous patronage, patrons must be seated comfortably. ... Now, of all times, it is wise to consider this all-important factor for a return of better business... Irwin Theatre Chairs are celebrated for comfort at every point of body contact. Their backs slant at exactly the correct angle in relation to the seats and arm rests. Both seats and backs conform to body contours and react to the slightest body movements, thus providing rest and relaxation for every nerve center and muscle. . . . In design and construction throughout, Irwin Chairs are built to look well, to last longer and to afford that degree of sitting comfort which creates preference for any theatre. In the Irwin line, there is a model to meet the cost limitations of every theatre. Let us help you plan for Comfortable Seating—now.

Dependable Power

..."the show must go on"

SHREWD showmen have long since learned the secret of packing the house: popular attractions, fine music, perfect acoustics, comfortable seats, well-trained personnel. Entertainment! They know another essential too—one that is never seen but on whose performance depends the very success of the show. It's flawless, smooth power behind the arc . . . dependable motor generator equipment.

Westinghouse Thermionic Switchboards permit remarkable speed in making your lighting set-ups.

When you install Westinghouse Floodlights, Lighting Fixtures or Mazda Lamps, you get effective, economical illumination.

At little cost, Westinghouse motor generator equipment dependably guards the light on the silver screen. The conservative capacity rating of Westinghouse M-G. sets assures constant arc intensity during change-overs, under double-arc load. The windings are most carefully insulated. Sustained operation will not cause damaging insulation hot-spots because air bubbles have been excluded by the Vacuum Impregnation of the coils. Moisture, absorbed by the generator as it cools off after the day's work, finds no lodging place beneath the surface of the coils. "Grounds" are prevented by armoring the coils with mica . . . the best known resistant to electrical breakdowns.

Westinghouse M-G. sets are supplied complete with all accessories, including Linestarters, Control Panels, and Ballast Rheostats.

AS A NEW SEASON BEGINS

an editorial

¶ Again, a new season begins. The turnings of our planet and its sun have something to do with it, but not much. In show business, the year has a single season, commencing along about September-time and petering out when Mr. and Mrs. Public and the younger Publics get knee-deep in June. All this has cosmic ramifications, sure' enough, but in show business what we need more than astronomers is a group of influential showmen who can consistently interpret in terms of entertainment, the affairs of our own earthy little world.

¶ A new theatrical season is beginning again, but this one seems to be more interesting than most of those in the past. It hasn't the assurances of those more distant, nor the discouragements of those immediately preceding it. Instead, we have reason to look forward to a very constructive year for the art and business of the motion picture—but only if we are prepared to deserve it.

¶ "Give us the pictures and we can sell them." Is it as simple as that? The appeal of product is of basic importance, of course. But we might as well face the fact that in a field of the show business in which theatres require from 52 to 150 or more plays a year, story or star appeal is going to be at least occasionally less than that required to induce people to make the physical effort of going to a theatre and there give up their money. Motion picture product is not made for a certain type of people, nor a certain geographical or industrial group of people. So far the system requires that it be made for a vast number of people located just about everywhere and having a wide range of interests and limitations. And patronage must be pretty steady. Fully recognizing the value of the direct appeal of the picture, we must not forget the tremendous importance of consistent, judiciously prepared advertising, and of well maintained, smoothly functioning theatres.

¶ It is the theatre, as a functional building, that has suffered most of late (with the exception of the exhibitor himself, perhaps). The structure and its equipment and furnishings have been designated as the things which could be ignored for the time being. Unquestionably they could be—for the time being. But did anyone think the conditions that caused this appraisal would last so long? As a result, thousands of theatres are downright shabby in appearance, and noticeably creaky in their functioning. It seems too much to expect the 1932-33 season to live up to its promises if this condition is allowed to endure much longer.

¶ Here and there we note that the new season will be inaugurated with the revival of organ music, to take its regular place on the program along with the audible screen fare. How far such a revival could go, we would not attempt to say. The motion picture has been technically rendered more capable than ever to run the whole gamut of entertainment interests. But there is no denying the appeal of organ music to many people, and especially the "kick" they get out of those seemingly informal, yet carefully planned, "community sings." Many hundreds of organs still stand in theatres, mutely representing the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Probably nearly all of them are still valuable property if only some use could be found for them. A. E. Shanley of the Embassy theatre in Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., put his "back to work." In a letter accompanying the remarks from him appearing elsewhere in this issue, Mr. Shanley admits, "I do not say any organist is worth featuring as an attraction. However, at the present time competent organists are available at a reasonable figure, and if given a chance, will bring in more than their salary."

¶ Above all, let us have the attitude that this new season is an emergence. We are justified in believing that it will bring emergence from the economic valley we have been slowly trudging through. We must have already emerged from the caverns of an ingrowing pessimism. Otherwise . . . but we won't go into that. The season of 1932-33 is going to be an exhilarating one. Let the profits fall where they may.

REPRODUCTION IN RADIO CITY THEATRES

By JAMES FRANK, Jr.

Describing in detail the complete installation of sound systems in the music hall and the cinema located in Rockefeller Center

THE CITY in a city now rapidly nearing completion in New York City and to be known as Rockefeller Center, is to include two theatres, the larger to be known as the "International Music Hall," with a seating capacity of 6,300 seats, the smaller to be called the RKO Photoplay Theatre and having a seating capacity of 3,000 seats.

These two theatres are being equipped by the RCA Victor Company, Inc., with sound systems embodying the highest standards of electrical and mechanical design. The equipment was selected after a careful study of the plans and specifications of these theatres. The operating and control features have been designed to facilitate ease of control, and provision has been made for selection of alternative circuits and amplifiers.

The equipment consists of standard RCA Victor sound reproducing apparatus especially assembled for this installation and of somewhat greater power than it is customary to furnish for theatres. The installation for International Music Hall is larger and covers a wider scope. It has a total undistorted output of 510 watts. The sound systems to be installed in the larger theatre are divided into eight units—sound reinforcing system, rehearsal address system, stage manager's call system, main sound projection system, rear stage sound projection system, deaf headphone system, preview sound projection system, and radio and monitoring system.

The installation of these systems is to be so arranged that through physical location and electrical connection certain of the equipments may be inter-connected. Figure 1 shows the equipment layout on the projection room level. From the diagram the various amplifiers and sound reproducers may be easily located. Further reference will be made to this diagram under the description of the different systems.

It is important to note that the amplifiers and loudspeakers used on the various systems are essentially alike, although various assemblies of apparatus are employed.

Sound Reinforcing System

THE PURPOSE of this system is to reinforce the stage presentations and orchestra music to suitable levels in order that the desired aesthetic effects and clear intelligibility may be obtained at all points in the auditorium. This system consists essentially of a number of microphones, amplifier equipment and loudspeakers, together with necessary control apparatus. The microphone transmitters located around the stage and orchestra pit pick up the voices or music, change the sound waves to electrical waves, which are fed into the microphone amplifiers. After the level has been raised by these units the electrical waves are fed into the mixers in the control console, where they are properly mixed and then fed into a "booster amplifier." At this point the level is sufficiently raised to feed into the main amplifiers. From the main amplifier the electrical waves, now at any desired level, are fed into the auditorium loudspeakers, where they are converted into sound waves again which are directed to all points in the auditorium. Intricate control apparatus is employed to properly operate this system.

Fifty Type PB-31 velocity microphones of the kind used for sound recording will be furnished, mounted on swivel bases in order that they may be "aimed" in any desired direction. These microphones will be located as follows:

VELOCITY MICROPHONES

Eight microphones in traps in the floor of the orchestra elevator. Eight on program stands on band wagon. Eight suspended from light bridges. Eleven in footlights approximately on 7-foot centers. Nine on stage connected to traps on the stage floor. Six (three on each side) on choral stairs.

The velocity microphone contains a thin metallic ribbon suspended between the poles of a permanent magnet in place of a "diaphragm." Sound waves reaching the ribbon vibrate it within the magnetic field set up by the magnet. The sensitivity of the velocity microphone is approximately 2½ times that of a condenser microphone generally used. This makes possible an increased operating range. The microphone responds very faithfully to all sound vibrations over the range of audible frequencies from 30 to above 10,000 cycles. This is due principally to the smallness, the size and mass of the ribbon element placed in the free space. The faithfulness of response of this microphone imparts a naturalness of tone and a distinctness of speech not hitherto attainable with other units.

The most important characteristic of the velocity microphone is its directional property. Since the ribbon is suspended in free space, sound waves approaching the microphone from a direction on the same plane as the ribbon have no effect upon it, but sound waves from either direction along an axis perpendicular to the plane of the ribbon, have a maximum effect. For equal distances from the transmitter, sound originating 70° or 80° off of the axis perpendicular to the ribbon will have practically no effect, whereas at 45° off of this perpendicular, the sensitivity is approximately 70% of the maximum. This characteristic is of great value in the solution of some of the difficulties usually encountered in reverberant locations by the reduction of the effect of undesired sound reflections, and in the increased possibilities of obtaining better balance and selectivity in sound pickup. In addition, this characteristic is likewise outstanding in that this is the only type of microphone that responds uniformly to all audible frequencies over the entire 45° angle. This permits placing microphones in the footlights on approximately 7-foot centers, with the result that uniform pickup of all frequencies is accomplished across the front of the stage.

Another advantage of the velocity microphone is its uniform operation independent of changes in climatic conditions, such as atmospheric pressure, humidity, or temperature, any or all of which considerably affect other types of microphones. The velocity microphones are designed for suspension, program stand, or footlight mounting.

Amplifiers

Fifty microphone amplifiers will be required. These amplifiers will be located on a specially constructed rack located in an amplifier room in the basement under the stage. The amplifier is carefully shielded to render it free from external interference and undesired pick-up. The entire unit is enclosed in a cylindrical metal case particularly designed for wood rack mounting, and is mounted vertically with connections made through plugs at the top and bottom. Power supply to operate the unit is made available from the amplifier room on the projection room level.

A control console (illustrated in Figure 2) is to be furnished for controlling the individual microphone amplifier outputs and mixing them properly for amplification. It is located in the control room (as shown in Figure 1). The console is of the mahogany desk type with metal top, on which all the controls are located. At the front right side of the console is located an 80-jack panel, at which point the outputs from the 50 microphone amplifiers terminate. The additional jacks not accounted for are for expansion. Directly in front of the jack panel are 38 cords and single plugs with weights and rollers divided into four groups, two of eleven each, and two of eight each, each group with a distinctive color. The cords are arranged in four rows.

At the back right and left side of the console are located four mixers, two 11-position mixers, and two eight-position mixers, each with its distinctive color on the mixer knob and wired to its respective cords mentioned above. On the console top a four-position mixer is located, one position for each of the above mentioned mixers, which controls the level of its respective group. By plugging the plugs into the jacks, any combination of microphones, with a maximum of 38, in groups of eight or 11, may be selected and mixed in the four mixers. After this operation, the output of each of these four mixers is fed into the four-position mixer. A master mixer is located on the console top, which controls the mixed output of the four-position mixer. At the front left side of the console top, a "booster amplifier" is located, which compensates for the loss in the control console. The output from the master mixer is fed into this amplifier, and the level is raised to such an extent that the output can be coupled to the main amplifier.

A volume indicator is mounted on the console top at the rear in a vertical position. An adjustment is supplied so that a predetermined reading on the meter may be made to represent any output level of the amplifier.

At the front left side of the console is located a jack panel for changing normal connections of the outputs of the eight-position and the 11-position mixers into the four-position mixers, to prevent the failure of one unit of the four-position mixer from interfering with the operation of the system. In case of emergency, it is also possible to circumvent the four-position mixer, and/or the "booster amplifier" to feed directly into the main amplifier at a reduced output. The separate control units of the mixers can be removed for repair at a moment's notice, such removal not affecting the operation of the remaining units.

The main amplifier equipment consists of two duplicate 80-watt amplifier channels, Type PB-84. These amplifiers are primarily arranged for operating in duplicate; that is, one at a time, the other being held in reserve for emergency use. However, provision has been made so that one channel may be used on the regular sound reinforcing system, and the second channel used at the same time to operate the effect loudspeakers. These amplifiers consist of units mounted on standard channel-iron racks and are located in the amplifier room (see Figure 1). Each of the channels include necessary terminal strips, main power line switch, a Type PB-23 voltage amplifier unit, two Type PB-45 power amplifier units (40 watts each), and a Type PB-24 power amplifier unit (10 watts). All amplifier units are complete in themselves in that they contain their own a.c.-operated power supply apparatus.

The 10-watt power amplifier unit is used for the deaf headphone system. The output impedance is such that a variable number of headphones may be installed. All headphones are connected across the output of the amplifier in series with an adjustable resistor of sufficiently high value that all headsets may be removed from their jacks without affecting the frequency characteristic of the system.

The Type PB-50 miscellaneous equipment rack, which is located with the main amplifier, includes an audio relay panel, two jack panels, a Type PB-51 tube testing panel, a radio receiver, a phonograph turntable, an amplifier unit.

The audio relay panel includes the relays required to switch the deaf hearing system amplifier to either the sound reinforcing system or the main sound projection system, to switch either of the sound reinforcing system amplifier channels into the circuit, and to connect the stage manager's call system to the sound reinforcing system when desired.

The two jack panels are used for "patching" or "interconnecting." The input and output circuits of all amplifiers on the sound reinforcing system, rehearsal address system and stage manager's call system are brought out to these panels, as well as the outputs of all special apparatus including radio receiver, phonograph turntable, and the like. For normal operation no cords are required, but for special interconnection or for use of special apparatus, cords tying the desired circuits are used in these jack panels.

The tube testing panel is designed to test all tubes and tube circuits employed in the amplifier and power racks. The radio receiver is a nine-tube Superheterodyne which will work in conjunction with any of the power amplifier units in the system. It is connected to the Antenaplex system described in the radio and monitoring system.

The amplifier unit included in this rack is used for monitoring purposes. This unit may be connected across the output of the power amplifier unit of either the sound reinforcing system, effect system (one channel of sound reinforcing system), stage manager's call system, or the rehearsal address system, and will operate the monitor loudspeakers on the Type PB-60 power control rack, in the amplifier room, in the spot cove, or at the chief electrician's position.

The Type PB-60 power control rack, located adjacent to the control console in the control room, includes a microphone power control panel, an amplifier power control panel, a rehearsal microphone mixer, an audio control panel, a monitoring loudspeaker panel, and a chief electrician's microphone control panel. The microphone power control panel includes switches which, through the use of relays, turn on the power to all microphone transmitters and microphone amplifiers. The amplifier power control panel includes switches, which similarly through the use of relays, turn on the power to all the amplifiers used in the sound reinforcing system and rehearsal address system.

The rehearsal microphone mixer includes mixer units for controlling the output of each of the four microphones used on the system, with a master mixer to control the group.

The audio control panel includes two key switches, one to select, through the use of relays, amplifier channels for this system and the other to connect, through the use of relays, the deaf hearing system amplifier to either the sound reinforcing system or the main sound projection system. In addition, four remote volume control push button stations are included, controlling the volume on each of the amplifier channels of the sound reinforcing system, and of the rehearsal address system. The monitoring loudspeaker panel includes a panel-mounted electro-dynamic loudspeaker unit with volume control.

The chief electrician's microphone control panel consists of a control unit to equalize the output of the carbon microphone used by the chief electrician on the rehearsal address system to the three microphones used on the same system.

The Type PB-76 loudspeaker control rack is located also adjacent to the control console in the control room. It includes two sound reinforcing loudspeaker control panels and two rehearsal loudspeaker control panels.

The Type PB-56 power supply rack, which is located in the motor-generator room, includes an a.c.-relay panel, two d.c.-relay panels, and two plate and bias supply units. The a.c. panel includes a number of relays to connect the a.c. supply to the rectifier tubes. The two d.c. panels include a number of relays to connect the power supply to the microphones of both the sound reinforcing system and the rehearsal address system. The two plate and bias supply units are connected in duplicate, one being used regularly and the other as emergency, and are used to supply plate and bias power to the microphone amplifiers and the "booster amplifier." The unit is designed to operate from a 205-220-volt, 3-phase, 60-cycle a.c. supply. It is essentially a 3-6 phase rectifier. This unit reduces the percentage of a.c. ripple voltage in the d.c. output voltage of the rectifier tubes. This is a distinct advantage over the common one- and 2-phase rectifiers, in that less filtering is required at 360 cycles to reduce the percentage of ripple voltage to any predetermined level, than at 120 cycles. This reduction in required filtering improves the regulation of the rectifier in that the series resistance factor of filter inductances is reduced to a minimum. The regulation of the rectifier is further helped by the use of a mercury vapor rectifier, because the voltage drop in this tube is practically constant for any load within the tube rating. These factors are very important because of the fact that this rectifier supplies plate power to several microphone amplifiers.

The Type PB-79 power supply rack is located adjacent to the PB-56 rack, and includes an a.c. relay panel, two Type PK-15 loudspeaker field supply panels, and two Type PK-20 loudspeaker field supply panels.

The a.c. relay panel includes a number of relays to connect the power to the amplifier of the sound reinforcing system, effect system and rehearsal address system. The two Type PK-15 loudspeaker field supply panels are used to supply power to the loudspeaker fields of the radio and monitoring system. Each panel delivers 0.5 amperes at 100 volts. The two Type PK-20 loudspeaker field supply panels are connected in duplicate, one being used regularly and the other for emergency, and are used to supply power to the fields of the sound reinforcing system and rehearsal address system loudspeakers. Each panel delivers 4.0 amperes at 100 volts.

The battery power supply equipment is all located in the battery room (see Figure 1). This equipment includes four sets of glass jar storage batteries together with charging equipment. A duplicate set of storage battery cells with a capacity of 1,040 ampere-hours is furnished to supply filament current to all microphone amplifiers and field supply to all velocity microphone transmitters of the sound reinforcing system and rehearsal address system. A duplicate set of cells with a capacity of 186 ampere-hours is furnished to supply excitation to all relays used with these systems. The cells are all mounted in racks against the wall.

A battery charging motor-generator set, together with control panel, starter, and necessary switches and conduit boxes, is also furnished. The sets of storage battery cells are so connected that one set of each type are in use when the duplicate sets are being charged.

Six loudspeakers are furnished for use on the sound reinforcing system in the auditorium, four Model 4PL35A1 loudspeakers and two Model 4PL35B1 loudspeakers. These loudspeakers consist of a directional baffle of the exponential type coupled to a 6-inch cone driver of rugged construction. This type of loudspeaker combines the advantage of a flat frequency characteristic with high efficiency, uniformity of response over the entire angle of distribution, and high power handling capacity. (Figure 3 shows one of these loudspeakers.

Speakers

The four Model 4PL35A1 loudspeakers, employing 60-inch directional baffles, are to be mounted behind a grille above the proscenium arch. The two Model 4PL35B1 loudspeakers, employing 37-inch directional baffles, are to be mounted in the wall, one on each side of the proscenium.

For effect purposes two Type PL-64 loudspeakers, having 17-inch directional baffles, will be furnished for mounting at the rear of the stage over the rear stage projection room. These speakers may be connected to the second amplifier channel of the sound reinforcing system for simultaneous or separate operation when back stage sound effects are desired. Each directional baffle employs four of the six inch cone units.

For monitoring purposes, three Model AF6179 loudspeakers will be furnished, one to be located in the spot cove, one at the chief electrician's position, and one in the amplifier room. These loudspeakers consist of a standard magnetic speaker mechanism mounted in the rear of a specially designed wood plaque faced with three ply veneer and the center of matched oriental walnut.

The over-all frequency characteristic of the sound reinforcing system is such as to give uniform reproduction over a range of from 50 to 10,000 cycles.

II

Rehearsal Address System

THIS SYSTEM is to be used in connection with the execution of rehearsals of stage and orchestra presentations. It consists essentially of microphones located at definite positions feeding through amplifiers to a number of loudspeakers located to cover the stage, auditorium and various booths.

Three velocity microphone transmitters will be furnished mounted on stands, two of telescope stand type, and one of the desk stand type. One of these will be located on a desk, which will be placed in the 12th row of the orchestra floor during rehearsals. Another will be located in the director's private box located at the rear of the auditorium. The third is to be located in the control room. In addition, a carbon microphone announcing station, including necessary switches and pilot lamps, will be at the chief electrician's position.

Three microphone amplifiers will be furnished, one for each of the above mentioned velocity microphone transmitters. The amplifier for the transmitter at the 12th row of the orchestra floor, will be located in the amplifier room in the basement under the stage, where the amplifiers for the sound reinforcing system are located. The amplifier for the transmitter in the director's private box is to be located on the wall of the adjacent "spot booth," while the amplifier for the transmitter in the control room is to be located on the wall of that room. The main amplifier used for this system is similar to the one of the amplifier channels used on the sound reinforcing system. The rack is located adjacent to the main amplifiers of the sound reinforcing system in the amplifier room.

A large number of loudspeakers are used with this system to cover the auditorium, entire stage (including light towers), light control stations, and various spot and equipment booths. This equipment includes 25 speakers employing 37-inch directional baffles, and seven employing magnetic units on flat wood baffles. Through the use of these loudspeakers the director or anyone else at a microphone location may communicate with anyone in the theatre concerned with the rehearsal. This system may be used during regular performances, operating certain of the loudspeakers at low level.

III
Stage Manager's Call System

THE PURPOSE of this system is to provide means to the stage manager for conveying instructions and messages to stage employes and performers during rehearsals and performances. The equipment consists of a microphone at the stage manager's position, an amplifier, and a number of loudspeakers located in the employes' offices and all dressing rooms in the theatre.

A carbon microphone announcing station, complete with all necessary switches and pilot lamps, is to be located at the stage manager's position for "close talking" purposes. The main amplifier used on this system is similar in general design to those main amplifiers of the sound reinforcing system. This amplifier rack is to be located in the amplifier room in the basement under the stage.

IV
Main Sound Projection System

THIS SYSTEM consists of a duplicate channel, 80-watt, a.c.-operated sound reproducing system employing four soundhead attachments. This equipment is similar to the "standard" series of RCA Photophone reproducing equipment. The entire projection room equipment is finished in a specially selected green to match the balance of the projection room equipment.

Four Type PS-20 Simplex soundhead attachments are to be furnished with this system for mounting in the projection room (as shown in Figure 1). These attachments are to be mounted on Chicago Cinema bases with Super-Simplex mechanisms. The attachment is the same as supplied with "standard" Photophone equipment, except that 3-phase a.c.-motors are employed.

A duplicate channel 80-watt main amplifier (Type PA-88 and Type PA-87) is to be furnished with this system. The voltage and power amplifier units are the same as those used on the sound reinforcing system. These racks are located in the rear wall of the projection room. All servicing is done from the front.

The PA-88 amplifier includes necessary terminal strips, main line power switch, a voltage amplifier unit, two power amplifier units (40 watts each), a jack panel, a dual channel switching panel, a projector changeover panel, and a loudspeaker field supply panel. The jack panel is to be used for "patching." By this means the main sound projection system may be interconnected with any of the other systems. The rear stage projection system is terminated at this panel and may be connected to the projection system by the use of patching cords. For normal operation no cords are required. The dual channel switching panel includes a switch with a knob mounted on it for switching from one amplifier channel to the other. The changeover panel includes a number of relays and pilot lamps to connect the output of any of the four projectors to the input of the correct amplifier channel. The loudspeaker field supply panel is of sufficient size to produce 0.8 amperes at 100 volts.

The PA-87 amplifier includes necessary terminal strips, main line power switch, a voltage amplifier unit, two power amplifier panels (40 watts each), a loudspeaker field supply panel, and a tube testing panel. The tube testing panel is the same in design and purpose as that supplied with the sound reinforcing system.

Fifty-six loudspeakers in this system will be located in the various dressing rooms, corridors, engineers' rooms, etc.

Forty-eight speakers employ a magnetic speaker unit on flat wood baffles, and eight employ a magnetic speaker unit on a double flat wood baffle, permitting distribution from the front and also from the back of the unit.

Alongside the duplicate amplifier channels, a power supply rack is to be located. This rack includes four exciter lamp panels and a monitoring amplifier unit. Each panel delivers 5 amperes at 10 volts. One exciter lamp panel is supplied for each soundhead attachment. The monitoring amplifier unit is similar to the one described in the sound reinforcing system and operates the monitor loudspeaker in the projection room.

Four fader and volume control stations are to be furnished for wall mounting, one in front of each projector, for fading the amplifier input to the proper soundhead attachment, and for controlling the volume of sound emitted by the loudspeakers. A remote volume control indicator consisting of 20 indicator lamps, which indicate the amplifier volume control setting, is to be furnished for wall mounting in the projection room. Five remote volume key control stations for mounting at various points in the auditorium are also to be furnished.

The stage loudspeaker equipment to be used with this system consists of three loudspeakers with 10-inch baffles, and three with 60-inch baffles. These speakers are similar to those supplied with the sound reinforcing system and illustrated by Figure 3. A speaker having a 37-inch baffle, with metal frame and mesh covering, is to be mounted in the rear wall of the projection room for monitoring purposes.

This sound system is all a.c.-operated. The over-all characteristic of the system is such as to provide for reproduction of all the audible frequencies from 50 to 10,000 cycles.

V
Rear Stage Sound Projection System

THIS SYSTEM is to be used for the projection of sound motion pictures from the rear of the stage to be used as background and for effects in conjunction with the stage presentations. It is all located in the rear stage projection room.

Two Type PS-20 Simplex soundhead attachments for mounting on Chicago Cinema bases with Super-Simplex mechanisms are to be furnished with this system. These attachments are the same as those supplied with the main sound projection system. The amplifier unit is designed to be connected to the input of the main amplifier of the projection system. The units are similar to those of the projection system except that the changeover panel provides for only two projectors.

A film phonograph will be furnished with this system (Figure 4). This unit is to be used for reproduction of a film record type of recording, either alone or in conjunction with a picture on a separate film. A phototube amplifier is to be furnished for operation with the film phonograph, to feed directly into the input of the

SELLING THE ORGANIST AS A FEATURE

By Dick Liebert

The organ solo's spot on today's motion picture theatre program—and in the modern community as well

IT IS A far cry from the days when an organist played the feature and the comedy, went out for a smoke during the newsreel, and wandered back between the first and second reels of the feature.

In those days—well, ask Larry Beatus, former manager of the Palace in Washington and now division chief of Loew's New York houses. His organist caused him more headaches than changed bookings, home offices, disgruntled patrons, opposition houses and all the rest. I know this to be true. I was the organist.

If the girl-friend was on hand, sitting in the front row near the console, there was no special reason why the organist could not carry on a chat with her, hold an F-chord for two or three minutes with the right hand and eat a ham sandwich with the left. Of course, if the picture got highly dramatic rather abruptly, the more sensitive patrons might become somewhat perturbed over such goings-on, but the ambidextrous console artist kept right on munching until the last crumb was gone—probably dropped between the keys to cause a cypher later on!

Then, as you may recall, came sound—and the "talkies." So (to speak in averages) the theatre organists of that period stole softly away, some to churches, some to teaching, most of them back to the piano from which, as a rule, they had been too hastily weaned.

Yet organ music, featured organists, have remained in many motion picture theatres. The reason for this is that during the rise of the deluxe theatre and just prior to the advent of the talking picture, the necessary groundwork for a high type of organ entertainment was being laid. One may refer back to the efforts of such artists as Henry Murtagh, Jesse Crawford, Stewart Barry and others who had the good sense to see the entertainment value of organ solos. Where the examples set by the leading organists of that period were followed, the organ solo has maintained its appeal, and in many cases, increased it. Although I prefer not to mention the organist's name, I can truthfully point to a recent occurrence which reflects this very situation. The organist, who had been featured locally, was dismissed because the manager, in the interests of economy, wished to dispense with the organ solo. The theatre received so many letters of protest from regular patrons that the solo was reinstated, the organist put back on the job.

The backbone of a featured organist's success (provided, of course, that he is competent to handle such a spot) is something not often enough stressed in organists' comment on their work under modern conditions. This something is publicity. There must be plenty of publicity, but—and this is the point I seek to emphasize—it must be of a kind delicately attuned to the organist's following.

What I believe to be a mistake often made in handling the publicity of a featured organist is over-statement. I do not believe in billing with so-called catchy titles as "Wizard of the Console," "Singing Susie," "The Personality Boy," etc. It is my belief that this type of billing serves to "burn out" the organist in a short time.

Let the billing be quiet and in good taste. Remember the organist is there each week, and if he has a pleasing personality, a good voice, or a knack of getting the audience to sing with enthusiasm, let the audience discover it for themselves. It has proved true in many a case I have observed, that bizarre, unrestrained statements only served to put the audience in an "Oh, yeah?" attitude.

Solo technique today not only permits, but demands a wide variety of approach to the patron. Bob West, for instance, uses the rough-and-ready tactics of "Sing, darn you, sing!"—and with much success. Crawford, on the other hand, presents a dignified solo calculated only to induce the most serious attention of his auditors. (The Crawfords also frequently surround their solos with a nicely adjusted, well-timed production.) Milton Charles, Philadelphia's favorite, has a singing voice of excellent quality, which greatly enhances his performance at the console. Henry Murtagh has distinguished himself and won staunch followers with his parodies and authentic musicianship.

Yes, the picture-accompanying organ player of the old order has gone forever, but the true console artist who can be featured as a soloist, has a definite place on the better type of motion picture theatre program. Those who doubt this might have their attitude changed if they attended one of the many theatres in which hundreds of people daily yell their "fool heads off" in a community sing. Sense the warmth toward the theatre in that audience, the receptiveness, and deny that a smartly produced organ solo brings more life into the theatre than any other institutional factor!

The appeal of the organ solo remains. What has changed is the method. Today is needed, besides musicianship, an expertness in the technique of entertaining, and in selling the organist to the community.

I Put the Organ in My Theatre Back to Work

By A. E. Shanley

Manager, Embassy Theatre, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.

HARDLY any theatre in the 1,200-1,500 capacity class has spent less than from $12,000 to $15,000 for the installation of an organ. And what happened to theatre organs with the advent of sound? Most of them have since been laying idle, and have consequently been rotting away.

Some of the houses that were able to engage a competent organist at an average salary, not only built up prestige in the community, but had something to sell besides screen entertainment.

Realizing that the unused organ represented a lot of money that was just being thrown away, and reflecting on the fact that in many instances an organist was an attraction, I talked with several metropolitan managers, and as a result I decided to recondition the organ and install an organist.

I had an opportunity to engage an organist who for three years was a steady drawing card of one of the large circuits. We considered only one thing: Will the organ feature alone warrant the additional expense?

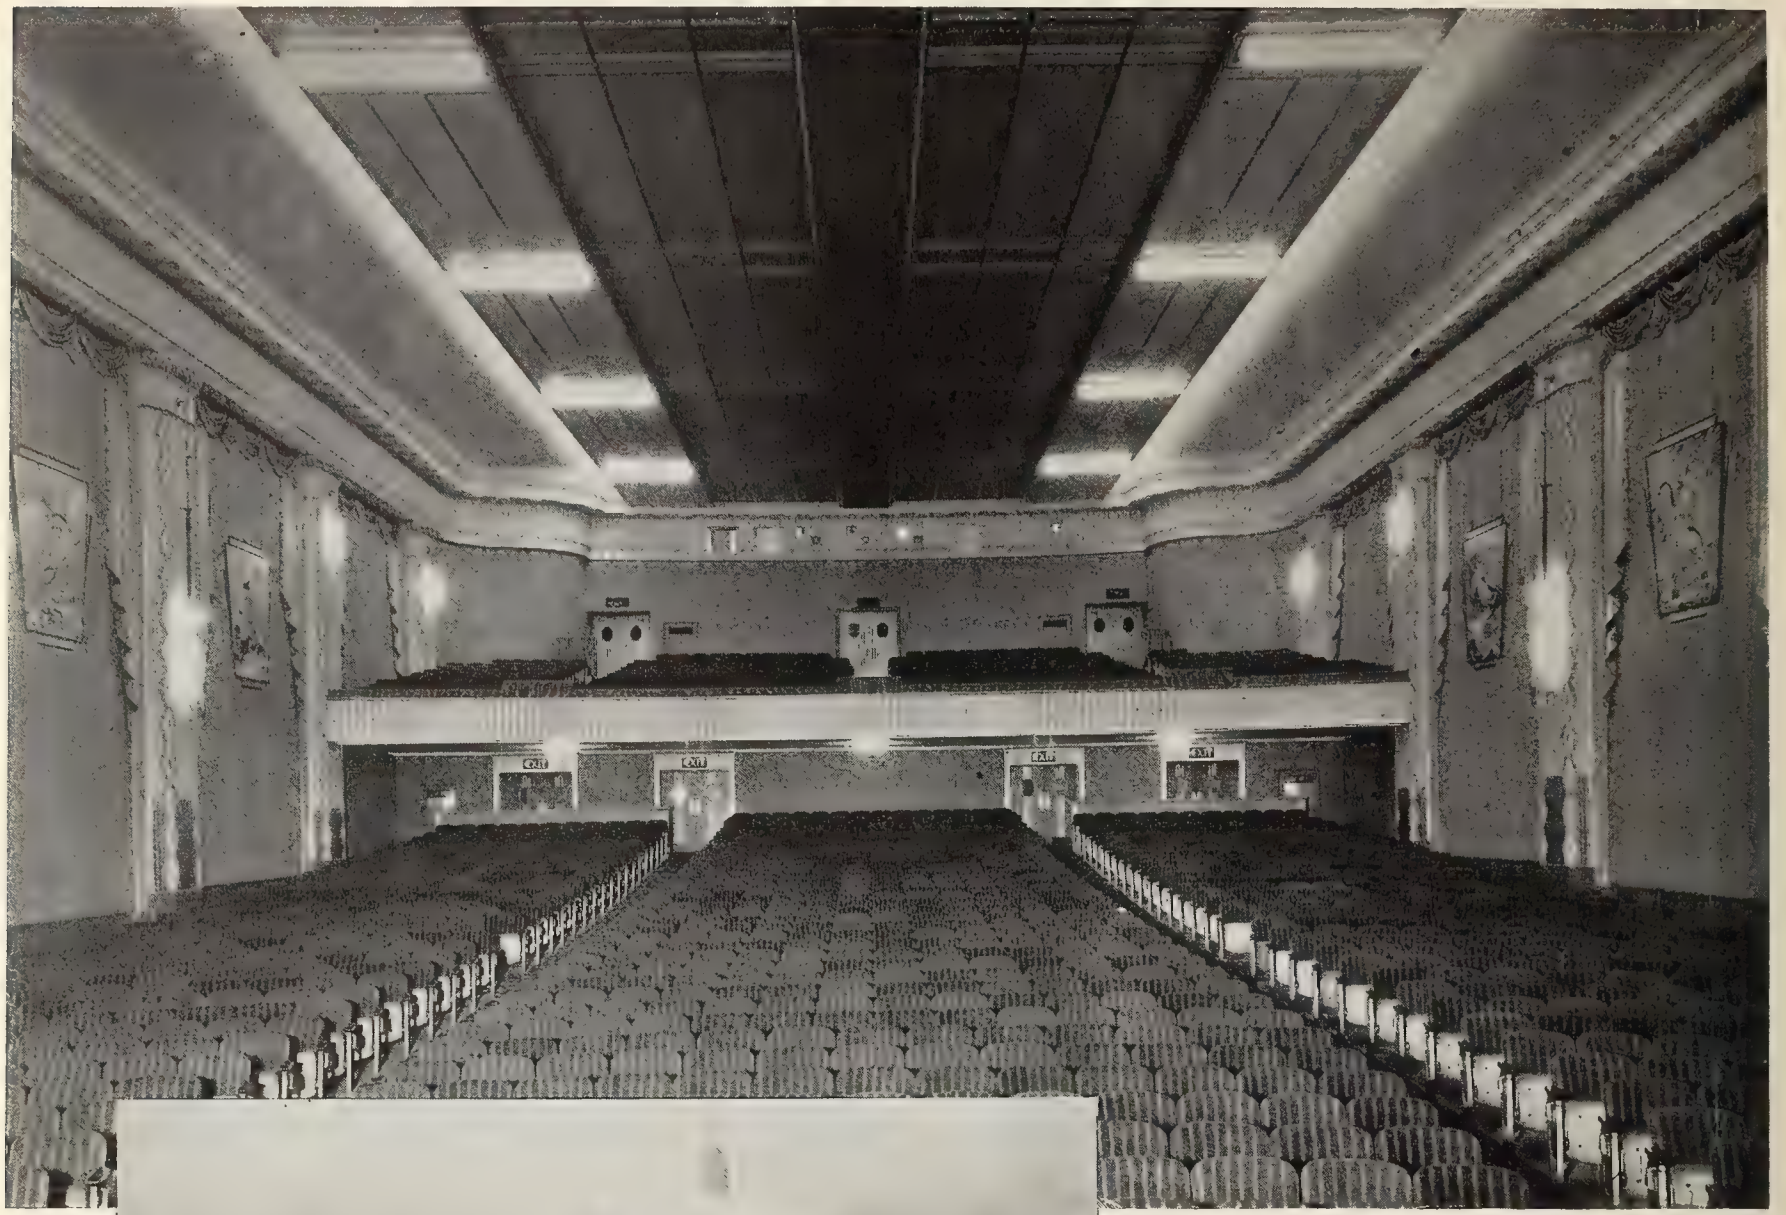
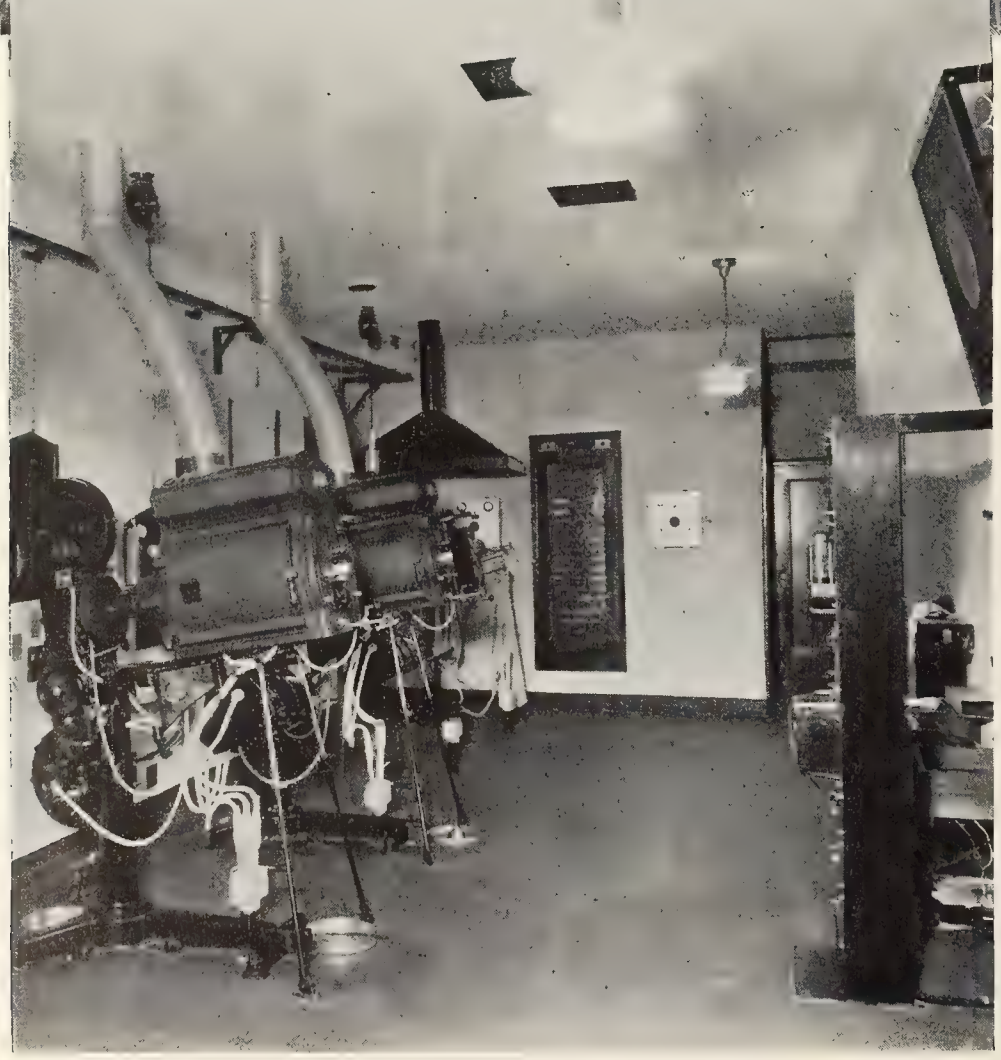
THE NEW WARNER IN RIDGEWOOD

Modernism in theatre architecture and decoration in a late interpretation conceived for a 1,600-seat Warner circuit theatre

THE DEVELOPMENT of the strictly modern style in architecture and decoration has had no more imaginative contributions than those it has received from the field of the motion picture theatre. Looked upon aloofly, and very skeptically at first, the modern manner gradully won an experimental attitude from theatre operators, and after a few designers (who seemed to have a better grasp of just what "modernism" meant) had shown how even the theatre could be brought under today's matter-of-fact spirit without losing its symbolization of the make-believe, adoption of the new materials and forms spread rapidly.



It has been, indeed, the motion picture theatre which has done much to reveal the true nature of modernism, which so long was driven from the over-severe to "Art Moderne." The former wasn't descriptive of the business of the theatre, while the latter was as rococo as any of the theatre designs ridiculed, and as odd to the Western eye.



As more and more attempts have been made to create out of modern materials and forms a building that would yet be a home of fantasy, knowledge of both the style and its implements has grown more definite, more sure. The new Warner theatre in Ridgewood, N. J., clearly reflects this development. In auditorium less than elsewhere, perhaps, but conspicuously in the foyors, the ornate has not been rejected. Yet even in the uses of plaster (backbone of the atmospheric period design) the effect is distinctly of the new order.

The Warner is entered through a vestibule with its box office, and a rectangular lobby, or main foyer. Here the floor is completely covered with carpeting of complex, contrasting pattern, the vivid colors of which contrast with rather plain light walls. At one side is a staircase leading to the balcony level, these stairs being completely hidden from the inward section of the lobby by a wall. The latter, in an effort to avoid monotony of surface, is stepped and further broken by arches, in which urns are set.

The auditorium seats 1,600 on two floors, the upper level being, however, very shallow. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the auditorium treatment (at least from the point of view of its modernism) is the ceiling. Coved its full length, and almost the entire width, it is chiefly a repository for illumination fixtures, with an added element consisting in a series of panels which have the effect of directing the eye right up to the screen. The proscenium arch is square, and extends the full height of the ceiling. At each side of the arch is a square panel extending from floor to ceiling, bearing a pattern modeled in plaster. The walls are essentially plain, carrying scarcely no ornament between the pilasters except allegorical plaques.

To the rear of the main seating level of the auditorium is a promenade.

The facade is of distinctly modern pattern, with setbacks and towering terminations. Constructed in a style harmonizing with the front, and installed as an integral part of it, is a large vertical sign. The marquee similarly has been designed to blend with the architectural treatment of the facade.

Acoustical treatment consists chiefly in sound absorbent fabrics along the walls of the auditorium. The auditorium is also equipped with special lighting facilities providing for mobile colored illumination on a dimmer system

The theatre is fully air-conditioned with ventilation through a plenum system.

LATE COURT DECREES IN THEATRE CASES

By LEO T. PARKER

A digest of recent litigations with the decisions handed down, prepared especially for the manager and the operator of theatres

THE LAW is well established that a theatre owner is liable in damages where he breaches or violates a valid contract, but he is not liable if for any reason the contract is void or invalid.

For example, in United Artists Corporation v. Mills (11 P. [2d] 1025), a theatre operator and a film distributor entered into a contract by the terms of which the theatre operator agreed to exhibit certain films for stated rentals. The contract also provided that the theatre operator "warrants and agrees that during the period each of the photoplays herein provided for shall be exhibited in said theatre, the exhibitor will charge for admission to said theatre an actual admission fee which shall not be less than ten cents . . . and that such photoplays shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged."

When the theatre operator breached the contract by refusing to exhibit the films the distributor filed suit for damages. The theatre operator contended that he should not be held liable for breaching the contract because the above clause violated the Anti-Trust Laws and, therefore, was void. In upholding this contention the court said:

"This provision plainly violates the inhibition against price fixing . . . relating to combinations in restraint of trade."

Preliminary Agreements

WHERE TWO parties enter into a preliminary or oral agreement, neither party is liable for failure to subsequently sign a written contract having stipulations therein not expressed in the preliminary or oral agreement. So held a higher court in the late case of Roig v. Electrical Research Products (57 F. [2d] 639).

In this case it was shown that the owner of a theatre and a seller entered into a preliminary oral agreement by the terms of which the seller agreed to install in the theatre certain electrical sound reproducing equipment. Later the seller presented to the theatre owner a contract which had included therein certain obligations not expressed in the preliminary agreement. The theatre owner refused to sign the agreement and wrote a letter to the seller saying:

'Inasmuch as this document tries to impose upon me obligations that were not specified at the time of the first deal, and that it also calls for payments of lease and service that were not agreed upon originally, my proposal to you now is that you return such monies as I have paid to you amounting to $2,700, that is, $1,080 paid in New York and $1,620 here later, and you, of course, to take your apparatus . . . I have refused to sign the contract because it contains conditions which were not agreed upon and which are prejudicial to my interests."

The seller filed suit against the theatre owner contending that he was liable for payment, particularly because the equipment was completely installed in the theatre and was in use. However, the higher court held the theatre owner not liable, and said:

"Where parties make a preliminary agreement which deals with the subject-matter in a general way, and provides that essential details shall be elaborated and defined in a later instrument, the parties are bound to what is expressly said in the preliminary contract, and to what is included in it by reasonable implication."

Waiver Under Acceleration Clause

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a theatre owner who fails to pay installments in accordance with the terms of a sales contract is liable in damages, and the seller may demand full payment at once which is known as the right of acceleration. On the other hand, if the seller overlooks or ratifies failure of the theatre owner to make payments according to the terms of the contract, he cannot later sue on the right of acceleration.

For illustration, in Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation v. Betman (242 N. W. 903), it was disclosed that a theatre owner purchased certain theatre equipment from the National Theatre Supply Company, Inc. The contract provided: "Title to the goods ordered shall remain in you (seller) . . . at your option, until the undersigned (theatre owner) has delivered to you the undersigned's promissory notes therefor secured by chattel mortgage in form and substance satisfactory to you."

The theatre owner executed, and the National Theatre Supply Company accepted, a chattel mortgage on the equipment to secure payment of twelve promissory notes of $177.48 each. The mortgage and notes contained an acceleration clause giving the seller the right to demand full payment of all of the notes if the theatre owner failed to make one payment. During one month the theatre owner sent a check for $100, instead of a check for $177.48, and the seller accepted the payment. About one month later the seller endeavored to foreclose the mortgage on the grounds that the theatre owner had violated the acceleration clause in the contract.

It is interesting to observe that the court indicated that the seller had forfeited his legal rights under the acceleration clause, and said:

"An acceleration option does not have to be exercised. Default presents the right, but it may be waived, and is waived by acceptance of subsequent payments. The right, if not exercised upon a first default, does not, however, prevent acceleration upon a subsequent default. Defendant's partial default in the first payment gave plaintiff right to have acceleration, but this right was waived by acceptance of subsequent payments, and could not arise again until there was a subsequent default, and then wholly independent of the old default. At the time of the seizure no payment, except the first, was in default, and that default had been waived, so far as right to declare acceleration based thereon, and plaintiff had no right to declare acceleration."

Sunday Closing Law Void

THE FACT that many municipal councils have enacted laws designed to prevent operation of theatres on Sunday results in the recent decision of the higher court being unusually important.

It is well known that the "police power" of a state legislature or city council permits it to make regulations and restrictions to protect the health, morals, safety and welfare of the people, and undoubtedly justifies the enactment of many laws which interfere with and regulate the conduct of the individual in his relations to the public. However, a law of this nature is void which is discriminatory or in violation to the Federal Constitution.

For instance, in Kislingbury v. Treasurer of City of Plainfield (160 Atl. 654), it was disclosed that a city council enacted an ordinance as follows:

"No person shall cry or openly expose for sale any wares, merchandise, fruit, herbs, meats, fish, foods or chattels, or keep open any shop or store or place in which said articles are sold, or in which the occupation of barber, shoemaker, blacksmith, silversmith, or other trade requiring the exercise of manual labor is carried on, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, except in cases of necessity,

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

INSPECTION FOR THE NEW SEASON

By A. N. MASON

Here is a handy check-list of salient matters about which the projectionist will want to reassure himself as a new show-time begins

WITH THE opening of the new theatrical season, careful check of projection and sound equipment is more than essential—it is vital. Any chances that may have been taken on the continuity of the show in the interests of economy, ought not, obviously, to be extended into the most active part of the year when a break will mean the largest number of refunds and the maximum of patron ill-will. Nor should a slipshod performance, tolerated perhaps, in the dog-days, be permitted during the theatre's potentially busiest period. A thorough recheck of projection room equipment is imperative. Such a recheck may begin, logically, at the source of power.

Power Sources

(1) THE ARC lamp must be lit with direct current. In localities where the power company supplies only alternating current—that is, over most of the country, a motor-generator or a projection rectifier must be used to effect the necessary conversion. A motor-generator badly worn (or inadequate to the demands placed upon it since the advent of sound, with its less reflective screen) should be rehabilitated or replaced, as the circumstances may indicate. Repair may mean anything from new bearings to redressing the commutator. Replacement may involve a new motor-generator, or the installation of the often less expensive projection rectifier.

(2) Power supply for the sound system needs special attention, since small troubles with it are likely to be more serious than small troubles with the arc source. Motor-generators for supplying sound currents should be carefully inspected, and commutator and other repairs made as they become necessary. Storage batteries for sound use need more than inspection; if the theatre has been closed down they should be put on "discharge" for a while to see how well they stand up under drain. If the storage batteries need replacement, conversion to all-electric operation by the installation of rectifiers or motor-generators should be given serious consideration.

(3) Sound "B" batteries that have been idle over the summer should be very carefully checked for voltage and tested with headphones for noise in operation. In many instances it will be found they must be replaced.

Mechanical Wear

(1) THE FALL rehabilitation must of necessity include a check upon all parts subject to mechanical wear. These include the projetor head, the sound "attachment," the feeding mechanism of the arc, and the bearings of all motors and generators. Evidence of wear can sometimes be observed by the eye, sometimes it can be heard, sometimes it can only be detected by the development of heat after the mechanism in question has been run for a sufficient length of time.

(2) Projector wear can usually be discovered by observing the steadiness of the picture on the screen, by the vibration of the head, and by visual inspection of its parts, including the dismantling of such as are not immediately visible. The steadiness of sound reproduction and absence of flutter in the sound is also a relevant indication.

Sound Equipment

(1) THOSE PORTIONS of the sound equipment which are not subject to mechanical wear deserve none the less careful check for evidences of mere aging, or of electrical wear. Tubes can (in some cases) be tested by the local radio dealer. In all cases they can be tested, more or less completely, by means of the meters furnished with the sound system. Optical trains should be inspected for evidences of oil seepage or of poor adjustment. Bolts holding together the laminations of power transformers should be examined and taken up—if these laminations become loose a hum in the sound may result. All soldered connections should be most carefully inspected—it is scarcely possible to be too careful in this—and those that need it, resoldered. The sound system ground should have special attention in this connection. It should be traced and checked from end to end.

(2) Every part of the system that carries current should be closely watched for evidence of overheating in operation.

Cleanliness

SURPLUS DIRT and grease, collecting during the year and possibly while the theatre was closed for the summer, should be carefully washed away. Lenses, whether of projection or for the exciting light, deserve careful cleaning. All tubes should be removed from their sockets and the contact prongs checked for cleanliness and tension. Small sound switches, relays, rheostats, volume controls, all deserve a bath in carbon tetrachloride ("Carbona"). Dust and dirt should be blown out of amplifier and rectifier panels with a bellows or with a vacuum cleaner reversed. The tops of storage batteries should be cleaned and dried; the contacts scraped, re-made and revaselined.

Lubrication

AS THE crankcase of a car needs draining, so old grease and oil should be removed from as many as possible of the moving parts of the projection room. The dashpot under the disc turntable, for example, should be cleaned out and refilled. Old oil, filled with grime that may score moving parts, should be washed away from, at least, every moving part that is undergoing a thorough overhauling, and new lubrication applied. It may not be practicable to extend the same treatment to all the moving parts in a projection room—so far as practicable from the point of view of the time involved, it very much deserves doing.

The Screen

THE SCREEN is a part of the projection room equipment, located outside. A sample of the same material, obtained from the screen's manufacturer, may be pinned to the screen in use, and light projected upon both. This will clearly reveal how much the screen has deteriorated—how much the picture has darkened, or how much excessive lamp current is being drawn in a desperate attempt to make a dull screen bright. The best sound screens, according to careful and impartial tests, cannot be expected to give acceptable service for more than two years. Depending on the make of the screen and upon local conditions of the atmosphere, the screen may need replacement in far shorter time. Clinging to an old screen after its period of usefulness has expired is not only a source of unnecessary eyestrain to one's patrons; it is a waste of money in view of the

The WINNING hand

● The odds are always with you when you hold winning cards! To be a consistent winner at the box office, your theatre must be correctly equipped throughout. Its reputation for mechanical fitness is of far more importance than the type of pictures you book and play; because the damaging effect of an occasional "flop" picture may soon be lived down. Inadequate equipment puts a steady strain on your box office. Its effects linger on and are further aggravated at every performance. . . . The theatre-going public is equipment conscious. Theatre patrons are quick to appreciate and applaud house improvements—provisions for their physical comfort and relaxation. . . . National offers you the equipment you need to make your theatre more attractive to its patrons. At one complete money-saving transaction, we will help you put your house in order for a brisk return to prosperity. Now is the time to act. Further delay will continue to prove costly. additional cost in current and carbons which it imposes at the lamp house.

(3) Much the same method of check applies to the condition of the sound "attachment," in connection with which the presence or absence of flutter in the reproduction is especially significant.

(4) The bearings of generators and motors sometimes reveal excessive wear by their unsteadiness in action, sometimes by the presence of unnecessarily large end-play, and sometimes only by overheating in operation.

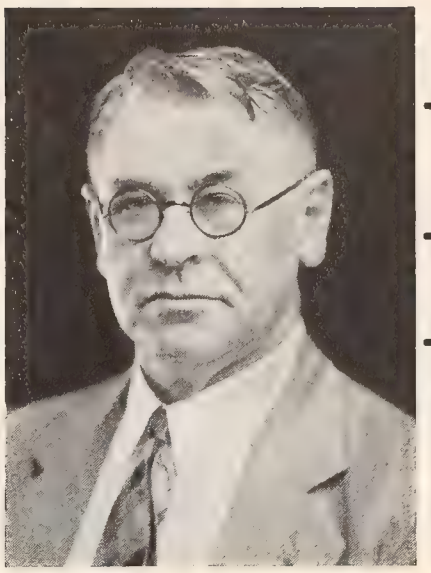
(5) The fader, volume controls, and rheostats of the sound system should also be examined in this connection, for evidence of scoring of contact points, looseness of rheostat contacts, and similar evidences of the effects of friction and of motion.

(6) The arc feed is susceptible, in most cases, of visual examination, together with a check upon the actual operation of the feeding device. With some types of lamphouses a degree of dismantling will be necessary to render the mechanism fully visible.

Projection Results THE PERFECTION, or lack of it, of the picture upon the screen, is of course subject to visual check, with particular reference to jumpiness, to "travel ghost," to sharpness of focus and evenness of illumination. The Fall rehabilitation is as good a time as any to install sharper lenses, or to secure better light. The new condensers—which do not crack under heat—may profitably be installed at this time.

Sound Results (1) TEST REELS of sound should be run with special attention given to clarity of the sound, absence of flutter, absence of extraneous noise, reproduction of the higher frequencies, and above all to distribution. An especially careful check of the distribution of sound throughout the auditorium is in order wherever, because of summer closing or of neglect, there is a possibility that the positioning of the speakers has been disturbed.

(2) Careful check should be made for any causes of extraneous noises, whether originating within the sound system or elsewhere in the theatre. Beginning with the Fall, fans—that great source of noise in many houses—are no longer used, and exit doors are more often kept closed, eliminating street noises. The exhibitor at this season, therefore, has an excellent chance to make his operation noiseless. On the other hand, his failure to do so becomes the more conspicuous because the sources of disturbance just mentioned are removed. Being largely excusable, they may mask others which the audience will not excuse at all.



(3) Relatively expensive improvements, such as acoustic treatment, may also well be considered at this time, when the results obtained will affect the largest number of patrons within the shortest interval of time.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

REPLYING TO COMPLAINTS ON THE STANDARD PRINT

C. M. SWABB, projectionist of the Starr theatre in Arkansas City, Kans., writes a letter (one of the best I have had in some while) that should be of much interest to projectionists, theatre managers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

"This is my first letter to you," he begins. "I feel rather a slacker after reading so many projectionists' letters appearing in the department for the good of our profession, and as I am such a small cog in this gigantic machine, a wee bit of my personal history might perhaps be set forth.

"I am now entering my thirteenth year as a projectionist and am now employed in a very nice little theatre in Arkansas City, Kans., the Starr. I am proud to say that this theatre, though only a little more than a year old has built up a reputation for good, clean, diversified picture programs with bright and clear projection and sound. And now for the reason of this communication:

"I recently read a letter published by you from Mr. Lester Cowan, executive Secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, regarding complaints made by projectionists concerning poor mechanical condition of prints and low visibility of changeover signals. What I am about to say may cause you to infer that I am a crab and chronic knocker. Such, however, is very far from the truth. There is a considerable number of theatres in this country which deserve rotten prints, for the simple reason that the so-called projectionist is merely a machine operator—a man who imagines the intermittent movement to be some kind of hoochey-coochey. Such a theatre usually has a manager, or a man who signs his name over that title, whose lack of reasoning power and foresight permits him to employ such a man, and makes him unable to understand the fact that new replacement parts and the maintenance of equipment in first-class condition are gilt-edge investments.

"There have been many complaints pertaining to the standard release print and changeover signals now being used by a large percentage of the producers. Frankly, I find myself unable to understand such complaints. Is it that they object to examining and checking on changeover signals before projecting a production? If so, they should have sufficient pride and the desire for perfect presentation to spur them on to make sure about the print and the changeover signal marks, even if they have been assured by the exchange that they are all right.

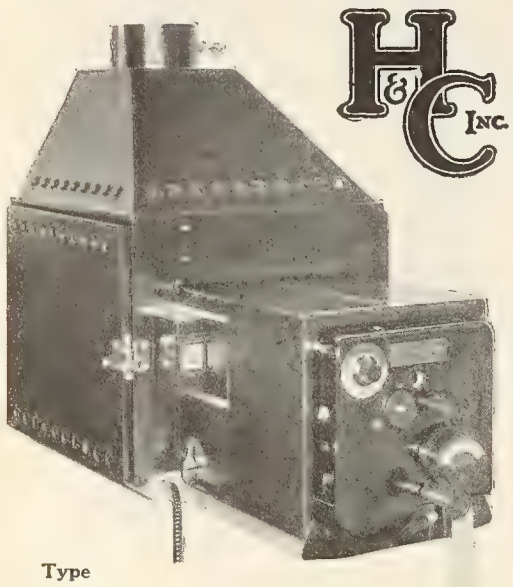
"As to the low visibility of the standard changeover signal marks, I have yet to see a print carrying the standard release print changeover marks which were not visible to me on the screen. I am very much afraid that some of the complaining men should have their eyes examined. How some of them ever manage to see the screen at all is more than I can fathom, since they seem to be compelled to have crosses, holes and white screens in order to know that it is about time to make a changeover.

"Here is a solution for the white screen when the machine operator has fallen asleep. At the end of each reel attach a lengthy piece of black leader with a sound track containing a tingling bell followed by a deep voice recorded in an extra-loud tone, 'Hey, Rube! Why don't you do something.' If that does not turn the trick, then hire a ta-ta man to go up and fix him up good!

"We premiered a picture, 'Congress Dances,' that marvelous musical spectacle by Ufa, at a special owl show on the Fourth of July. It was a new print, 'Standard,' which probably had been used for not more than one or two showings in Kansas City. It was mounted on nine reels, three of which had the changeover marks removed entirely, apparently by someone who objected to those black dots. New marks are not necessary until more splices have been made in the ends of these reels, as the present splices can be used for changeover signals.

"Some men object to the fact that the black dots are not of equal distance on all reels. Phooey! Why object to a little thing like that? Use the old head and thread the projector in accordance with the dots. Surely the projectionist should be mathematically inclined to the extent of determining the number of seconds his projector requires to attain normal running speed."

Brother Swabb has written sharply but his criticisms are not unjust, except in one point: There is a very decided difference in screen illumination in various theatres. With brilliant illumination I agree with Swabb. The man who cannot see those dots should have his eyes examined. On the other hand, if the screen illumination be weak and the house illumination be fairly strong—well, that's something else again.



I would like to have the reaction of some of our readers to his criticisms. It is argument that helps to get us somewhere, because it shows the Powers-That-Be what the men themselves think concerning some of these things, and after all, the opinion of one competent working motion picture projectionist, on matters of this kind, is worth the opinion of a dozen theorists.

WHAT CARELESS WORK DOES

HOW MANY projectionists who read this will be able to say with certainty, based upon intelligent, carefully conducted experiment, that their light sources are as close to the collector lenses as it is practicable to have them? How many of you realize the possibilities for waste of light, and therefore for waste of electric power, set up by an unnecessary distance between the light sources and collector lens? Come, let us go into a huddle and talk it over!

Selecting purely arbitrary figures, let us assume a collector lens to be 4 inches from the light source, whereas it might be located, without excessive breakage, 3½ inches from the lens. An exaggerated case, perhaps, but examples fully as bad as that are nevertheless not infrequently encountered. Acting under the assumption that the condenser is a plano-convex 4.25 inch free diameter combination, and that 8.8 kw. of power are being consumed, which we assume is paid for at the rate of $.06 per kw.-hour, let us examine into the matter.

A 4.5 inch diameter circle has an area of Eight Big Improvements

Eight improvements — and no advance in price—make Phototone Talkafilm the sound equipment for your theatre. Radical improvements have been made in the sound head; the silent chain drive; the optical system; the photo electric cell assembly; the exciter lamp housing; the all-electric amplification system. That's seven: the eighth is the directional speaker that overcomes bad acoustical conditions.

Your Projectionist Can Install

Also he can service the Phototone Talkafilm. These eight improvements and other features make the instruments extremely simple. That means low first cost and lower operating cost.

Over 2500 theatres use Platter Sound Equipment with complete success. Phototone Talkafilm reproduces with absolute fidelity—the reason for the profits it brings you. Made for Powers and Simplex. Send for illustrated folder.

14.186 square inches. In order to pick up or collect the same amount of light at a 4-inch distance that a 1.24-inch diameter lens would collect at 3.5-inches, the lens would have to have an area of 18.765 square inches. It then follows that by locating the 4.25-inch diameter lens four inches from the light source, there is a waste of 18.765—14.186=4.579, or practically 4.5 square inches, and since 4.5 is approximately 32% of the area of a 4.25-inch diameter lens, it is evident that 32% of the total available light is wasted.

However, the matter is not really quite so bad as that, because of the fact that the strongest light is concentrated at the central zones of the collector lens. However, we will be liberal and allow that the actual loss is only half what it seems to be. Let us then figure it out for ourselves.

There is 8.8 kw. being used. The price is 6c per kw.-hour. We will assume the theatre to operate eight hours per day, so that 8.8×8, or 70 kw.-hours are being used, which, when multiplied by 6c, tells us that $4.20 worth of current is being consumed at the projection arcs. Now if we know that half of 32%, or 16%, of the power is being wasted through carelessness in lens location, we have but to make a very simple calculation to find that the waste amounts to 67c per day, or the price of three admissions in a 25-cent admission house.

Let us follow this through: Sixty-seven cents per day amounts to $4.69 per week. It is $20.10 each 30 days, and $328.55 each year of 365 days, or six or seven weeks' wages for most projectionists.

Imagination? Not on your life! This waste occurs to a greater or less extent in literally thousands of theatres in this country and Canada. Last summer I remonstrated with the projectionist in a large theatre on the distance his light source was from the collector lens. His comeback was that he could not have it closer for the reason that the manager was angry if a lens broke. What he was doing to avoid lens breakage was costing that theatre enough in wasted electric power to buy a wash tub full of lenses, and a lot besides. But the loss is insidious. It is something the exhibitor cannot see, hence he does not believe it exists. Just the same, his pocketbook knows of it in time.

SLIP-SHOD METHODS AND PERFECT EXCUSES

RECENTLY I noticed a card on the walls of an office, reading: "It takes less time to do a thing right than is required to explain why you did it wrong."

Seldom has a greater amount of truth been set forth in an equal number of words. It would be well were some of the "Aw-That's-Good-Enough" type of projectionists to have the above hung beside one of the observation ports.

The "Aw-That's-Good-Enough" guy corresponds to the housewife who sweeps the dirt up in a corner or under the edge of a rug. To him the easiest way is the best ways. Expert knowledge would be quite all right with him were he able to acquire it without effort. But work for it? Don't be silly!

There is one commodity Mr. Easyway Lazybones is always well supplied with, however. When he does something in a half-hearted, slip-shod, easy way, trusting in Providence that it will come out all right, and the darned thing doesn't, he is aways long on "explanations," excuses, etc. The only trouble is that not one of them is really worth Adam. And the boss knowing the type of man he is dealing with, very well knows they are not worth anything either. At least, if he is blessed with brains, he takes said excuses with a tablespoonful of salt.

And the queer part is that if you keep an ear trained on this chap, you will soon have it filled chockful of kicks. He doesn't receive half enough pay, for one thing. The boss doesn't treat him right.

Personally, I am for the man whose chief criticism of his work is that it is not good enough to suit him, and who is obsessed with the idea that he might at least know a bit more than he does. He is the fellow who seldom offers excuses, for the simple reason that there is no just reason why he should. If he does offer one, you may gamble ten dollars to a busted toothpick that it is a perfectly legitimate one. I'll go the limit with that chap. I'll back up any reasonable demand he may make for good wages for the simple reason that he gives value received. The other sort is a pain in the neck.

AS A UNION MAN SEES IT

A LETTER has been received from George A. Yager, business manager of the Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union 250, IATSE & MPMO. It is commended to your very serious consideration, not because I feel that the article in question has any real need for defense, but by reason of the fact that the reactions of an experienced union man, holding an important position in his union, is of large interest. The letter in part is as follows:

"Dear Friend Rich: I regretted not finding you at the Columbus convention, but enjoyed seeing such old friends as Thad Barrows, P. A. McGuire, Jim Finn and others. We all spoke of you. It was unanimously agreed that your presence would have helped materially. The real reason for this letter, however, is your editorial entitled 'A Good Union Man,' in the July 30th issue of BETTER THEATRES. Permit me to hasten to the defense of this article, if any defense is necessary.

"Several traits in projectionists which I have observed during my experience serves to prove the argument you advance to be correct. I have myself observed two kinds of union men, though of course with many variations. The first type, and I believe the type you would consider as a good union man, is the kind who is willing to make any sort of personal sacrifice for the good of the organization, particularly as pertains to his own local organization. Being of that disposition, such men are willing to, and in fact I might say they consider it their duty to, give the best that is in them to their work for the purpose of building up two things; namely, their organization, and a reputation for excellence of service which cannot be successfully assailed.

"Such men give untiringly of time and effort to their local union, without any thought of compensation, at the same time devoting all possible spare time to technical research in their chosen profession, and to the study of the various equipments it is necessary for them to handle and use. These are the men who, when on the job, take the initiative in seeing that all parts of the equipment are kept in first-class condition, and try to show other members of the crew the very obvious necessity for following their own example. They are at all times willing to offer suggestions to the management as to changes in the equipment which will either enhance the value of the performances, or make for more efficient work.

"The second type of men is the kind I would term salary grabbers. They are the men who feel they are entitled to an increase in salary the first of every September, regardless of business conditions. They willingly take these advances year after year, but are unwilling to make concessions the other way when times or business is bad. Such men are properly called 'machine operators' for the reason that they are incapable of being anything else. They are only interested in being able to thread a projector and do the other purely mechanical things incident to the operation of the equipment. They have no feeling of responsibility, either to themselves, their families, their union or their employer. They are what we might liken to good catchers but very poor pitchers—always willing to catch, but never willing to pitch."

I thoroughly indorse every sentence of the foregoing. Brother Yager is, as I have said, an earnest, long-time union man of the right sort, meaning that he is a good union man in the full meaning of the term.

I would be very willing to hear from others on this subject, but not merely personal opinions and not abuse. All communications thus far received with regard to this article have merely expressed the favorable opinion of their writers. Brother Yager is the only one who has set forth genuine, constructive argument, either for man in the full meaning of the term that I have used.

THE EFFECT OF LOW WAGES

FROM THE letter of a projectionist (whose name I think should not be printed) I quote the following paragraphs: "I have been working as a projectionist hard and for little pay until quite recently. I am not now receiving what a good man should receive and I have firm belief that I am a good man. The low pay of projectionists in the state of Maine is nothing short of deplorable. I know of one case where a projectionist (not a machine operator) is working six nights a week, with double shows and a matinee on Saturday, for six whole dollars each and every week. What the solution of a problem of this sort, I do not know.

"Well, Rich, I want to thank you for the service you have rendered. I will continue hoping for the best. I wish for you the best of luck in your many endeavors to improve projection processes."

I venture the assertion that such exhibitors pay a very high price—a very high price indeed—for their attitude in this particular thing. All over this wide world employers must pay for ability, if ability is to be made really effective. Low wages, as I have many, many times said, in the very nature of things attracts only men of meagre ability. True, there are exceptions, but in the very nature of things, men who are compelled to work for the low remuneration do not feel the incentive to make their ability effective nearly to the extent they would were the pay at least reasonable. And $6.00 a week, even in these times, is entirely unreasonable.

Surely the fact ought now to be recognized by all theatre managers and exhibitors, that expert ability in the projection room means added income to the box office. Letters of this sort, however, show that it is not. It is indeed strange that any exhibitor or theatre manager of today would fail to believe that unless he pay sufficient money to secure ability in his projection room and to induce the projectionist to put real effort into his work, he is going to lose money in the end.

Get Readjusted

The exhibitors who will make money in 1933 are the ones now taking advantage of 1932 prices to equip themselves for a new type of demand.

People have thoroughly learned the bitter lesson of getting the most for their money. The days have gone when almost anything on film was a show. Now, in order to pay, a show must not only be good, but it MUST have good presentation. Just try to get by with 1929 equipment in 1933!

Syncrofilm's steady improvement has kept it well ahead of the new demand. Showmen who now buy Syncrofilm will find their houses favored. Syncrofilm delivers what the choosy, hard-boiled 1933 patron will demand—a whale of a show for very little money.

Motion picture theatres, especially those in the smaller cities and towns, are dependent for their income upon the number of times their patrons attend each month. The theatre patron who sees a picture beautifully projected and hears sound of real excellence, will feel inclined to attend that theatre more often than he will if the projection be poor and the sound bad.

Please understand that by the foregoing I do not mean that small town men should be paid city wages. The small town theatre cannot possibly afford it. But the men should be paid at least as much as any skilled workman in that particular locality is paid.

This is not intended as a wage argument, but as an effort to show the exhibitor that extremely low wages to projectionists may very easily save him one dollar at the expense of three or four.

A SUGGESTION FROM AUSTRALIA

FROM Australia, something like 12,000 miles away, comes the following, written by A. B. Buttler, projectionist of the Princess theatre in Fremantle East:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I have had an idea in my noodle for some time, but owing to the size of the subject—I have been putting it off. Now, listen to this!

"Situated as we are over here on the other side of the world, we have not the opportunity of hearing any of your famous lectures. However, I have followed your travels, or rather reports of the same, through the Motion Picture World, and later on through the BETTER THEATRES and MOTION PICTURE HERALD, since away back in 1916. And now for my 'life size' idea:

"What would be wrong with you inducing one of the leading producers to help you make a two-reel sound lecture suitable for release in Australia? If that were done, we over here would be the happiest lot of 'chasers' (I know that term is out of date since the advent of sound and regular projection speed) you could find in a month's travel. I might say that out here you are recognized as the 'Father of Projection,' and that is no hooey, either.

"Our theatre, the Princess, is one of the Union Theatres' Australian circuit. It seats 1,800. It has Western Electric sound. We have been 'off the air' only about 30 minutes all told since sound was put in, in 1929. We have two Simplex projectors, Mirror Arcs, Martin Rotary Converter and a stand-by motor-generator set. Our current supply is 440 volts, 40 cycles. I believe it is the only 40-cycle supply in West Australia.

"Well, that is all, and I think the 'all' is quite a bit, provided my suggestion can be followed. I shall hope to hear from you through BETTER THEATRES—or through our sound equipment."

A letter of this kind from far off countries, rather warms the cockles of the heart. It is nice to know that the work one has tried through so many years to put value into, is appreciated, even far away.

I used to receive a letter occasionally from Australia and New Zealand, but of late their number has dropped off, which is not to be wondered at, considering the length of time it takes to get a letter here and an answer back. Buttler's letter was written July 12, and received only on August 19.

As to the suggestion, in my humble opinion the thing would have very real value. That the lectures I have given in this country and Canada during past years had much value is generally conceded. We already have a one-reel negative, the showing of which in Australia would doubtless be instructive.

THE COLOR OF SCREEN MASKING

MANY YEARS ago, about 1910 I think it was, screen images were entirely unbordered by any contrasting color. The screen itself consisted in either a piece of cloth or a plastered surface, usually painted or calcimined white. Surrounding the picture was usually a white area (more or less clean) and nothing else. I then suggested that bordering the screen image with black would improve matters. I recommended that it be done, and soon (the results being so astonishingly good) all screens were black-bordered.

Later, however, it was declared by others that black borders were all wrong. The screen border, said they, should be a soft gray, or this, that or the other color. The black border provided too much contrast. Of course I accepted their decision, since it had the support of men of science, though without being very thoroughly convinced they were right.

Now comes the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences with a recommendation that screen images be bordered in black!

In the latest bulletin issued by that organization we find the following, "Screen Masks.—Correct masking of the projection screen is very important. Black material should be masked over the tip, bottom and sides of the screen only just enough to secure a sharp edge."

You will note that black is recommended for the purpose, though exactly what may be the meaning of "just enough to secure a sharp edge" might be a subject for argument. (May I recommend that the Academy be just a bit more explicit in its directions.) Presumably what is meant is a strip a few inches wide. Possibly only an inch or two is meant. In such matters the projectionist very rightly wants to know exactly what is meant.

My own modernized view of picture masking is that where a not very brilliant screen illumination is used, a black border extending from, say, 1 inch inside the picture, to from 1 to 3 feet (depending upon circumstances) outside, is best. Where brilliant screen illumination is employed I agree that a wide black border is perhaps not so good as a black border extending from 1 inch inside the picture to, say, 2 inches outside, with (if cloth be used) some outer border of not too light a gray in a width suitable to the conditions—with a minimum width, however, of 18 inches. If the outer border be painted, then I believe the best effect will be had if the inner border of black be shaded off gradually into a gray, or possibly into some color such as tuscan red, or perhaps grass green.

The color suggestion (red and green) is, however, only a guess. I have not seen it tried, but have an idea it might work out well, particularly if the screen be surrounded by colors, as on a stage. The border should then of course tend to blend with the predominating surroundings. Should any of you try this out, let me have your report, please.

Incidentally, the Academy says in its bulletin, "Frame from the Top.—New product is framed from the top of the picture by the studios and should be framed from the top of the picture in projection as well, in order to allow the headroom intended in photography." Which means that when the cinematographer is taking the picture, he pays attention only to the top of the scene, therefore the projectionist should always frame his new-dimension pictures so that the upper framing line (upper on the screen, of course) is just out of sight, paying no attention to the bottom. If this be not done, some poor screen artist is likely to be parading through a scene minus his brain pan, or possibly his whole head.

THE CASE FOR UNPERFORATED SCREENS

I PROPOSE now to spring something which doubtless will cause some of the Wise Ones immediately to make pointed, uncomplimentary remarks concerning "Richardson's nerve." Just to satisfy them and all and sundry, I will preface my remarks with the statement that the old nerve is still functioning, healthy and strong as ever. Also, may I recall how many times Richardson has been called "crazy" because he has stood in opposition to accepted theory, only later to be declared "uncrazy" when his views were finally proved to be correct? And now here is my latest heresy:

I am of the opinion that there is absolutely no need for perforated screens. I believe as good, or even better, results might be had with the sound projectors (horns) located either at the top and bottom, or at the sides of the screen.

There, jump on that, good friends! But before jumping, just remember that some very eminent sound engineers have expressed themselves as not at all certain that my contention as above expressed is not correct! Also some fine projectionists have said the same thing.

I am of the opinion that if an unperforated screen be installed, with camouflaged sound projectors arranged around it so as to secure even sound distribution, and an audience be assembled without knowledge of the change, not one soul in that audience would know the difference!

However, if patrons knew of the change, they in all human probability would immediately be of more or less divided opinion as to the results. Some doubtless would find no fault, others would not be certain, and still others probably would immediately declare the effect to be terrible. And these latter would be perfectly honest, too. They would be of the type who, having decided that such a sound projector location would produce ill effects, would actually and honestly find ill effects, whether there were really any or not. Psychology often works that way.

If my contention be true, look at the obvious advantages of nonperforation. First, there is a gain in reflected light, presumed to be about 10%, which means a 10% reduction in electric bills for equal illumination. Second, a solid screen surface is much more easily recoated or cleaned than a perforated one. Third, the screen acts as a baffle, which unquestionably—must, besides cutting out sound wave force, throw back upon the horn receiver objectionable sound waves, or atmospheric reactions, at any rate.

Placed at the sides or top and bottom, or with smaller horns at all four locations, the camouflage could be of such nature that it would obstruct the sound waves but very little. This could hardly fail to result in the same sound level with much less energy absorbtion by the sound projectors. Doubtless, however, it would necessitate a very careful location of the horns to secure proper sound distribution. Certainly the baffle effect of the screen now must have considerable effect in the matter of securing even sound distribution. It would seem to, at least.

May I suggest to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, that at the Fall meeting a theatre be provided with horns arranged around the screen—very carefully arranged to secure maximum results in sound distribution—and a show be run for the S. M. P. E. delegates some evening, without any one having knowledge of the change. It will not be necessary to change the screen. Consider, however, that it is absolutely essential to convincing results that the audience have absolutely no knowledge, or even suspicion, that anything out of the ordinary is occurring, that any change in horn location has been made. The human mind can imagine a surprising number of things, and once a man has the idea that something he just knows won't work is being done, well that is apt to settle the matter insofar as he is concerned.

THE RANGE OF PROJECTION WORK

RECENTLY in a discussion of projection matters with an exhibitor, I asked if he had consulted with his projectionist with regard to the selection of a new screen he had installed, only to have this shot back at me, "Why, what business is that of his?"

And right there friend exhibitor and I had an argument. I do not mean that the projectionist should have the final say in the selection of screens, in auditorium lighting and things of that nature, although they do affect projection results.

I do hold, however, as a matter of common sense and good business procedure, that the chief projectionist should be consulted about such matters. I do also hold that it is the duty of the projectionist to study any and everything which affects the results he places before the audience, and to come to at least a reasonable understanding of everything involved in perfecting those results.

"But," says the projectionist, "that means hard study and work, for which the pay of the projectionist is not adequate."

Well, Brother, how can you expect to get paid for knowledge unless you possess it? First, you must be able to impress the exhibitor with the fact that you do understand these things, and therefore it is really worth while to call you into consultation. That is plain common sense, is it not? When I was projecting pictures in Chicago many years ago, the boss voluntarily raised my wages because I studied and was able to impress him with the idea that what I told him about various things having to do with projection were nearer right than what anybody else told him, so one day he came up and without any request or demand having been made, increased my wages.

I do not say you would get more wages if you studied harder and understood some things better than you now do, but I do think that you would assume a decidedly more important place in the eyes of the boss, and would in the end have increased your own self-respect very considerably—quite possibly your wages as well.

I hold it to be the duty of the projectionist to understand, as thoroughly as may be, any and everything which has an effect upon what he is placing before the public.

RESPONSIBILITY IN FILM MUTILATION

IN PAST YEARS many near-projectionists have, through lack of careful attention to duty, damaged prints, with the result that very often there was an acrimonious discussion between the theatre and exchange as to which would foot the bill. Better watch your step now, however, for at last a court decision (the first of its kind, we are advised) has been handed down, holding the theatre to be responsible for such damage.

Over in New Jersey a projectionist employed by the Jersey City Theatre Company managed somehow to damage one or more reels of a print very seriously by scratching. His employers, we are told, refused to accept responsibility for the damage, and the exchange brought suit. The court held the theatre responsible and fixed damages at 3¾ cents per foot, or a total of $237.35.

Miss Marion Maloney, inspector at the exchange, testified that the print was in good condition when sent to the theatre. The projectionist who used the film, according to Mr. Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board, who represented Columbia Pictures, owners of the film, admitted that the scratching was possibly due to dust gathered at the aperture plate.

Personally I would say that any dust would be likely to collect at some other place. Anyhow, while I am inclined to take sides with the theatre in such matters, still it must be admitted that when a print is damaged in a theatre, whatever may be the arguments advanced by the theatre, the fact remains that the film is damaged and by no reasoning can the fault be held to be that of the exchange. It therefore seems only right and reasonable that since the exchange cannot be possibly at fault for damage done at the theatre, the theatre automatically becomes the goat.

Anyway, now that the court decision has been made, it behooves the projectionist to be very careful, because in the very nature of things this decision will be used as a precedent in other cases.

CONCERNING A LOWER WAGE PROPOSAL

FROM a projectionist of a theatre some 300 miles from New York City, operated by a great theatre chain, comes a letter in which the following occurs:

"Today we received a contract setting forth what the operators of the theatre want for the coming year. When I had finished reading it I might easily have been knocked over by a vigorous man with the proverbial feather. I had been told that Lincoln and our armies freed the slaves, I now have doubts, at least so far as concerns the outfit operating this theatre.

"They must be insane, or imagine men to be in that condition to expect capable projectionists to accept $37.50 a week for a six-hour, seven-days-a-week work-week. Imagine one man in a projection room working as above for such a sum, if you can, besides which he is expected to repair the equipment and work special shows without added compensation. And this is no village, either! Well, Brother Richardson, before I will come down to that I will retire to the tall timber and live in the primitive way and like it. At least I will have my freedom."

It is not my purpose to defend projectionists, organized or unorganized, in unreasonable wage demands during these times. It is to be expected that projectionists' unions will make reasonable concessions. At least in very many cases this has been done. It is right that individual, unorganized projectionists also make reasonable concessions, but in one-man shows (and the theatre this man is in must seat well up to 1,000) in good theatres running seven days a week, six hours a day, with extra work to do besides, $37.50 a week is wholly and entirely unreasonable. If persisted in the result will be a gradual tearing down of projection excellence, which we have labored so hard and so long to help build up, and eventually that will mean decreased box office receipts just as surely as the sun rises in the East.

The exhibitor in question is also a producer. It means that his productions will be at the mercy, in both sound and picture, of men willing to work for a compensation far below what even a bricklayer receives. The inevitable result will be that carelessness in projection will increase, because there will be nothing particularly attractive about the job of projection, and discharge won't mean much of anything. Either that, or men of such low calibre will be employed that they cannot and will not be able to handle projection efficiently, either as to sound and screen results or equipment maintenance.

Freely conceding the point that there are today men receiving wages in excess of what their ability justifies, the fact remains that such men are being gradually, if slowly, weeded out. Procedure such as that here complained of will serve only to weed out the high grade men, and in the end work enormous loss to the entire industry.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER

P. E. CHAPMAN of the P. E. Chapman Electrical Works of St. Louis, to whom I wrote recently, starts his letter of reply as follows:

"Your favor at hand. It was received with much pleasure for I have had the liveliest sort of regard for yourself since some 15 or 20 years ago, when the writer became much interested in the technical side of the motion picture industry. This interest caused me to read everything I could get my hands on, and your writings were the best I could find. ON BECOMING A PROJECTIONIST

JUST NOW I am receiving a great many letters from young men who want to get into the projectional field. Therefore, while I have treated this matter many times before, I think it deserves further attention. From a young man in Lynn, Mass., comes this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I am a senior in high school and deeply interested in becoming a motion picture projectionist. Mr. George Lahy, manager of the Paramount theatre in Boston, refers me to you as the best source of information concerning projection matters. If you would be good enough to answer the following questions I would be deeply grateful." And he asks the following:

What education must one have beyond high school to become a motion picture projectionist?

Where can a person receive this education?

At what age may one enter this profession?

Can one take an apprentice course in a projection room?

How may one secure a permit to enter a projection room before one becomes a projectionist?

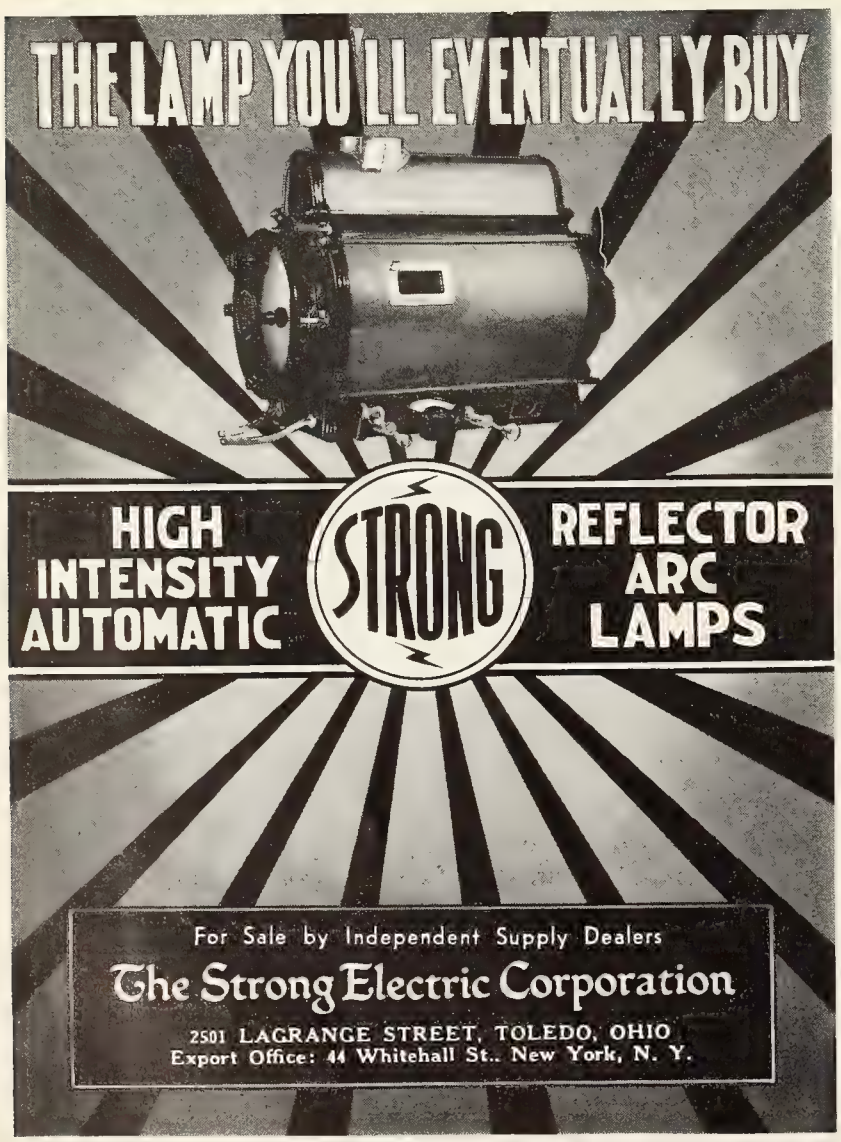
What books do you advise one to study in connection with motion picture projection?

"I have your 'Handbooks of Projection,' and Nadell's, 'Projecting Sound Pictures,' as well as various books pertaining to the industry as a whole," he concludes. "However, as I secured these books from a library I have not been able to study them fully. Will you please answer these questions, together with information that may be of help, as I am very much in earnest."

First and formost, my friend, in all the large cities the motion picture projectionists are organized in a union, and in such organized cities you cannot secure work as a projectionist without the consent of the union. Answering your questions in their order:

No school education beyond high school is necessary, though of course in just about all walks of life additional education is beneficial.

The only right way to secure education in projection is by the study of standard text books, reading current discussions of projection problems, and so far as possible to combine this study with practical work as an apprentice.



There are no schools in existence which can supply a real education in professional motion picture-sound projection, because of the fact that such education is necessarily a combination of theory and a considerable amount of actual practice in theatre projection work.

Some cities place an age limit, but that limit varies. I don't think any city bars a man who has reached the age of 18 years, though in that I may be in error. You can find out the Massachusetts age by addressing the department of state police in Boston.

An apprentice course may be taken, provided both the exhibitor and the union agree the latter if the theatre be located in organized territory.

In some cities, and I believe in some state, it is illegal for any one but the theatre manager and members of the projection staff to enter the projection room while projection is in progress. In any event you can secure this permission only through the theatre manager, qualified by the fact that the working projectionist might let you get in, though he could only do that at the risk of a calling down from the manager.

The books you say you have studied will serve you as suitable textbooks

I Put the Organ Back to Work

It was our decision that it would—if not in a few weeks, at least in the end. I found that to recondition the instrument would cost a pretty penny. This cost, however, would be little in comparison with the loss incurred if the organ were left to depreciate beyond redemption. So the plunge was taken.

After ten weeks of operating with a policy under which we have a single feature picture, an organ feature, shorts and a newsreel, I find that not only has the box office been stimulated but that the prestige of the theatre has been increased, giving us valuable advertising.

and the sales of milk and medcine."

The operator of a theatre was arrested for violating this ordinance. He employed counsel which defended him on the plea that the ordinance was discriminatory and at the same time ambiguous. After carefully considering the wording of the ordinance the higher court rendered the same void, and stated the following important law:

"The question raised by this appeal is whether the defendant (theatre owner) was lawfully convicted under the charge laid in the complaint and the ordinance upon which it is based. The ordinance prohibits one from crying and openly exposing wares, merchandise, fruit, herbs, meats, fish, goods or chattels, or the keeping open of any shop, store, on place in which said articles are sold, or in which the occupation of barber, shoemaker, blacksmith, silversmith, or other trade requiring the exercise of manual labor is carried on. Do the acts alleged against the defendant (theatre owner) in the complaint, namely, 'supervising and conducting as manager thereof' a public motion picture exhibition, come within the purview of this section of the ordinance? . . . Certainly supervising and conducting a motion picture exhibition cannot by any stretch of the imagination be considered as offering for sale the wares and merchandise specifically enumerated in the ordinance or to conducting a shop or store in which such articles are sold, or as following the occupation of a barber, shoemaker, blacksmith, silversmith, or the conducting of any trade requiring the exercise of manual labor. . . . The ordinance also provides that it 'shall not apply to any person who habitually observes the seventh day, commonly called Saturday, as the Sabbath, and who carries on his business within his premises in such

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

For it is a new year, in show business. A new year, not waiting one bit for January, but beginning now.

The equipment manufacturer and dealer who is waiting for "things to pick up" is not availing himself of the advantage of starting the new year on time. It may well be that the time he waits for will be too long after this new year has started. That theatres can operate during dull times without the provisions of common maintenance is absurd enough. That they can function through 1932-33 in the condition wrought by 1931-32, is unthinkable—if, indeed, the new year is to be a happier one.

As in anything else, the selling of theatre equipment and supplies is a merchandising problem. The market is there—more than ever. Those who make known that they are supplying the market will reap the profits that must logically come.

Late Court Decrees In Theatre Cases

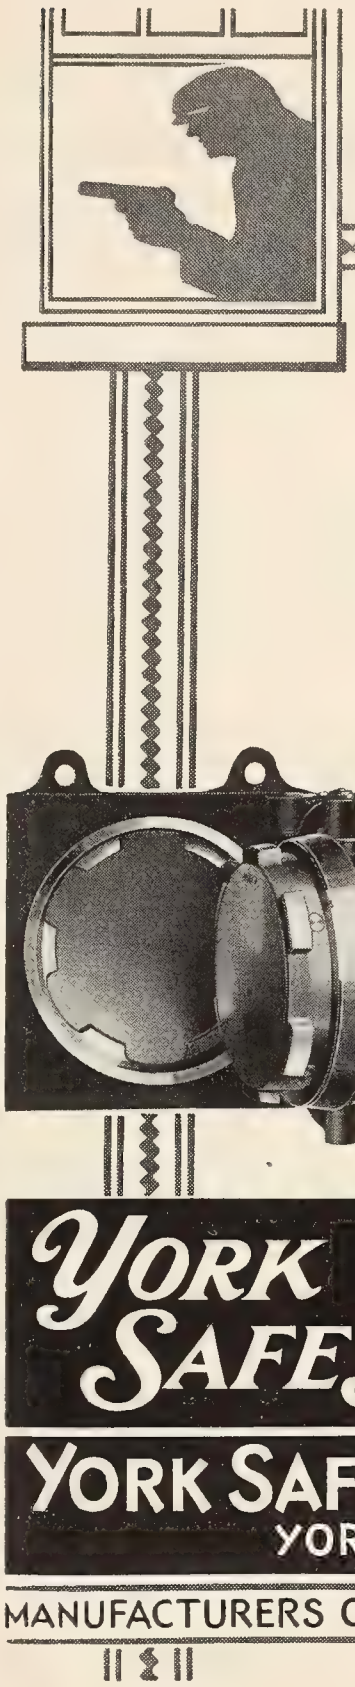
a manner as not to disturb the religious observance of Sunday as the Sabath.' Such a provision is violative of the Federal and State Constitutions."

When Individual May Restrain Nuisance

ORDINARILY the courts hold that an individual is not entitled to file suit and obtain an injunction against the owner of a place of amusement on the plea that operation of the amusement place is a legal nuisance. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Baird v. South Orange (160 Atl. 537).

The facts are that a certain individual filed suit and asked the court to grant an injunction against operation of a place of amusement on Sunday. It was alleged that the amusement place was operated in such a manner as to annoy and disturb the rest of complainant and his family and to interrupt and destroy their peace, quiet and enjoyment on Sundays or any other days. Although the lower court held the individual entitled to an injunction, the higher court reversed the verdict, and said:

"Upon the question of enjoining a nuisance at the suit of an individual, the rule is that it will not be enjoined, unless the individual suffers some private, direct, and material damage beyond the public at large, as well as damage otherwise irreparable. . . . We find nothing in the proofs that brings the present case within this rule."



Placard Ordinance Valid

A CITY in the exercise of its power may enact reasonable ordinances and rules for the welfare and protection of the entire community and thereby restrict to a certain extent the liberty and freedom of the individual. The safety of the people at large who travel upon the streets and their protection from crowds may be used as a basis for enaction by a municipality of a valid ordinance. For example, in Commonwealth v. Haffer (180 N. E. 615), it was shown that a city ordinance provides:

"No person shall, while on foot in any street, carry and display any showcard, placard, or sign, except in accordance with a permit from the commissioner of public works."

Certain union members were convicted for violating the ordinance by acts of carrying strike signs in front of a business building. The higher court was appealed to for the purpose of having the ordinance declared void. However, the court held the ordinance valid, saying:

"We are of the opinion that the ordinance does not violate or impair any rights of the public guaranteed by either Federal or State Constitution. It does not interfere unduly with the rights or liberty of

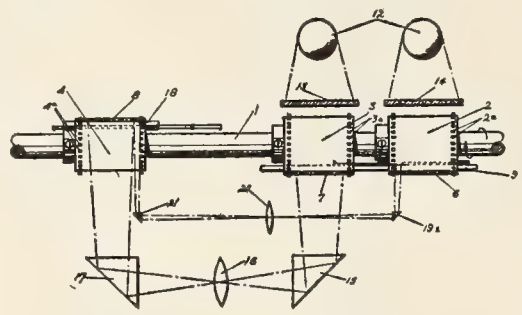
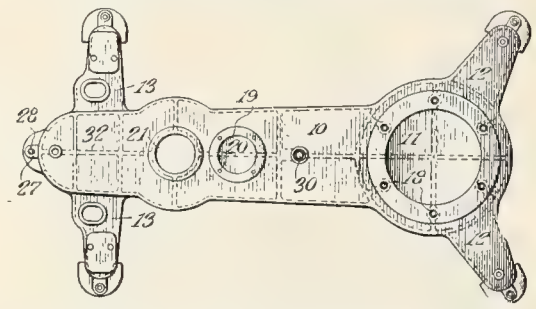
Y., assignor, by mesne assignments, to General Talking Pictures Corporation, a Corporation of Delaware. Original No. 1,695,415, dated Dec. 18, 1928, Serial No. 713,887, filed May 17, 1924. Application for reissue filed Dec. 16, 1930. Serial No. 502,843. 11 Claims. (Cl. 95—75.)



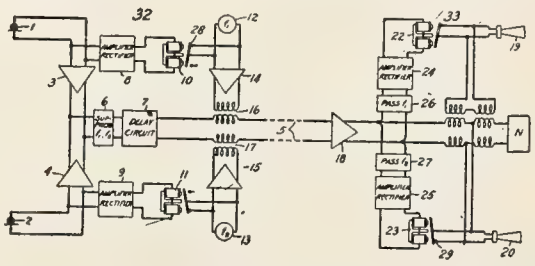
1. The method of preventing the production of ground noises from positive photographic films having sound records separated by unexposed portions, which comprises subjecting the positive film to light exposure at the unexposed portions corresponding to the silent portions of the negative to blacken those portins of the film when developed.

1,812,213. LOUD SPEAKER. John P. Minton, White Plains, N. Y., assignor, by mesne assignments, to United Reproducers Corporation, Rochester, N. Y., a Corporation of New Jersey. Filed Mar. 30, 1927. Serial No. 179,433. 15 Claims. (Cl. 179—115.)



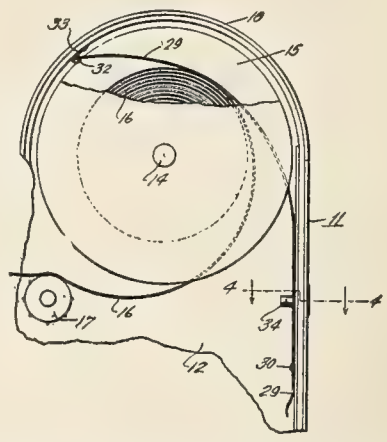
1. A sound reproducer for voice and music comprising a housing having an opening in one face thereof, a stiff vibratile diaphragm mounted in said housing and having one side exposed directly to unconfined air through said opening and having the other side exposed only to air within said housing, said housing having an opening of substantial area in back of said diaphragm and said opening being covered with a layer of sound-absorbing material and means for supporting and driving said diaphragm, comprising an electromagnetic unit.

1,801,450. OPTICAL PRINTER. Filed Nov. 12, 1926. Serial No. 147,979. 9 Claims. (Cl. 88—24.)



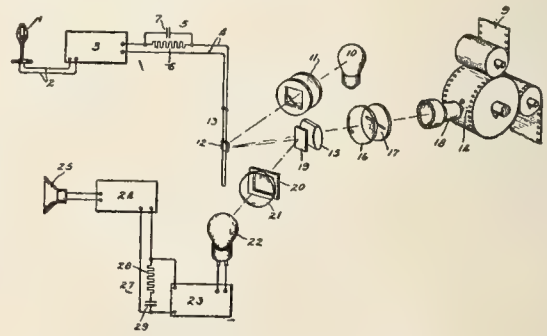
An optical printer comprising a single shaft, sprockets and shaft, one of which is adapted to move a strip of film; separate sprockets of negative film movable by the said sprockets, and optical means for simulating projecting images from different portions of negative strips to positive strip.

1,811,881. BASE FOR MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION MACHINES. Augusto Dina, Jersey City, N. J., assignor to International Projector Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed May 31, 1928. Serial No. 281,870. 5 Claims. (Cl. 248—15.)



1. A base for a motion picture projecting apparatus comprising an elongated body portion having an enlarged circular section for receiving the pedestal of the projection apparatus, a pair of supporting legs extending outwardly from said pedestal supporting section, a second pair of supporting legs located at the rear of said base and means located at an intermediate portion of said base for independently supporting the same.

1,811,839. SOUND TRANSMISSION. Harold D. Arnold, Summit, N. J., assignor to Bell Telephone Laboratories, Incorporated, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed June 14, 1929, Serial No. 370,794. 6 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.4.)



1. In a transmission system a plurality of variously located sound pick-up devices, a plurality of signaling means, a transmission line including means common to the devices for delaying currents of voice frequencies, circuits for the signaling means independent of the delaying means, a plurality of receivers variously located to correspond to the pick-up devices, and means responsive to the signaling means for selectively associating the receivers with the line.

1,812,068. FOOTAGE INDICATOR FOR MOTION-PICTURE CAMERAS. Alexander Ferdinand Victor, New York, N. Y. Filed May 17, 1929. Serial No. 363,767. 6 Claims. (Cl. 33—169.)

6. The combination with a film receiving roll, and a housing within which said roll is rotatably mounted, said housing being provided with a viewing aperture in one of its walls, of a guide structure extending upon opposite sides of said aperture, a scale plate slidable in said guide behind said aperture, and an elongated flat spring hingedly secured at one end to the housing and connected to said scale plate at the other end, an intermediate portion of said spring being bowed and adapted to contact with the film on the roll, whereby the unwinding of the film from the roll tends to straighten the spring and thereby changes the position of the scale with respect to the aperture.

1,801,123. PHOTOGRAPHIC SOUND-RECORDING APPARATUS. Laurens A. Taylor, Schenectady, N. Y., assignor to General Electric Company, a Corporation of New York. Filed Jan. 31, 1930. Serial No. 424,993. 4 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.3.)

1. Apparatus for recording sound on a moving light sensitive member and for monitoring said recording comprising means arranged to variably expose the light sensitive member in a narrow transverse area in accordance with the sound waves, said means being constructed to respond to a relatively greater degree to the higher frequencies of the sound waves than to the lower frequencies thereof, a sound producer, and operating means therefor responsive to said exposing means and constructed to produce a smaller response to the higher frequencies than to the lower frequencies.

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ James Frank, Jr. (Reproduction in Radio City Theatres) is a member of the engineering staff of the Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company, Inc. He has been assigned to the installation of the sound systems in the Radio Keith Orpheum theatres now nearing completion in the huge Rockefeller Center project in New York.

¶ Dick Liebert (Selling the Organist as a Feature) has for years performed at the console of a motion picture theatre organ...For ten successive years he was with the Loew circuit, and his experience therefore dates well back into the era before sound came to reorder the character of the motion picture theatre program. Liebert is now a featured organist at the Paramount theatre in Brooklyn.

¶ Leo T. Parker (Late Court Decrees in Theatre Cases) is a practicing attorney-at-law, with offices in Cincinnati. He is a conductor of legal departments in magazines, and a regular contributor of articles on legal subjects to Better Theatres, culling from the records throughout the nation significant litigations involving theatrical matters.

¶ A. N. Mason (Inspection for the New Season) is a projection and sound engineer. He has been close to the problems of the theatre projectionist through his tenure on circuit staffs.

main amplifiers of the projection system. The amplifier is mounted on the table of the film phonograph. A loudspeaker employing a magnetic unit on a flat baffle is used for monitoring purposes.

VI
Auxiliary Systems

Headphone System

PROVISION has been made for the installation of 26 outlets to be located under the arms of alternative seats in the thirty-third and thirty-fourth rows of the orchestra floor, into which Acousticon seatphone instruments may be plugged in order that those people who are hard of hearing may more clearly and intelligibly hear the sound motion picture and stage presentations. Each jack-box mounted under the arm of the chair includes two jacks for permitting the use of two instruments, one with each of the two adjoining seats. The amplifier for this equipment is located on the main amplifier racks of the sound reinforcing systems.

It is intended that individuals can obtain instruments at the box office upon request. Anyone who owns a private instrument designed for this particular use will be permitted to use it if he so desires.

Preview System

Two preview rooms located on the studio floor are to be equipped with sound projection systems. These systems are similar in general design to those furnished with the main sound projection systems, except that they have a smaller power output.

Radio and Monitoring System

The purpose of this equipment is to furnish to the private studios on the studio floor radio pickup of a predetermined number of radio stations and to permit the monitoring of the various sound systems in the theatre and for outside lines terminating within the theatre. This system will permit the following operations from each remote control station:

Starting and stopping of radio programs, choice of radio stations within range of the receiver, provision being made for 18 stations, starting and stopping of record programs, rejecting of records, control of tone of both radio and record programs, control of volume of individual speaker locations of both radio and record programs, selections of programs from sound picture equipment and sound reinforcing equipment in both theatres and outside lines.

All the operations will be controlled from telephone dials in accordance with simple code numbers.

The automatic cabinet phonograph will contain an automatic record-changing mechanism to play continuously 22 records of mixed tone and 12-inch commercial disc records. Provision will be included to play the records on one side, both sides, or repeat. The output of the electrical output will be amplified by the basic amplifier and reproduced by any set of loudspeakers. The cabinet and special plaques will be designed to conform in construction and material to the furniture selected.

The loudspeaker apparatus consists of three sets, the first of two electro-dynamic loudspeakers for flush mounting in the wall of the office, the other two of four electro-dynamic speakers each for flush mounting in the wall of each of the two studios. The basic amplifier and control equipment is a self-contained a.c.-operated unit consisting of a five-circuit radio receiver with provision for remote tuning of 18 predetermined radio stations.

VII
International Theatre System

The RCA Victor sound systems being installed in the "RKO Photopay Theatre" are similar to those to be installed in the International Husic Hall. The sound reinforcing system includes 20 velocity microphones, a duplicate channel 40-watt main amplifier, and four loudspeakers (60-inch baffles).

The rehearsal address system employs one of the velocity microphones supplied with the sound reinforcing system, which is placed in the twelfth row of the orchestra floor, and also uses the emergency channel of the main amplifier of the sound reinforcing system. This system includes five loudspeakers (37-inch baffles).

The stage manager's call system includes a "close talking" microphone announcing station, a 40-watt main amplifier, and 27 loudspeakers for distribution throughout the theatre.

The main sound projection system includes four Simplex soundhead attachments, a duplicate channel 80-watt main amplifier, a monitor loudspeaker, three loudspeakers with 10-foot baffles, and three having 60-inch baffles.

The deaf headphone system includes 52 Acousticon headphones and 26 jack boxes to be located in the thirty-third and thirty-fourth row of the orchestra floor. The amplifier unit is located on the main amplifier rack of the sound reinforcing system.

From this brief analysis it can be readily seen that the sound systems in the two theatres are very much alike, the one in the Cinema being smaller and not including a rear stage sound projection system, preview sound systems, or radio and monitoring.

These installations represent a modern application of sound reproducing equipment to theatre operation. They are particularly designed to allow for expansion and any future developments which may be introduced into theatre use. They are, without a doubt, the largest sound reproducing equipments ever manufactured for theatre installation, as, perhaps, is in keeping with the Radio City amusement project, the most comprehensive in the world.

the citizens. Its enactment for the maintenance of order or other justifiable purpose is a lawful exercise of the police power. . . . The manifest purpose of the ordinance as shown by its terms is the prevention of obstruction of traffic, the protection of the community and the common good. It neither in express terms nor by implication impairs unduly the rights of any person under the statute."

When Insurance Company Is Liable

AN INSURANCE company is bound to pay insurance to a theatre owner, if testimony proves that the insurance agents were informed by the theatre owner of the kind of insurance desired and negligently failed to issue a policy.

For illustration, in Commercial Standard Insurance Company v. De Hart (47 S. W. [2d] 898), it was shown that the Bryan Amusement Company owned and operated three picture shows. The company decided to suspend the operation of one of its shows and remodel the building in which it was operated. The work done was extensive, costing approximately $25,000 and continuing for a period of three months or more. The company employed the architect, the foreman, and the laborers who did the work. Carpenters, bricklayers, painters, electricians, and common laborers were employed during the course of the work. The company applied to an insurance company for a workmen's compensation policy to cover such work. It held at the time a policy issued by the insurance company covering the operation of its picture shows.

Soon afterward, and before another policy was issued, one of the employes was injured while engaged in remodeling the building. In holding the employe entitled to compensation, the court said:

"The work being done was inspected by appellant's (insurance company's) agents, its character determined, the kind of labor and the amount paid therefor listed, and the premiums for carrying such risks calculated. The amusement company paid such premiums. Under such circumstances, we think it wholly immaterial whether appellant's agents issued a new policy, or attached an endorsement."
